A family consisting of a father and three children were lately suffocated in Cork by gas escaping in a shop below and penetrating their apartments. The mother was nearly suffocated, also, but was, with some difficulty, restored to consciousness.

Recent official reports show that for the year 1877 the deposits in postal savings banks in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland amounted to £23,740,757, and in Trustees' savings banks, £44,238,686, the increase in the former since 1871 being £11,715,753, and in the latter, £5,419,023.

An ingenious robbery was lately committed in Paris. A man called at the residence of a master builder and told his wife that her husband had fallen from a scaffold, and that if she wished to see him alive she must make haste. She rushed off at once, and found him not only alive but well, but in the meantime the house had been robbed of plate and jewelry.

The Paris Figaro gives an account of a battle royal which occurred a short time since between the members of the ateliers of MM. Cabanel and Gérôme, respectively. The schools were closed by order; but inadvertently the boxes, colors, &c., were left inside M. Gérôme's studio, and its doors were smashed by the rioters in endeavoring to obtain them.

M. Gabriel Ibrahim, the last survivor of the Mamelukes Corps formed in Egypt by Napoleon, has just died at Marseilles, where 13 of that body were massacred by the Royalist mob 11 days after the battle of Waterloo. He was 84 years of age, and had long been a Roman Catholic. The death, in France, is also announced of M. Edouard Morsau, the miniature painter, and of M. Antoine Fomsbertaux, one of the proscripts of 1851 who took refuge in Jersey.

The unfortunate death of Major Whyte-Melville has been speedily followed by that of his mother, Lady Catherine Whyte-Melville. She had been in delicate health for some years, and the death of her son affected her very deeply. She was a daughter of Francis Godolphin, fifth Duke of Leeds, and married Mr. J. White-Melville, the Convener of Fifeshire, on the 1st of June, 1819. She was in her eighty-sixth year.

A subject has been found on which Mr. Gladstone acknowledges himself incompetent to write. In reply to an invitation from the Scottish Banking and Insurance Magazine for a contribution on the present financial distress in Great Britain, he says: "My information on the economical state of the country is not such as to warrant it. My political convictions as to the disturbing and exhausting effect of the policy now pursued might unduly color my arguments, nor am I able to solve the six question whether these are altogether, as before, passing difficulties, or whether in any or what degree they are connected with causes of permanent operation."

The last report of the French Ministry of Instruction on the state of elementary education, just published, shows that the total number of children between the years of 6 and 13 was 4,502,000, of whom 2,278,000 were boys, and 2,224,000 girls. The number of children attending public and private elementary schools was 3,878,000. The number of children not in receipt of school education from 6 to 13 years of age was 624,000. The last teachers number 42,249 men, and 21,776 women, the ecclesiastical 9,468 and 37,216 respectively. There are 31,657 lay and 19,890 religious schools. More out of the former consist of but one teacher and one class, while the latter have generally two or more teachers.

It having been proposed that Mr. Gladstone stand as a candidate for Parliament for Midlothian, Sir John Don-Wauchope, a Liberal and a strict Presbyterian, objects on the remarkable ground that the ex-Premier is not a good Protestant. All Mr. Gladstone's "policy and actions" have, says Sir John, "apparently been adverse to Protestantism," and his "Ritualistic and Romanizing proclivities" render him, of course, "specially unfitted to represent a Protestant, and more especially a Presbyterian, constituency." It was he who appointed Canon King to the chair of Pastoral Theology at Oxford; he gave Mr. Montague Bernard a seat on the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, "on the eve of judgment being pronounced in the Bennett case;" he gave Mr. Baring Gould a crown living, and that, but far from least, there is the fearful fact that this man, whom Liberals are so ready to honor, was, and still is, "so far as the honorable Baronet knows," a Trustee of Clewer Sisterhood, an establishment conducted on the most approved Romish model."

The London World says: "It is no secret that the mother of the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk's novena at Lourdes and pilgrimage to the tomb of the Apostles, was to pray for the safe arrival of the expected heir of all the Howards. Just before he left England, the Duke's gratitude for the removal of a threatened obstacle to his hopes was characteristically expressed by his putting up five silver hearts as a thankoffering in the Catholic chapel in Warwick-street, which is his parish church. These votive offerings, which are so common on the Continent, have hitherto not been used in England, but Mgr. Talbot has lately introduced them in his church, and they form a most successful feature in it. The readers of Greville's Diary will remember how that the gold heathen offered a silver horse-shoe at Rome in Thanksgiving for one of his victories on the turf. If any Protestant would like to follow his example, he will find every facility for gratifying his devotion without much expense in Warwick-street, where he can be provided with a handsome silver heart of Belgian manufacture for the small sum of seven-and-sixpence."

Cardinal Fabro Asquini, who died recently in Rome, had served the Holy See during the pontificates of four Popes. He was made one of the Chamberlains of Pope Leo XII., and was sent as attaché to the nunciature of Naples, in July, 1830. Pius VIII. employed him as legate to Ferrara, a position in which Gregory XVI., at his election, confirmed him with the title of pro-legate. He was afterward delegate at Ancona, and was, in 1837, selected as nuncio to the Court of Naples. Previous to his departure to his new post he was elevated to the Archbishopric of Tarsus. In 1839 he was recalled to fill the post of Secretary of the Congregation of Bishops and Regulars, which has control over all that concerns the episcopacy and the religious orders. He was named Cardinal in petto by Gregory, in 1844; he was created Cardinal, under the title of San Stefano, in Monte Cello, in April, 1845. After the death of Gregory and the accession of Pius IX. he was chiefly employed in the household of the Pontiff, his most important office during the pontificate of the late Pope being that of Secretary of the Pontifical Briefs, as which he presided over the issue of all important decrees emanating from the Vatican.

THE PRESIDENCY FOR A PRICE.

From the Wilmington (Del.) Every Evening, Jan. 10.

Special dispatches to two or three papers from Indianapolis say that a meeting of prominent Democrats from all parts of Indiana was held at that city this week, and it was determined that there is no longer any reason why an Eastern candidate shall not be nominated, the money question now being practically a dead one, and it was the unanimous opinion that Tilden was a far more available candidate than Hendricks. One allested reason for this conclusion is that Hendricks is poor and cannot furnish the means of war for "a vigorous national campaign." We need scarcely say that we do not desire to see a trimmer on financial questions like Mr. Hendricks nominated for the Presidency, but it would be ten thousand times better that such a man, or even the softest of soft-money lunatics, should be honestly nominated than that the soundest of men should be able to buy the nomination. It was proposed recently to raffle the Presidency, but this undisguised putting of a nomination for it up at auction is worse.

A GERMAN TRIBUTE TO BAYARD TAYLOR.

At the funeral of Bayard Taylor in Berlin, Berthold Auerbach was called upon by Dr. Thompson to pay a short tribute to the departed. The poet stepped forth from the circle of sorrowing relatives, says the correspondent of the London Times—a thick-set, sturdy, simple-looking man, of great earnestness of speech and modest demeanor, robust in mind, apparently, as well as in body, the very reverse of a sickly introspective singer. Thus, then, in a voice quivering with emotion, he began, addressing the mourners in his native German.

"Here, under flowers which have grown on German soil, rests the perishable inesting wherein for 53 years was endowed the richly adorned spirit which bore the name of Bayard Taylor. Coming races will name thee who never looked into thy kindly countenance, never grasped thy honest hand, never heard a word from thy mouth. And yet, no; the breath of the lips fadeth away, but thy words, thy words of song, will endure. In exhortation to thy surviving dear ones, from the impulse of my heart as thine oldest friend in the Old World, as thou wottest well, as one, and as representing German literature, I bid thee now a parting farewell. What thou hast become and art to remain in the empire of mind history will determine. To-day our hearts do quake with grief and sorrow, and yet they are exalted. Thou wert born in the fatherland of Benjamin Franklin, and; like him, to thine honor, raised thyself from a state of manual labor to be an apostle of the spirit of purity and freedom, and to be a representative of thy people among an alien nation. No, not in a land of strangers, for thou wert at home among us, thou hast died in the land of Goethe, to whose high spirit thou didst always with devotion turn; thou hast raised him up a monument before thine own people and wouldst erect him yet another in presence of all men; but that design has disappeared with thee. But thou thyself hast been and art still one of them whose coming he announced—a disciple of the universal literature, in the free and boundless air of which the everlasting element in man, scorning the limits of nationality, mounts on bold adventurous flights and ever on new poetic fancies sunward soars. In thy very latest work thou didst show how thou livedst in that religion which embraces in all creeds and in the name of no one separates one from another. Nature gifted thee with grace and strength, with a soul clear and full of chaste enjoyment, with melody and the tuneful voice to search and proclaim the workings of nature in the eternally exhausted region of being, as well as to sing the earthly and ever-new joys of married and filial love, of friendship, truth, and patriotism, and the ever-brighter ascending revelations of the history of man. Born in the New World, traveled in the Old, and, oh, so soon torn from the tree of life, thou hast taught thy country the history of the German people, so that they learn each other as brothers, and of this let us remain mindful. In tuneful words didst thou for thy people utter the jubilee acclaim of their anniversary. When it returns and the husks of our souls do lie like this one here, then will the lips of millions yet unborn pronounce the name of Bayard Taylor. May thy memory be blessed!"

THE FRANCO-TUNISIAN DIFFICULTY.

Paris Dispatch to the London Telegraph.

La France gives the following details of the Franco-Tunisian question, which appears to have been raised by the Government of Tunis expressly for the purpose of seeking a quarrel with France and bringing on a crisis to compel France to declare her definitive intentions on the subject of an annexation or a protectorate. The Bey of Tunis, it seems, has some contracts with a Frenchman for the founding of an extensive stud-farm in Tunis. The Bey and the Comte de Sancy have taken reciprocal engagements, with this difference, that the Bey has to carry out his part of the contract first, and the Comte de Sancy owes him nothing until he has completely fulfilled his engagements. The Bey did not keep his promises, and M. De Sancy, who had already a stud of 60 horses, refused to continue to fulfill his part, and asked the Bey to institute an inquiry, in order to prove that the Tunisian Government had not executed the conditions, and had thus rendered it impossible for him to continue his work. The Bey refused. M. De Sancy complained to the French Consul, who made an official protest to the Tunisian Government. The pretext of the quarrel was found, the Bey again refused, and the Consul-General complained at head-quarters—a proceeding which was as unjust as it was brutal. Waddington at once sent a note to the Tunisian Government instituting upon the inquiry being made. The Tunisian Government replied to M. Waddington's note by an absolute refusal, and declared that on Dec. 9 the officers would be sent to receive possession of M. De Sancy's lands and stables. The insolence of this reply is heightened by the fact that in all the treaties between the Bey and European governments it is expressly forbidden to the Tunisian authorities to enter on the property of any European without the authorization and presence of the Consul or the proprietor. The French Chargé d'Affaires, Mr. Roustan, warned the Bey that if he executed his threat a serious conflict with the French Government would ensue. On the evening of Dec. 8 M. Roustan sent his first dragoman to the Comte de Sancy, accompanied by his janizaries, and the following morning a party composed of Tunisian Generals and officers, with whom was the Consul-General of Austria, (this statement is queried by La France,) arrived at the house of the Comte de Sancy, and only withdrew on the formal declaration made by the Count and the representatives of France that they would be resisted by force. From these details, of which La France guarantees the correctness, it may be seen that the matter is serious.

A KLEPTOMANIAC ACQUITTED.

From the Rochester Democrat, Jan. 9.

Yesterday afternoon Mrs. Emma J. Parsons, of Penfield, who was arrested on the 31st of December for shop-lifting at the dry goods house of Burke, Fitz Simons, Hone & Co., came into the Police Court for trial. She was defended by William G. Raines, and D. L. Johnston acted as Prosecuting Attorney. Mrs. Parsons admitted the theft of the goods, (amounting in value to about $5.) Her counsel applied to the court, making the request that in case the defendant entered a simple plea of guilty a fine only be imposed, and asking for an assurance that no imprisonment would be administered. The court thought this would be unwarranted, and so the case had to be tried. Mr. Raines asked for and was granted a jury trial, and put in for his client a plea of temporary insanity, or kleptomania, and tried the case on that issue. He established that the defendant had borne a good character all her life, and showed by her brother that she was peculiarly characterized by cupidity. Then the counsel for the defense placed the defendant herself upon the witness-stand, asked her if she took the goods referred to, and why. She said she did take them, but she could not tell why, as it was the first time of her ever doing such a thing in her life, and she had money enough in her pocket at the time to buy and pay for the goods. With this defense Mr. Raines was obliged to submit the case to the jury, but left it in the competent hands. His most eloquent speech, asking each juror to imagine his own mother, with a long life of integrity behind her, and only one such inexplicable act to mar the character of the one respected and loved so dearly. Would they be willing to say (holding up their hands) that one act was a case of intended theft? Mr. Johnston followed with a clear, concise, matter-of-fact address, showing how wide open the door for the escape of all thieves and other criminals would be thrown were the precedent established of letting thieves escape punishment on the insanity dodge. Nearly everyone in the court-room was astonished when afterwards the foreman of the jury, Mr. Freeman, in response to the question as to their verdict, replied: "We acquit her of any intention to steal."

REPRESENTATION IN THE CONVENTION.

From the Elmira Advertiser.

A proposition is afloat to the effect that in the next Republican National Convention the delegation from the Southern States shall be made up on the basis of the Republican vote which they cast in 1876, while the Northern States will have full representation by Congressional districts. We do not quite see the justice of the proposition. It seems to be a plan by which the Northern Republicans shall punish the Southern Republicans for being driven away from the polls by the dominant classes in the old slaveholding States. The Republican Party should not assume in official form that these wrongs are never to be righted. There ought to be a public sentiment created in the next two years which will compel fair treatment and equal suffrage in the election of 1880. If these can be had, there are at least half a dozen Southern States which will cast their votes by decisive majorities for a Republican President. The Republican Party has become a unit upon this question, and we feel confident that in the ensuing national election it will demand and secure a free and fair vote in every State in the Union.

A BIG MAIL DISTRIBUTED.

From the Cleveland (Ohio) Leader, Jan. 8.

About 1 o'clock this morning the second section of the train due here at 7:05 P. M. arrived, bearing the mails from the East. As the heavy train, consisting of 15 coaches, covered with snow, icicles, and frost, ran into the Union Depot, it presented a strange sight. Awaiting its reception was a large corps of men under Superintendent Lovell, who quickly went to work. There were nine postal cars in the train, and of these three were left here to be "worked off" during the night. The mails left here for the surrounding country will leave by the afternoon trains, and the remainder, five tons, will be distributed to-day. On the entire train there was some 60 tons of matter, consisting of 1,200 packages of letters and 540 sacks of papers. All this matter was in the hands of nine men, under the superintendence of Chief Clerks D. M. Wells and E. G. Fenn, and mail was delivered at all the usual stations except two, Geneva and Willoughby. The train left Rochester at 1 P. M. yesterday, making the 12 hours on the road. This is undoubtedly the largest number of mail cars ever run on one train in this country.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

THE NEW-YORK ELEVATED ROAD.

WHAT THE GENERAL MANAGER HAS IN ITS DEFENSE.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

So much criticism has appeared in the last few days of the management of the New-York Elevated Railroad, that it is due to the Directors and to myself that the public should be informed of the facts, that it may judge how much of the criticism is deserved. One complaint is that the cars have not been warmed. The reason why this has been so is the unexpected failure to complete the contract of the contractors, supposed to be the best firm in this country, to put in heating apparatus. The contract was made in time and at a rate which promised the best and quickest work. We are now assured, however, that the cars will be all provided with good apparatus within the next 10 days, and as soon as provided it shall certainly be used. Another complaint is that during the late severe cold the trains were less frequent, moved slower, and were often interrupted. This was not our fault. The supply of Croton water was greatly lessened, owing, it is said, to the waste of it in private dwellings, and we could not get water sufficient for the use of our boilers. From 10 to 20 trains were for this cause accumulated near Whitehall-street three times during the late cold Friday. We believe that we shall have hereafter a full supply of water. Another complaint is the insufficient number of trains to carry all the passengers wishing to go, and the overcrowding of those which are run. One fact necessarily or naturally follows the other, that is, if there are not sufficient trains running, the overcrowding of those that are run follows, of course. The reason why there are not more trains is that there is no place at present to store the cars. The company is erecting a large storehouse at Ninety-eighth-street, and pushing the work as fast as it is possible to do so. The severe cold has interfered with its progress. The company is also building additional sidings at South Ferry, Chatham-square, Cooper Institute, Eighty-fourth-street, and from One Hundred and Twelfth to One Hundred and Twenty-fifth-street. It has now in the City, ready for service, 10 additional trains, with an engine and three cars each, which will be put on as soon as the proper terminal facilities are completed. There are, besides, 57 additional cars finished, ready for delivery, and 50 more cars and 35 engines under contract.

It may be asked why the company began to run trains before it was ready to give all the facilities that can be given. The answer is that the Directors were urged, and urged frequently, to begin and take as many passengers as they could. They had to choose between not running at all until everything was finished, or running as soon as they could carry passengers with safety and speed, though without those conveniences which the future will supply. Surely, the public will not blame them for the choice they made.

It has been said that the service of the company is imperfect and its employes inefficient and uncivil. As to the incivility, I can only say that every instance of it has been punished, so far as known, and that every instance hereafter that is brought to the attention of the Directors, or of myself, will be punished promptly. We shall be much obliged to any one who sees an uncivil act if he will give us information of it. As to the imperfection of the service, I have this to say, that our engineers, 134 in all, are picked men. Besides these, we have to employ conductors, firemen, brakemen, and station men to sell tickets and announce trains. I have had the appointment of these, and my orders from the Directors have been to select the best men I could, and to dismiss every one who proved to be delinquent or incompetent. I have done the best I could. There are about 1,000 persons employed in all. They have been engaged and put to work in the last few months. My office has been all the while besieged by a crowd of applicants. I was obliged to rely very much upon the recommendations that came to me, and it is not wonderful if I have made mistakes. Knowingly I will retain no man on the line who does not know his duty and perform it; nor will I knowingly put any one there who is unfit or neglectful or uncivil. The public may rest fully assured that I will weed out the force with unsparing hand, but I cannot do everything at once. Our experience shows that the East Side line has now to carry about 10,000 passengers an hour for the two busiest hours of morning and evening. When the line is all completed and equipped we shall be obliged, in order to carry this number of passengers, comfortably seated, to start a train every three-quarters of a minute. The number we can run on a train is 132. We can take 10,560 every hour, and can run from the Battery to Harlem River in 35 minutes. Nine months ago not a column had been raised between the Battery and Harlem River; since then a double bridge has been built of iron from point to point, over which 75,000 persons are now carried every day.

It will be interesting to you to know that, since the line was opened to the Grand Central Station, the 26th of October last, more than 1,000,000 passengers have been carried on the east and west lines, and that not a single accident has happened to any one of them from any fault of any employe of the company, or from any defect in the road. Three persons have been killed and one injured, all of whom have suffered only from their own fault.

RAPID TRANSIT AND COMMISSION FRAUDS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In your issue of the 5th inst., under "Shortcomings of Rapid Transit," is the following: "An important incidental effect of such reduction (of the fare to 5 cents during all hours of the day) would be to distribute the travel of the early forenoon and late afternoon over nearly twice the time it now occupies, and greatly relieve the present crowding." Will you permit me to dissent from this opinion for the following reasons:

First—It is not all who travel during commission hours that go it altogether because it is cheap. Fully three-fourths of these passengers cannot possibly leave their business before 5 P. M., and if a reduced fare would induce the remaining one-fourth to leave earlier, it would not abate one jot the discomforts suffered by both driven to see.

Second—Any increase of traffic from 4 to 5 P. M. will crowd the cars and give ground for complaint to those who now consider it cheap to pay 10 cents and so avoid the crush.

Third—It is not reasonable to suppose that many men will stand 15 or 20 minutes for a train every evening, which fact is beyond dispute, and then submit to be pushed and jammed about in order to get aboard a car in which there is barely room enough to stand, to say nothing of the danger of being pushed from the platform into the street below, or caught between the cars, for the sake of saving 5 cents a day, and do this three days in the week in the summer, and the frequent speech, asking each juror to imagine his own mother, with a long life of integrity behind her, and only one such inexplicable act to mar the character of the one respected and loved so dearly. Would they be willing to say (holding up their hands) that one act was a case of intended theft? A GRIEVANCE OF RETIRED OFFICERS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Some time back, in and during the reign of personal government, an order was issued by the War Department practically, to a certain and important extent, disfranchising officers of the Army, in that it prevented them from freely communicating with their Representatives in Congress on matters affecting their professional and personal interests, and controlled their movements when not on duty, but on leave of absence and relegated, for the time being, to their nominal status as citizens.

Some months since a letter was published in a weekly journal of this City under the nom de plume of a Washington Hotel, in which it was, in substance, stated that certain Senators were very much annoyed by retired officers of the Army seeking special legislation in their behalf—so much so that they were ready to tear their hair on the approach of a retired officer, forgetting that this annoyance was caused by a piece of apparently general, but really special, legislation, by which the Government saved the large sum of $6,000 or $7,000 per annum, and some 19 officers of the Army were reduced in their rank and pay, viz., by what is known as the Crawford act of 3d March, 1875. It is reported and believed, however, by some of those unfortunately interested in the matter that the above appellation or designation of the act is a misnomer, and that under the objections to the act and the various amendments to it it had become so limited in its effect, applying to 19 instead of, as originally intended, to 70 officers, that the mover and author of the act and his friends had resolved to abandon it as unworthy of them and of the Government, when the agent of one man, who had been in a distinguished diplomatic position abroad, and was, in consequence, as he supposed, in danger of having his name dropped from the rolls of the Army, appeared in Washington, saw the all-powerful, and through him had the bill reconstituted for the purpose of tacking thereon an amendment saving the diplomatist, and with a sole regard for his interests and a total disregard for the interests of all others adversely affected by the bill, the fact that th's party had rendered distinguished services in the Army, and was seriously injured for life, made the above resuscitation unnecessary, for he could easily have recovered, by recognition of his services and as an independent act, the same legislation secured by the passage of the apparently miscalled Crawford act.

The officers reduced in rank and pay by the above act, by what might be called the Congressional Examining and Retiring Board but for the fact that they made, neither by themselves nor any delegated authority, any examination, have naturally felt aggrieved by this legislation; and, although its wisdom has been officially adhered to by one branch of Congress, the new Army bill practically says there was no wisdom in it, and provides that the rank, &c., of these officers shall be regulated by properly-constituted and qualified boards, to which no valid objection can be made if it is fairly selected and settled that the policy of the Government in this matter is to construe this law as simply a pension and to divest it of the spirit in which it was enacted, and that it was in some sense a reward and compensation for services, and on the theory that an officer creditably exercising a large command and rendering important services when disabled was entitled to have that fact considered when his name was retired list name to be fixed.

The Burnside bill is an acknowledgment of the injustice of the so-called Crawford act, and it would be no more than a just, proper, and graceful thing for Congress to place and restore injuriously affected thereby in the same position they would be in had the Crawford act not been passed, so that they will be on an equal footing with other retired officers, and not be compelled to appear before the new boards with the stigma of disgrace stamped upon them by the Crawford act.

It is true that it is disagreeable and unpleasant to members of Congress to be annoyed by importunities of friends of officers at their hands, but is it not a part of their duty to be thus annoyed, if necessary, in order that justice may be done, than the doing of which it is conceived there can be no higher duty or more sacred trust? We need duty, and especially in war, the word duty is the watchword, guide, and pole star of the soldier, and his personal comfort or convenience is a secondary consideration, and it would be but fair and reciprocal that something of the same spirit should animate the acts and words of those having his welfare in charge.

THE AMERICAN FLAG AND AMERICAN RAILROADS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I was much interested by your reporter's account in your Sunday's issue of an interview with Mr. John Roach on the subject of the decline of the American mercantile marine. Mr. Roach points out that when the population of this country lived almost exclusively on the coast, before railroads had opened up the interior, and when its resources and the occupations of the people were exceedingly limited compared to what they are at the present time, the mercantile marine of America was scarcely second to any in the world. In short, he shows that ships were built of wood; that the wood and the people were close to the sea; that all the carrying was done by either ships or mule teams, and that one of the most profitable occupations at that time was ship-building. Mr. Roach then proceeds to show that when the magnificent resources of this country were opened up and developed by the railways, the capitalists, mechanics, and laborers found other and richer fields for their labors, and ship-building was in consequence wholly neglected. In fact, he shows the people are now better employed than in building ships. So far so good. Is it not a cause for gratulation that capital and labor is better employed than even in ship-building?

But, singularly, Mr. Roach deplores this fact, deplores the fact that the resources of this country are so rich and great that the people find more profitable employment within its limits than by expending capital and labor in roaming on the high seas, competing with the commerce of the earth. England is a great maritime nation from necessity, for her internal area is so small compared to her population that her sons must find occupation elsewhere or starve—capital and labor both driven to sea. Doubtless the breasts of Americans would swell with pride if the American flag was seen in every port of the world, but what American is going to take it there until he has nothing better to do? At present America cannot hope to compete with England on the sea, or with China in the manufacture of fans, because she has abundant industries that pay better. I apprehend that the great railroads across this country swept the Stars and Stripes from the seas, not the Alabama, the Legislature, or the tricks and devices of our commercial rivals. A READER.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Monday, Jan. 6, 1879.

NEW-JERSEY LEGISLATION.

*To the Editor of the New-York

THE HOUSEHOLD.

IN THE MARKETS.

There are few changes to be observed in the prices for groceries and market supplies. Nearly every kind of edible is abundant, and buyers have seldom had such good opportunities for bargains. The newest things in the markets are fresh tomatoes from Florida, which sell at 50 cents per quart. White onions are a little higher, selling at 8 cents per quart, but prices for red and yellow onions are unchanged. Spanish onions, (brought here from Lisbon,) their chief recommendation being that they are less odorous than the native product, sell at 5 cents per pound. Other vegetables are not dearer than they were last week. Poultry is a trifle cheaper. The prices current in Washington Market yesterday were as follows: Turkeys, per pound, 12 to 15 cents; chickens, 12 to 14 cents; fowls, 10 to 12 cents; ducks, 12 to 15 cents; geese, 10 to 12 cents. For game, the prices were as follows: Grouse, per pair, 90 cents; partridges, per pair, $1; quail, per dozen, $1; rabbits and hares, per pair, 30 cents; wild ducks, per pair, canvasback, $2 50; mallard, 75 cents, and common, 40 to 50 cents. Tame squabs were sold at $2 50 per dozen. Shad from Southern waters are cheaper, good ones, with roe, selling at 50 cents. Prices for other varieties of fish are the same as they have been for some time. Really choice butter is not plentiful. The best at present in the markets, with the exception of the products of a few dairy farms on Long Island, in New-Jersey, and in some portions of this State, which sell at extravagant prices, is the product of Illinois creameries. This butter sells at wholesale at 32 to 33 cents per pound, and is retailed at 35 to 38 cents, being obtainable at the lower price, however, only in certain tea stores, where it is sold at the small advance on its cost to attract customers for the principal articles dealt in. Prices for fair to good qualities of New-York dairy butter range from 25 to 30 cents per pound. It may be well to call attention to the fact that, in addition to the many petty frauds practised by hucksters on confiding patrons, as the giving of light weight, &c., is one which is well calculated to deceive the shrewdest people. The fraud referred to is perpetrated with great success by dealers in ham, and nowhere more successfully than at Washington Market. You are induced by the cry of the ham hucksters behind one of the sidewalk stands surrounding Washington Market-house, to pause and examine his wares, as he tells you that he is prepared to sell an excellent article at 8 to 10 cents per pound. Now, it is next to impossible to buy really good ham for less than 13 cents per pound. If you are a good judge, and acquainted with the most approved methods of trying ham, he satisfies you that the article is as good as you would buy elsewhere, and you are surprised at its cheapness, and take as many pounds as you may require without parley. The huckster, exercising a sleight of hand and fixing his eye upon you, fumbles with a lot of brown paper, lays the good piece of ham which you have tested to your satisfaction aside, and, picking up an inferior article, while you are watching him, wraps it up in the brown paper and hands it to you, and, better for him, if you have a basket, places it in that receptacle and bows you away as he turns to wait upon another victim. Sometimes you do not discover that you have been cheated until you have used a good portion of the ham, when you discover that the rest is sour and has a bad odor.

RECEIPTS FOR THE TABLE.

BROWN SOUP.—Take cold roast beef or fowl, cover it with cold water, let this simmer for two hours, then take out the meat and strain the liquid. Have chopped fine equal parts of celery-root and cabbage. Add to each quart of liquid one cupful, two tablespoonfuls of pearl barley, one tablespoonful of chopped parsley, one small carrot cut fine, two small potatoes sliced fine. Let this boil one-half hour. Then add one well-beaten egg and two tablespoonfuls of sweet milk thickened with browned flour. Make this in small dumplings and drop in. This should boil five minutes more. When ready to serve add one onion fried brown in butter and two tablespoonfuls of tomato catsup.—M. A. MC.

A GRILLED STEAK.—Ingredients: One half a pound of rump steak, lemon, pepper and salt, butter, and salad-oil. Time required, about 10 minutes. Take a small bunch of parsley, wash it, dry it well in a cloth, and put it on a board; chop the parsley up very fine with a knife; take a quarter of an ounce of butter, and mix it well with the chopped parsley; sprinkle over it pepper and salt, (according to taste,) and six drops of lemon-juice; make it all up into a small pat; take hold of your steak, which should be half an inch in thickness; pour about a tablespoonful of salad-oil upon a plate; dip both sides of the steak into the oil; take a gridiron and warm it well by the fire; place the steak on the gridiron, close to the fire, to cook quickly; if the meat is at all frozen it must be warmed gradually through before putting it quite near the fire, or it will be tough; turn the gridiron over, and change it occasionally; it will take from 10 to 12 minutes according to the brightness and heat of the fire; when the steak is sufficiently cooked, place it on a hot dish, and be careful not to stick the fork into the meat, for the gravy will run out; but into the fat; take the pat of green butter and put it on the steak, spreading it all over with a knife.—LESSONS IN COOKERY.

SAUSAGE.—Twelve pounds of meat, two and one-half tablespoonfuls salt, one and one-half tablespoonfuls black pepper, three tablespoonfuls sage, one tablespoonful white sugar, one-quarter teaspoonful cayenne pepper.—M.

SHEEP'S HEAD AND TROTTERS.—Get a head and the feet. Singe the skin and wool on them; let a blacksmith singe the wool off with hot iron, not to injure the skin; split the head; take the brains, rub them over head and feet; put them into warm water two or three hours; then with a small knife scrape them well and change the water; then scrape them; the head ought to be white if well done; cook with barley, carrot, parsley, and other herbs and vegetables.—A SCOTTISH READER.

CHICKEN SALAD.—Take equal bulks of cut chicken and celery, and make the following dressing for two chickens: Mash the yolks of eight hard-boiled eggs, and mix with them one and one-half tablespoonfuls of good, dry mustard; stir in the yolks of two or three raw eggs very slowly, stirring all the while, one quart-bottle of salad-oil, cayenne pepper, salt, and vinegar to taste, at the last. If the dressing "separates," that is, looks curdled, at any time during the process, add a little vinegar, and if that does not bring it together, a little raw white of egg. After the oil is in, and before the vinegar is added, the dressing should be stiff enough to hold a spoon upright. Salt the chicken and celery previous to mixing the dressing with them. Save a little of the dressing to spread on top, and garnish the edge of the dish with celery tops.—M.

APPLE TAPIOCA PUDDING.—Put one-half cupful of tapioca to boil; slice thin a large pudding-dish of apples, and sweeten very sweet, (brown sugar preferred;) then mix with the boiled tapioca and bake two or three hours in a moderate oven, stirring occasionally till the whole dishful becomes clear looking. Eat cold with cream.—M.

SCOTCH SHORT BREAD.—Four pounds flour; two pounds shortening; take half lard and half butter; one egg, and as much milk as would fill an egg-shell; beat well together, and add to the flour and butter, with one pound fine sugar; then with your hands work the whole until it is soft enough to roll out on your baking-board about half an inch thick; cut into any form you may wish; pinch the edge with your finger and thumb and bake.—A CONSTANT READER.

DEVONSHIRE BUTTER.—A correspondent writes: "We find it very difficult to obtain good, sweet butter now, even at 70 cents a pound, and I therefore send you directions for making excellent butter at all seasons, especially during the extreme heat of Summer and the cold of Winter, and as they never failed with me, I presume that some of the butter-makers in the neighborhood might like to avail themselves of my experience. The plan is adopted in Devonshire, England, and butter is made there frequently for breakfast, and merely with the hands, but this, of course, in private families only. It is not a kind of butter that would answer for putting up for Winter use. Devonshire cream is a great luxury, and would about think, find a ready sale in New-York. The receipt is as as follows: When the milk has been strained, pour it into tin pans and place them over pots of boiling water. When the top begins to form little circles remove the pans to the dairy and allow it to stand from 24 to 48 hours, according to circumstances; then take off the cream and when sufficient is collected, churn in a thermometer churn if possible; it usually comes very quickly and is then prepared like any other butter. The scalded milk is better than ordinary skimmed milk, and makes good pudding. The cream is delicious. If the milk boils it spoils.

PRIVATE BANKERS IN PENNSYLVANIA.

WILLIAMSPORT, Penn., Jan. 9, 1879.

To-day Horace E. Taylor was arraigned in the Criminal Court on the charge of embezzlement. He was a private banker, and became insolvent a year ago, leaving his creditors in the lurch to the extent of $86,000. This money had been placed in his bank on deposit, for which he paid a heavy interest. The prosecution was brought by the depositors, and the indictment, which contained 100 counts, was drawn under the act of 1862. Counsel for the Commonwealth proposed to prove by depositors that they had placed money in his possession. Defendant's counsel objected on the ground that he was not acting in a fiduciary capacity; that he was not a Trustee of the depositors, and that when the money passed over the counter, it became the property of the banker, and that he could not be convicted of embezzling his own money. The Commonwealth claimed, in reply, that this money was deposited with Taylor as a banker; that he was bound to use it in his legitimate business as a banker, and if he used it otherwise, misapplied or misappropriated it, he was guilty of the offence charged in the indictment. If he could not be tried under this charge, then there was no protection to the people against private bankers. Judge Mayer, presiding, ruled that under the act of Assembly the evidence of depositors could not be admitted, when the District Attorney entered a nol. pros., which was admitted by the court, and Taylor was discharged. The decision is regarded as a very important one, and will go far toward destroying the confidence of the people in private banking institutions.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

ITS ORGANIZATION IN PENNSYLVANIA—INTERESTING STATEMENT BY HON. RUSSELL ERRETT.

In a communication to the Pittsburg Commercial Hon. Russell Errett writes:

"The movement which resulted in the election of Mr. Chase as Governor of Ohio in 1855, was no 'Anti-Nebraska' movement, and not the formation of a 'Republican' Party. It was a fusion, for the moment, upon the basis of hostility to the Nebraska bill, of all the elements opposed to the pro-Slavery Democracy, and embraced Whigs, Americans, Free-Soilers, and anti-Nebraska Democrats. Its object was precisely that of the 'Republican' Party, as afterward developed; but it was a mere temporary fusion, and not an attempt to form a new party.

"There were various efforts all through the North, in 1855, made to bring about a general amalgamation of all the scattered elements of opposition to the Democracy; but none of them resulted in more than preliminary action. The county and State conventions held here in 1855 were a part of the attempts at distinctive 'Republican' organization; but the 'Republican' movement in the United States dates from the National Convention gathered here Feb. 22, 1856, which had its origin in this city, as detailed by Mr. White.

"How exceedingly hard it was to fuse into one mass all the elements of opposition under the 'Republican' banner, is shown by the events which took place in Pennsylvania. Mr. Blaxeley will probably be astonished when I tell him that we had no distinctive 'Republican' organization, known to the world as such, in this State until 1861. The old-line Whigs and Americans of Pennsylvania denounced to being known as 'Republicans.' They were anti-slavery men, and hostile to the Nebraska bill, but they refused, or many of them did, to be known as 'Republicans.' The 'Republican' State Committee of 1856 died with that year. In order, in that year, to bring all the elements of opposition together, a 'People's' State Convention was called, which nominated a State ticket, and this State ticket was supported by all shades of the opposition at the October election, although on the Presidency about one-half were for Fillmore and the other half for Fremont. The coalition under the 'People's' banner failed to carry the State, being beaten about 3,000, and it was this failure which, in November following, gave the State to Buchanan. The Republican State Convention of 1856 did not nominate either a State or an Electoral ticket.

"So, in 1857, the convention which 'nominated Wilmot for Governor, was called and known as the 'People's' Convention; so was the convention that in 1858 nominated John M. Read for Supreme Judge; that also which nominated Thomas E. Cochran for Auditor-General in 1855, and that, finally, which nominated Andrew G. Curtin for Governor in 1860. This latter convention sent a full delegation to the Republican National Convention at Chicago, which nominated Abraham Lincoln for President, but it sent this delegation under a special invitation, inserted in the call for that convention, as I shall now proceed to show.

"I was a member of the 'People's' State Committee of 1855, and I distinctly despised what seemed to me the sham of keeping up that name, but so anxious were we all to carry Pennsylvania, and so fearful were we that we might not be able to succeed under the 'Republican' name, that a committee, consisting of Mr. J. R. Flanigen, of Philadelphia, and myself, was sent over to New-York to meet the National Committee which was about to issue the call for the Chicago Convention. We laid our case before Mr. Doolittle, (afterward United States Senator from Wisconsin,) who was sent out from the committee-room to confer with us, and the result was that the call when issued invited 'the Republicans of the several States and the People's Party in Pennsylvania' to send delegates to the Chicago Convention to nominate a candidate for President. It was under this distinct, separate recognition that delegates were sent from Pennsylvania to the first Chicago Convention. In 1861, after the war broke out, this nonsensical proceeding was abandoned, and the party in this State was thenceforth known as 'Republican,' but not till then. And even then the weak-minded brethren prefixed 'Union' to 'Republican,' in order to show that they agreed to be called 'Republicans' simply to save the Union.

"I cite these facts to prove what I have said—that so far from forming a successful 'Republican' Party anywhere in 1855, it was with the utmost difficulty, in this State, that some people could be brought, even as late as 1861, to acknowledge and wear the Republican name."

THE IRISHMAN'S DAUGHTER AND HIS DONKEY.

The Waterford correspondent of the Irish Times, writes: "To-day, Constable Rigney arrested a woman named Mary Casey, on the charge of having killed her sister, Bridget Sullivan, at Millar's Marsh. During the evening Mr. E. N. Power, Coroner, held an inquest on the body, when it appeared from the evidence of Constable Rigney that the father of deceased reported the death of the girl, and asked for an inquest to be held, as he suspected foul play. He found the body lying on the floor. The father, mother, sisters, and brothers were all drunk, and at the time there were not less than 25 to 30 persons in the room, all more or less intoxicated. Patrick Dunphy deposed that he was with the deceased on St. Stephen's night. He heard her and her sister, the prisoner, disputing, when the latter struck her on the head with a stone, and afterwards with a brickbat. Some blood afterward flowed from her head. Thomas Sullivan, father of the deceased, examined, deposed that he didn't know anything about the death of his daughter, but he wished to urge on the jury that he had a little donkey which had perished, and he wanted to get something from the jury to buy another. Mr. Maher, (a juror)—Have you got a coffin for your own daughter, and you have not, but don't mind that; it is my little donkey perishing on me that is the trouble to me. Constable Rigney—The fact is that all the family got drunk, and my belief is that they neglected the donkey and that it perished from starvation. Coroner—It seems that the family are in greater trouble over the donkey than at the death of the girl. Such a state of things would be a disgrace to Afghanistan. Are you going to buy a donkey, Mr. Sullivan.—No wait a bit till I speak to the jury about the little donkey. Coroner—Silence, Sir; you are worse than a brute. Constable Rigney—You can see that even now he is half drunk. Dr. Connolly having given evidence as to the nature of the injuries on the head, the jury found that deceased came to her death by the wound on the head, but the evidence was not conclusive as to who inflicted the wound.

LOST EIGHT DAYS IN THE WOODS.

From the Petoskey (Mich.) Record.

A gentleman named C. A. Burnham, of Bear Lake, lately from Oakland County, this State, left his home at Bear Lake, Dec. 10, to go to Gaylord, Otsego County, for the double purpose of hunting and examining a piece of land he has lately come into possession of near that place. He took the train at Petoskey, on the morning of the 11th, leaving the train at Elmira, from whence a wagon-road runs east to Gaylord. He arrived at Gaylord in safety, and started out to look up the land after getting directions. Tramping all day the same time elapsed to reach his journey's end, the thought suddenly dawned upon him that he was lost! Then commenced a struggle to find his way out through the dense and almost impenetrable woods which extend over the upper and eastern part of the lower peninsula. He was without provisions, and totally unprepared for the experience which followed, with the exception of his gun and a supply of ammunition upon whose aid he was compelled to depend for subsistence. Game was fortunately abundant, and he was spared the pangs of starvation. For eight weary days he struggled on, exhausted and discouraged. At night, scraping together a few leaves, and seconing himself under the lee of a fallen tree, he stretched his limbs for repose, only to resume his weary tramp in the morning. One eventful night he spent clinging to the branches of a tree which he was obliged to climb to escape a pack of howling wolves. At last, on the eighth day, with feet frozen, having been entirely without protection for them during the last day, he came to Forest Home, in the Alpena, a distance of about 60 miles from where he commenced his terrible march. His wanderings, however, must have extended over a much greater stretch of territory, as he traveled almost incessantly during the hours of daylight, and frequently doubled on his track. After a short rest he started for home.

A GIRL APPARENTLY DIES, BUT REVIVES.

From the Belfast (Me.) Age, Jan. 9.

For the past three years a very estimable young lady named Estelle H. Herrick, living in this city, has been suffering from consumption. Of late Miss Herrick's hold on life has been very slender, and her friends have given up all hopes of her recovery. Last Saturday evening the young woman ceased breathing, her heart stopped its action, and she was apparently dead. Her relatives began the performance of the last sad offices for the dead. A messenger was sent to the telegraph office, and the news of Miss Herrick's demise dispatched to her friends in other towns. But in a little less than an hour she returned to life and consciousness, greatly to the astonishment of her weeping relatives. And, although her immediate death is certain, she was still living on Tuesday afternoon.

MEANNESS PUNISHED BY MALICE.

From the Keokuk (Iowa) Gate City, Jan. 9.

Some of the boys at Fort Madison cleared off a place on the ice in front of that city and flooded it for skating purposes. One of the ice-dealers at that place looked upon it, saw that it was smooth and clear, and proceeded to mark it off for an ice-field. By way of getting even with him for taking advantage of their labors the boys hauled a barrel of kerosene down there one night and flooded the rink with it. The ice-dealer never made the discovery, but went ahead with his harvest, and now has a crop of ice that is highly flavored with coal-oil.

MILITARY GOSSIP.

NATIONAL GUARD NOTES.

The annual meeting of the National Rifle Association will take place at the State Arsenal, Seventh-avenue and Thirty-fifth-street, next Tuesday at 8 P. M.

The Ninth Regiment Drum Corps will give a reception and exhibition drill on Monday evening, Feb. 24, at its armory. The Moodus Drum Corps, of Moodus, Conn., will take part in the exhibition.

Separate Troop D, Cavalry, "Ringgold Horse Guard," Brooklyn, had its annual ball at Gallatin Hall on Friday evening last. Company A, Fifteenth Battalion, under command of the veteran Capt. Peter Alagood, attended in a body.

John W. Irving, the unfortunate fireman who was killed at the fire in Vesey-street last week, was a member of the drum corps of the old Thirty-seventh Regiment in 1866, under Drum-Major George Hill, now of the Ninth Regiment.

The annual ball of the Old Guard has always been one of the military events of the season, and the Committee of Arrangements is endeavoring to secure as great a success at its coming reception at the Academy of Music on Jan. 23 as it has formerly achieved.

Battery K, Artillery, Major A. Hoelzle commanding, anticipates with much pleasure its twelfth annual ball, which is to take place at Teutonia Assembly Rooms, No. 152 Third-avenue, on Wednesday, the 22d inst. Many prominent military officers have promised to be present on that occasion.

Company C, Eighth Regiment, has elected the following civil officers: Capt. George T. Fielding, President; Sergt. W. H. Demarest, Financial Secretary; H. G. Hinton, Recording Secretary; Recruiting Committee, W. H. Carman, J. Gordon, J. Schultz, C. H. McClenachan, and H. Coombes.

Capt. Josiah S. Barton, of Company H, Forty-eighth Regiment, Oswego, who won the United States championship gold medal at Creedmoor during the last Autumn meeting of the National Rifle Association, has just received the trophy. The medal and Capt. Barton were illustrated in Harper's Weekly last week.

At a meeting of Company G, Ninth Regiment, on Tuesday evening last, Sergt. John Roden was promoted First Sergeant. Sergeant Roden is an old soldier, having served for 12 years in the British Army, during which he saw considerable field service in New-Zealand, and for which he received a medal from Queen Victoria.

Officers have been installed in Post Dahlgren, No. 113, Grand Army of the Republic, as follows: Commander, D. G. Friel; Vice-Commanders, Gerge Hopkins and J. Boelger; Quartermaster, Thomas Beerns; Adjutant, J. Murray; Surgeon, Dr. Hans Powell; Officers of the Day and Guard, P. Rooney and H. Lawson, respectively.

The meeting to organize a veteran corps in Gatling Battery, Brooklyn, which was announced to take place at the armory of the latter command last Monday evening, was indefinitely postponed on account of the stormy weather. A handsome sword, inlaid and gilt, has been presented to Capt. John A. Edwards, of this command.

The First Brigade Examining Board has been relieved, and a new one has been chosen, consisting of Col. Josiah Porter, Twenty-second Regiment; Lieut.-Col. Henry Gimpel, Fifth Regiment, and Major J. H. Jones, Twelfth Regiment. The board will meet at the armory of the Twenty-second Regiment on the second Monday of each month.

The Ninth Regiment will have its first hop for the season at its armory on Tuesday evening next. The election for Colonel will take place on the following Thursday evening. At the meeting and election of Company B, Capt. W. J. Kirkland commanding, Sergt. William F. Denyse was elected Secretary, and Stephen A. Cooper was re-elected Corporal.

A new post of the Grand Army of the Republic has been organized in the Twenty-first Ward of Brooklyn. It has been named after the late Chaplain J. H. Perry, who died at Fort Fulaski during the war of the rebellion. The new post meets at the residence of Post Commander Harry Hughes, of Post Manafield, No. 886 DeKalb-avenue, Brooklyn.

A regimental court-martial has been ordered to convene for the trial of delinquent non-commissioned officers and privates of the Thirteenth Regiment, at its armory, on Wednesday evening next. Major Horatio C. King will preside. Capt. F. A. Baldwin, of Company B, has been granted four months' leave of absence, and a furlough of three months has been granted to Capt. F. M. Pierce, of Company C. Both officers are suffering from ill-health.

Capt. H. W. Clarke, commanding Company I, Fifty-first Regiment, Syracuse, has consumed several columns of his local paper in condemning the system of rifle practice followed by the National Guard of this State. It is interesting to observe that the "figure of merit" of his company in last season's work is "0," and that of the entire regiment is only lower by a fraction than that of the State. Company D of that command having 23 and Company F having six marksmen, saved the regiment from a "whitewashing."

Civil officers for the ensuing year have been elected by the Board of Officers of the Thirty-second Regiment as follows: President, Col. John Rueger; Secretary, Lieut.-Col. Louis Bossert; Treasurer, Major Louis Finkelmeier; Armory Committee—Adjt. F. J. Karcher, Capt. Charles Vorgang, and Lieut. F. W. Parisette; Finance Committee—Lieut.-Col. Bossert, Capt. E. Hardrich, and Capt. R. Blucmeke. Company E, Capt. P. Schlig commanding, will celebrate its ninth anniversary at the regimental armory on Monday, the 20th inst.

The marksmen's badges will be presented to the winners on that occasion. Drill officers have been appointed as follows: Diamounted—Jan. 22, Feb. 19, March 19, and April 16. Mounted—Jan. 29, Feb. 12 and 26, March 12 and 26, April 9 and 23. Carbine practice—Feb. 5, March 5, and April 2. The closing drill will be held in Astoria, in dress uniform, on Wednesday, May 7, at 8 A. M.

The State Examining Board, organized by General Orders No. 8, series of 1875, has been dissolved, and a new board has been appointed to "examine into the physical ability, moral character, capacity, attainments, general fitness for the service, and efficiency of such commissioned officers as the Commander-in-Chief may direct." The new board will be organized as follows: Col. Rodney C. Ward, Twenty-third Regiment; Col. George D. Scott, Eighth Regiment, and Lieut.-Col. William G. Wilson, Twelfth Regiment. The board will be convened at the Fourteenth Regiment Armory, Brooklyn, on Tuesday, the 21st inst., at 8 P. M.

Company G, Seventh Regiment, held its annual meeting on Friday evening last, and elected civil officers for the coming year as follows: President, Capt. James C. Abrams; Secretary, Henry E. Jenkins; Treasurer, Sergt. George W. Harlan. Recruiting Committee—Corp. W. P. Atkinson, W. M. Harlan, and John Campbell. Finance Committee—Orderly Sergt. John McGreevey, Corp. C. W. Fisher, and George L. Rose. Armory Committee—Quartermaster Sergt. A. T. Timpson, J. W. Hall, and E. H. George. Court-martial—Lieut. E. G. Haight, Corp. O. G. Brown, and A. Burn, F. A. Fiston, and D. Coullarde, O. S. Quattlebaum, and Humphries. Finance Committee—Sergt. G. B. Kasten, Corp. F. A. Gunther, and John Hannan.

The Board of Officers of the Sixty-ninth Regiment met at its armory on Wednesday evening last, and elected the following civil officers for the ensuing year: President, Lieut.-Col. William De Lacy; Vice-President, Capt. Stephen P. Ryan; Treasurer, Major Edward Duffy; Secretary, First Lieut. John Regan. The Veteran Corps of this command, at its annual meeting, chose officers as follows: Michael O. Boyle, Colonel; Henry Wood, Lieutenant-Colonel; John Bowes, Major; John McCue, Adjutant; Eugene Kelly, Paymaster; John Bell, Commissary of Subsistence; J. J. McGean, Quartermaster; James Dwyer, Surgeon; Rev. Father Quinn, Chaplain. Col. John Coonan, Major F. K. Horgan, Michael O'Keefe, J. J. Foster, T. J. Donohue, Thomas McCauley, Henry Fitch, P. R. Dunn, Daniel McGowan, Anthony Crossen, and John Hanberry. A lecture for the benefit of the veterans is to be delivered by Mr. Dion Boucicault, at Steinway Hall, on Sunday evening, Feb. 2.

Civil officers have been elected by the Board of Officers of the Twenty-third Regiment, Brooklyn, as follows: President, Major Alfred C. Barnes; Vice-President, Col. R. C. Ward; Treasurer, Capt. Willis L. Ogden; Financial Secretary, Lieut. E. W. Burd; Recording Secretary, Capt. Edwin A. Lewis; Finance Committee—Lieut.-Col. John N. Partridge, Capt. Darius Ferry, and Lieut. Francis B. Howland. The Athenæum Amateur Dramatic Club of Brooklyn is to give an entertainment at the Academy of Music during the latter part of next month for the benefit of Company F of this command. Capt. Joseph G. Story, commanding Company A, has issued orders commending First Lieut. F. H. Howland, First Sergt. Charles E. Waters, Sergt. Warren B. Safford, and 12 privates of his company for having attended all drills and parades during the past year. This regiment is to have an out-door parade on Washington's Birthday next. It has just received a new stand of colors to air on that occasion. A regimental encampment "down East" next Summer is being discussed in this command.

The drum-corps of the Seventy-first Regiment has chosen civil officers for the ensuing year as follows: President, Drum-Major Nat. Jenks; Vice-President, E. D. Holton; Treasurer, George Purdy; Secretary, W. Donaldson; Finance Committee, Dennison, Bougard, and McCoy. A regimental pin has been presented to George Purdy, because he had a clear record for a year, while a handsome badge has been awarded to M. Holton as a mark of distinction for continuous service for 10 years. This drum-corps will take part in a play called "The Honeymoon," which is to be represented by the "Rivals" Dramatic Association, at the Lexington-Avenue Opera-house, on Wednesday evening, Jan. 22. At the annual meeting of Company C, the following civil officers were elected: President, John F. Murch; Vice-President, J. A. Hammond; Secretary, L. F. Fuess; Treasurer, Joseph Hammer. First Lieut. Robert A. McLaren has decided to withdraw his resignation, which he recently tendered.

Col. Emmons Clark has issued orders directing the Seventh Regiment to parade in full uniform on Saturday, Jan. 25, at 8 P. M, to receive the State marksmen's badges of 1878, which will be presented by Gen. Wingate, General Inspector of Rifle Practice. [An extract is published from the annual report of the latter, commending the efforts of Capt. J. L. Price, Company H; Capt. D. A. Pollard, Company C, and Capt. W. C. Casey, Company I, for their efforts to instruct their companies in the use of the rifle. The "figure of merit" of each of the three companies is higher than that of any other company in either the First or Second Divisions. The "figures of merit" run as follows: Companies H, 64.50; C, 56.03; I, 55.59; B, 40; G, 38.38; E, 35.48; F, 32.97; D, 32.92; A, 31.46; K, 28.01. The "figure" of the field and staff and non-commissioned staff officers was 56.32. The average of the entire regiment was 42.05. Private William H. Palmer has been elected Quartermaster Sergeant, and F. J. Hones Corporal of Company F, in this command.

At First Division Head-quarters notice has been received of the appointment by Col. Clark, commanding the Seventh Regiment, of Francis M. Weld as Assistant Surgeon of his command. The resignations have been received of Major Herman Oelrichs, Inspector of the First Brigade, and Second Lieut. Charles F. Thompson, Company I, Seventh Regiment. Anton Jenker has been appointed Veterinary Surgeon of Battery K, Artillery. Commissions have been received for First Lieut. Walter Scott, Ninth Regiment; Second Lieut. Alexander Schottky, Eleventh Regiment; First Lieut. Arthur B. Hoober, Twenty-second Regiment, and Capt. Patrick K. Hogan, Sixty-ninth Regiment. A formal application has been filed by William H. Jones, a colored man, for the organization of a colored separate company of infantry in the First Division. The officers recommended for the new company are: W. H. Jones, Captain; Robert Carrington, First Lieutenant, and J. S. Tupe, Second Lieutenant. They will be submitted to a thorough examination before commissions are granted to them.

The Fourteenth Regiment, Col. James McLeer commanding, is under orders to parade at its armory on Wednesday evening, the 15th inst. Admission will only be granted to spectators having tickets of invitation. The exercises on that occasion will be a competitive rifle-match by the regimental team of 1878, at targets reduced from 500 yards; a review of the regiment by Gen. James Jourdan, acting commander of the Second Division; dress parade and the presentation of marksmen's badges, and finally, dancing. Discharges have been granted to Hospital Steward John H. Fisher, Commissary Sergt. A. H. Weston, Sergts. James Keating, Company A; James R. Bulmer, Company D, and William F. Roberts, Company I. Privates Charles H. Judd and Henry Franks, of Company F, have been expelled for continued neglect of duty. William Miller and William McDermott have been promoted to the positions of Quartermaster-Sergeants and Junior Sergeant Standard-bearer, respectively. A corps of fifers has recently been added to the musicians of this command, by Drum-Major Jones. The corps of drummers and fifers is to have a new uniform at an early date.

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK AND HIS ANTS.

From the London World, Jan. 1.

One of the best rooms on the first-floor of High Elms is devoted to work, and at the present moment contains a menagerie of ants. Between 30 and 40 species are represented by separate nests, placed under glass, carefully shaded from the light, and surrounded by water to prevent the interesting insects from escaping and pervading the house. It is pleasant to see Sir John Lubbock, arrayed in his working suit of gray stuff, gently uncovering the nests, and replacing the screens quickly lest the animals should take alarm at the influx of light, and be thrown into disorganization by the thought that their nest is attacked. It is curious to observe that these little creatures have animals with them, which it may be presumed are useful in some way, as the ants forbear to attack them. They are mostly of the beetle race, and some, like the little Claviger, are quite blind, possibly from confirmed subterranean habits, and are only found in ants' nests, the proprietors of which take as much care of them as they do of their own young. Apparently ants have a considerable variety of domestic animals, among which the blind Platyarthrus is conspicuous, as well as the Beckia albinos, the latter of which was first fully described by Sir John Lubbock, who suggests that perhaps these two act the part of the Constantinople Pariah dog vulture, and making themselves useful as scavengers.

An hour's chat with the owner of this well-organized work-room has a tendency to dispel some early illusions of the unscientific mind concerning the industry of the ant. It is an industrious creature in the main, but there are ants and ants. The large red species found in Central Europe, and which displays extraordinary activity when light is admitted to its nest, is not a favorable specimen of the worker fighting aristocrat and slaveholder. She—the fighting ants are Amazons—makes predatory excursions, like the "commandoes" of the old Dutch boers, and carries off the pupæ or chrysalids, the so-called eggs of white young pheasants, are so fond, of another species, and brings them up as slaves. As Sir John Lubbock points out, the slave-holders present "a striking instance of the degrading tendency of slavery." They can neither wash nor feed themselves. They have lost the greater part of their instincts, their art or power of building; their domestic habits, for they take no care of their young; their habits, for they take no care of their young; their habits, for they take no care of their young; their

THE WORLD-OCEAN.

Petrus Martyr, the Historian of the World-Ocean: A Study, is the title of a forthcoming monograph by the accomplished Consul-General of Germany in this City. It will appear simultaneously in New-York, Madrid, London, and Paris, and represents a long and faithful examination of the earliest records of the discoverers of the West Indies and North and South America. Dr. Schumacher has had previous Consular experience in Venezuela, and adds to his researches among musty volumes no little knowledge of the places first visited by Europeans in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. A map of the West Indies of the year 1510 accompanies the volume. The chief merit of the book in the eyes of general readers is the side-light which it throws on the figure of Cristóbal Colon, the Genoese Captain, who strove to make himself into a Spaniard, in order to enjoy in peace the dignities that his wonderful deeds had earned. Singularly enough, the historian of the labors of Columbus and his successors was also an Italian, a learned and somewhat pedantic Latinist, born at Arona, on Lago Maggiore, in 1445, who was imported from Rome into Spain in order to revive the literary tone of the devastated Kingdom of Ferdinand and Isabella. Becoming connected with the rising University of Alcalá, he thought little of Columbus, and was not half so much impressed by the return of the discoverer with his budget of improbable news as he might have been by the Latin style of a letter or a discussion concerning the correct method of pronouncing the name of Cicero. But gradually circumstances forced him into the position of historian to the explorers, and by the time of his death he had long perceived that the New World was to save his name from oblivion. He, therefore, worked with might and main to the day of his death at the accomplishment of his great task, the sifting and ordering of the voluminous written materials composed by adventurous laymen and ecclesiastics on their travels in the New World. Toward the last he would not even return to his beloved Italy, the land of classical scholars, for fear that during his absence the cherished lifework should go amiss. Dr. Schumacher traces the gradual opening of Martyr's eyes to the importance of his position, in part through the urgency of his Italian correspondents, who were full of vivid curiosity concerning the new discoveries, in part through his own contact with the explorers and their friends.

Martyr de Angheria, soon after settling in Spain, gave a Spanish turn to his name and entered the Church. This was to naturalize himself and procure a steady revenue. His first mention of Columbus was very casual. Columbus, whom he calls after the Spanish version of the name, Colonus, had returned successful, been received with pomp at the Spanish court, and granted the honors only due to a Prince. Martyr writes to his Italian friend about an attempt on the life of King Ferdinand, and then goes on to say: "Soon after this there returned from the antipodes of the West a certain Cristóbal Colon, a Ligurian, who had obtained with difficulty from my King three ships for his journey to that region, because what he maintained appeared a myth. He came home with many valuable things, and particularly brought with him specimens of gold which those countries yield naturally and freely. But let us put to one side such remote affairs as these!" Then the exiled Latinist turns to some morsel of Italian politics, which seems to him of real importance.

Again, in September of 1493, Martyr writes to Count Tendilla, then Vice-King of Granada, that Colon, whom they saw when he came to persuade Isabella in the camp before Granada, had found six islands about 3,000 miles from Cadiz, of which one was said to be larger than Spain; that he brought thence gold, cotton, dyewoods, and spices, and also strange human beings; that the natives there went naked, and neither eat meat nor used iron, but knew the marital relation, as well as a kind of monarchical government. One of the three ships was wrecked, and a colony of 38 men had been left on the last discovered large island. To his Italian friend he speaks more learnedly: "You know that heretofore only one-half of this globe, which the sun encircles in 24 hours, has been visited; only the portion reaching from the Tauric Chersonese to the Spanish harbor, Cadiz. Now, the Ligurian sailed westward; for 33 days he saw nothing but sky and water; then he reached unknown islands." But so little did Martyr think of all this that the second expeditionary squadron of Columbus was already lying ready before Cadiz while he wrote the words. It sailed the 25th of September. He was more energetic in collecting the first news of those 17 sail. When Antonio de Torres, with 12 ships, returned to Cadiz in March of 1494, Martyr saw the commander and other authoritative members of the expedition. Three weeks afterward he acquaints Cardinal Sforza with the state of affairs. The cannibal Caribs had been met with again. The first new island had been baptized Dominica and the second Galana; the third, Guadalupe, was originally called Carucuéria. The fourth was called Monteserrate, the fifth Santa Maria Redonda, the sixth San Martin, the seventh Santa Maria el Antigua; these were names of churches at home in which vows had been made. After a few small islands came Ayay; then San Juan, originally Buriquena, and at last the easterly end of that great land which was to equal Spain in size. The colony there left behind was utterly gone. Martyr recounts the bold deeds of various men, and describes the nine-ounce nugget of gold discovered by Maldonado. He sends grains of a cereal plant used for bread and a specimen of a valuable wood. As a good classicist he makes mention, incidentally, of Cloelia, who swam across the Tiber, and of Æneas, who came to savage Latium. Though he refused to believe the early fictions of Columbus concerning men with tails and men without hair, he accepts the story of an island inhabited exclusively by women, and punctually alludes to the classic stories of Amazons. During the following year he begins to get direct tidings from Columbus himself, and enumerates the reasons given by the latter to prove that the discovery was that of India, and that, while he had landed on the Ophir of Solomon, he had before him, to westward, the land of the Ganges. In June of 1496, Columbus returns to Spain. During the two years' stay in Europe, Martyr takes little notice of Columbus, and appears to have neglected to inform himself personally regarding the new lands.

As Italy was the centre from which the leading minds in the fifteenth century went out, so it was Italy that spurred Martyr on to undertake the first great compilation of Americana—the 10 books concerning the world-ocean. The reason there were 10 of them arose from a literary fashion of the age, taken from the example of Livy. Martyr and his friends divided any large work into decades. As the years go on, and new travels appear from Spanish, Portuguese, and Italian hands, materials increase too rapidly for the historian's ability to manage. Yet the world at large had become so much interested in America that Martyr's letters could not long remained unpublished. When Columbus returned to Spain in chains, the Italians thought that in the outraged and disgusted Vice-Regent of New-Spain they had found a person quite ready to give them authentic information of the Atlantic, of the pathways to the new islands, and the position of the lands whence gold and cotton had been certainly brought. But they were mistaken in Columbus. Meanwhile, in 1501, Martyr went to Egypt on a confidential mission relating to the Egyptian jealousy of Portugal. The latter country was in communication by sea with India, and threatened the overland trade through the Nile Valley. In Egypt our historian got some working acquaintance with the real India, and could make comparisons between what he learned there and what Columbus and his successors found in America. Yet his mission, instead of increasing his enthusiasm in American affairs, really drew him away from them. It was not till 1510, and on the demand of Count Tendilla for the whole of his writings on America, that the letter-writing courtier, ecclesiastic, and historian reviewed his labors and became convinced of the importance of the work. And Tendilla regarded it from a political side also. A publication in Latin would not only prove that Spain could produce books of universal value, but show the world that it was Spain, and not Portugal or Italy, to which the highest honors of discovery were due.

Further than this, Dr. Schumacher's monograph cannot be followed. He leads us to the composition of the 20 new books on the cosmic sea, relating at the same time the inner working of Spanish and Papal politics, as they bore on the great work. Martyr advocates the treatment of the Indians, not as free human beings, but as slaves, as sinners who deserve all their hardships because of their terrible crimes, such as cannibalism and worse. He delighted in ornamental writing, and gave a poetical turn to the bestial conduct of the discoverers in regard to the native women. Dr. Schumacher accuses him of narrowness and injustice regarding affairs of national importance in Europe. His work was almost exclusively intellectual; he seldom descended to practical things. He is of the first importance among the authorities on Americana. Washington Irving said of him: "He is a fountain from which others draw, and from which, with a little precaution, they may draw securely; Martyr's works bear a stamp of candor, probity, and great information." Almost one-half of the little book is taken up with Dr. Schumacher's copious and careful notes. They show the right spirit of inquiry, and form, we trust, an earnest of further work in kindred directions.

THE INTERNATIONAL REVIEW.

—If anything were needed to further attest the greater hurry of minds at the present day it would be the gradual absorption of quarterlies into bi-monthlies, bi-monthlies into weeklies, and weeklies into daily newspapers, which goes on without rest. The large newspapers are at the bottom of it all, for they accustom readers to so large and varied a daily bill of fare that weeklies can hardly exist, except as adjuncts to the dailies, monthlies feel the strain of competition in their critical departments, and bi-monthlies and quarterlies fear to be left entirely behind in the race. The International Review follows the North American into the monthly market. We now have three monthlies devoted to serious topics—the North American, Appletons' Journal, and the International. Of these, the second is partly eclectic; and the third has already shown a tendency toward the meretricious allurements of the novel—as expounded by Wilkie Collins; it has always made room for one or more pieces of verse. Heretofore the International has been alone in courting articles from writers of note in Europe, but of late the North American has been infringing on that preserve also. Altogether, there seems to be a good deal of uncertainty among the publishers of serious reviews in this country as to the right limits of magazines like theirs, as well as the kind of intellectual pabulum our public demands.

The number which marks a change in the times of publishing the International has nothing very different from its ordinary make-up to celebrate that event. Mr. Edgar Fawcett has some verse with the ominous title, "Frustration," in which Virgin Science appears to him in a dream, but tells him nothing. He only sees the stars in the morning,

"And glimmering on the dumb, cold lips of dawn
Pale languors of inscrutable unconcern!"

The Hon. George W. Julian objects to Mr. Francis Parkman's gloomy view of the results in this country of universal suffrage, and in "Suffrage a Birthright" seeks to prove the beauty of our present system, laying especial force on its educatory value in new communities. F. H. Morse, lately Consul-General in London, has a word or so to say about "The American Export Trade." He strenuously advocates the exploiting of South and Central America as fields for our manufactures, just as THE TIMES has been urging for two years past. Under the head of "The Literary Movement in America," we get notices of new American books, put one after the other without any attempt or apparent desire to illustrate the heading, and George Barnett Smith does a like office for books recently published in England. There is also a review of Mr. Tyndall, "By a Mechanic," entitled "Conflict between Science and Materialism." The foreign contingent to the January International is divided between Alfred Talandier and E. de Pressensé. Deputies of France, and the celebrated Karl Blind. The last-named handles a congenial topic—that of Mazzini and his doings and sayings. He makes a very interesting article, and promises more reminiscences of the great Italian agitator in succeeding numbers. De Pressensé is an uncompromising Republican, and rejoices at the success of the Exposition, which forced MacMahon to the statement that it was thus the offspring and visible guarantee of the stability of the Republic. He also points out the fatalism of Hippolite Taine's Ancien Régime, and calls Renan an intellectual aristocrat, while Sainte Beuve does not escape from his democratic fervor. His article bears two titles in two different places in the magazine. It might bear well enough the longer heading—"Morality in French Literature"—but the title in the list of contents—"Morality in France"—is very misleading. Talandier, the other Deputy, writes in his own English on "The Political Future of France," and writes ably, whatever may be thought of some of his conclusions. He, too, is very happy over the unexampled

BANKRUPT N

CHARGES AGAINST J. N. STEARNS.

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT IN TROUBLE — A STRANGE AGREEMENT WHICH WAS SIGNED BY MR. STEARNS—WHAT JUDGE CHAUNCEY PERRY SAYS.

Mr. J. N. Stearns has been, for many years, Superintendent of the Greenpoint Presbyterian Sunday-school and a respected resident of that section of the City of Churches. On Dec. 28, last, Mr. Stearns left for Florida, where, it was said, he had been ordered to go for his health. Some days after his departure it began to be rumored about that he had severed his connection with the Sunday-school and church, or rather that he had been required to resign because of immoralities committed with one of the Sunday-school teachers, whom he had made his private secretary. The investigation, which resulted in Mr. Stearns's sudden departure from Brooklyn, was set on foot by Mr. W. W. Silkworth, librarian of the Sunday-school. The latter gentleman told Mr. Stearns that scandalous rumors were in circulation about him, and that an explanation should be given. Stearns and Silkworth met at the house of the latter, in India-street, on the 23th of November, at which it was finally agreed that each should appoint a friend to privately investigate the charges. Mr. Stearns named Donald Manson and Mr. Silkworth George P. Wilson, both members of the church. The first meeting of the committee was held at Mr. Manson's residence, on Dec. 9, when Mr. Silkworth presented formal charges against Stearns, accusing him of having been criminally intimate with one of the Sunday-school teachers at various times and places within the past six years. Dates were given, and it appeared that the offenses alleged were mostly committed on Saturday afternoons. Among other evidence, a batch of letters was submitted by Mr. Silkworth, which he claimed proved the criminal intimacy between the young woman and Stearns. The latter did not deny that the letters had passed between himself and the young woman, but claimed that the interpretation sought to be put upon them by Silkworth was forced. Another meeting of the committee was held at the same place, and by request of Stearns Mr. J. S. Ogilvie, Assistant Superintendent of the Sunday-school, was allowed to act with the two gentlemen, already selected, to conduct the investigation. The letters were again submitted and a majority of the committee decided that they contained conclusive proof of Stearns' guilt. Mr. Ogilvie then proposed that an endeavor be made to keep the matter quiet, but no understanding was reached at that meeting.

On Friday, Dec. 13, the committee met again at the house of Mr. Stearns, on Noble-street, and the following remarkable agreement was, it is alleged, offered to Mr. Stearns for his signature:

An agreement entered into this 8th day of December, 1878, between John N. Stearns, of Greenpoint, N. Y., of the first part, and George P. Wilson, D. A. Manson, and William W. Silkworth, all of Greenpoint, of the second part.

To wit: Mr. John N. Stearns having signified his intention and determination to sever all connections with the Greenpoint Presbyterian Church, we, the undersigned, in consideration of the same, do hereby agree to place in the hands of Mr. John S. Ogilvie all certain letters, papers, and documents now in our possession, to be held by the said John S. Ogilvie sacred.

The said documents relating to rumors and statements concerning his alleged criminal relations with Miss ——, we do solemnly promise that we will not make public any of the contents of said papers or documents, and to prevent the same from being made public by all the means in our power, provided this agreement is understood to be mutually binding.

It is further agreed that these documents, papers, and letters shall be destroyed at the expiration of one year, consent in writing of all of the parties, first and second part, being given; and it is further understood and agreed that the said John S. Ogilvie, custodian of these documents, shall not open the sealed package unless consent in writing be given by all the parties of the first and second part.

We do further agree to defend the moral character of Mr. John N. Stearns in the future to the best of our ability.

D. A. MANSON. WILLIAM W. SILKWORTH.
GEORGE P. WILSON. JOHN N. STEARNS.

Mr. Stearns advised with Judge Chauncey Perry, and promised to sign the agreement if the phrase "his criminal relations" were made to read "alleged criminal relations." The desired change was made, and all the parties signed the agreement as it is printed above. Its binding effect, however, appears to have been of very little value. On the day following the agreement Mr. Stearns was reported to be ill, and within a week he had a written opinion from Dr. Willard Parker, of New-York, advising him to go South. This opinion or certificate was laid before the Directors of the National Temperance Society, of which Mr. Stearns was Secretary. The Directors gave him three months' leave of absence, with salary. Since his departure the proceedings taken by the Greenpoint Presbyterian Church came to the ears of the Directors, and a special committee has been appointed to make an investigation. Mr. Stearns is about 50 years of age, but looks much older, and is married. About 20 years ago he was editor of Merry's Museum, a child's magazine that was at one time very popular. The young woman whose name is mentioned in connection with Stearns is about 25 years of age and rather a plain-looking young person.

Judge Chauncey Perry said last evening that he had known Mr. Stearns since the latter was an infant, and that he knew the charges made against him were untrue. Mr. Stearns, he said, was a man of business, and very fond of taking the lead in everything with which he was connected. "So much so," he continued, "that he has incurred jealousy in many directions." The lady with whom Mr. Stearns's name had been coupled was his private secretary, and when he went off on business for the society, he was accustomed to leave a power of attorney with her to enable her to transact his business expeditiously. The Judge said that the mysterious letters upon which the scandalous story was founded had been taken from Mr. Stearns' safe by "the boys," and had mysteriously found their way into the possession of the NobleStreet Presbyterian Church, where certain persons were seeking to make capital of them. He said that people of impure minds might find many suspicious sentences in those letters to the young lady. One of them, which he cited, read: "I shall be at home to you to-night; to the world to-morrow." This, the Judge explained, had been written in the usual impulsive style of Mr. Stearns, and simply meant that he had been absent for some time and desired her to recount the business done during his absence, so that he might be at liberty on the following day. Judge Perry said that the insinuations that Mr. Stearns had been taken sick after the agreement had been signed on Dec. 13 were unqualifiedly false, as Dr. Willard Parker had told Mr. Stearns long before that time that if he did not go South for a period of three to six months he might expect an attack of softening of the brain. He had accordingly made his arrangements to go South on Dec. 28, and he went at that time, taking his wife and family with him.

NEW-YORK'S ENORMOUS LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

The annual internal revenue report for the year 1878 was made public yesterday. During the year the importations at the port of New-York were: Of ale and beer, 13,234 packages in bulk and 22,935 in bottle; of brandies, 340,313 gallons in wood and 29,452 cases, making a total of 414,306 gallons; of champagne, 96,816 baskets and cases; of cordials, 12,390 cases; of gin, 473,907 gallons in wood and 4,883 cases, making a total of 515,888 gallons; of rum, 49,122 gallons in wood and 340 cases, making a total of 49,720 gallons; of whisky, 38,974 gallons in wood and 2,287 cases, making a total of 44,694 gallons, and of wines, 1,664,194 gallons in wood and 75,215 cases, making the enormous total of 1,851,429 gallons of imported wines, exclusive of champagne. The report of Joseph Nimmo, Jr., chief of bureau, of the value of imported wines, spirits, and malt liquors entered for consumption in the United States shows a falling off for the year 1878, as compared with that of 1877, the figures for 1878 being value, $6,288,241; duties, $5,174,322, as against $6,861,175 in value and $5,842,325 in duty during 1877. Boston exported during the year 1,070,943 gallons of rum, 1,078 gallons of whisky, and 8,791 gallons of alcohol. The arrivals of still wines at the port of New-York from Jan. 1 to Dec. 31, 1878, amounted to 43,501 casks and 79,534 cases, as against 64,562 casks and 76,603 cases in 1877. The importations of champagne show a slight increase, there being 109,223 cases in 1878, an increase of 3,556 cases over the import in 1877. The decrease since 1873 in the business in foreign wines in bulk is ascribable partly to the general depression following the panic, and to the development of new sources of supply in the vineyards of California, Ohio, and Missouri. The following figures afford a fair idea of the recent development in California wines: During the year the arrivals by the Pacific Mail Company's steamers were 882,365 gallons, and by clippers of Sutton & Co.'s line, 325,876 gallons. The receipts by railroad are not in excess of 25,000 gallons. This gives a total receipt of California wines by New-York during 1878 of 1,243,241 gallons.

A BRIDE TIRED OF HER HUSBAND.

John Berwig, aged 22, and Annie Bettinger, aged 17, were married in Newark six weeks ago. On Friday Berwig complained to Justice Otto that his wife had left him and gone to the house of her parents. When he went to remonstrate with her she told him that she was tired of him, and if she wanted a husband again she could get plenty of better men in New-York, where she was going to make her home in future. Upon this statement Berwig wanted to effect his wife's arrest. The Justice told him he could not issue a warrant, but that he [Berwig] could prevent his wife from removing her trunks from his house. Berwig went home to see that his wife did not get her clothes.

SUICIDE IN FIRST-AVENUE.

Herman Bloom, a cigar-maker, living at No. 523 First-avenue, blew his brains out yesterday morning because he had become despondent. Bloom manufactured cigars at his home, but, having been sick, had been unable to work. His mind had become weakened, and when, a few days ago, he recovered sufficiently to resume his business, he returned to it with increased industry. This course affected him unfavorably. On Friday he went out to report the number of cigars he had made to the Collector of Internal Revenue, remained away all night, and went home about 4 o'clock yesterday morning. To his wife, who was anxiously awaiting his return, and who was alarmed by his pale and haggard looks, he said that he felt like putting a bullet through his head. She went to her room, and in a few moments the report of a pistol was heard. He was found by his wife lying on the floor, with a hole in his forehead. Mrs. Bloom swooned, and when she recovered her husband was dead. He was 26 years of age. His widow has three children to provide for.

ARREST OF CAPT. THOMAS BLAIR.

HE IS HELD AT GOVERNOR'S ISLAND AS A MILITARY PRISONER.

Capt. Thomas Blair, the officer of the Fifteenth United States Infantry, who married the widow of Gen. Gordon Granger several months ago, was arrested at the Sturtevant House, on Thursday evening last, at the instance of the War Department, and was taken to Governor's Island on Friday, where he is held as a military prisoner to await the arrival of further orders from Washington. No one is allowed to see him but his wife, and Gen. Hancock said yesterday that Capt. Blair had also expressed a desire not to see anybody until the charges against him have been received from Washington. The papers had not arrived yesterday, and but little was known by Gen. Hancock as to the nature of the charges. It is supposed, however, that the forgery of official signatures to a paper purporting to be his discharge from the service will be the leading charge. Capt. Blair was on Gen. Granger's staff when the latter was Colonel and commander of the Fifteenth Regiment United States Infantry. After the General's death an affection sprang up between Capt. Blair and Mrs. Granger, which resulted in their marriage at Santa Fé, New-Mexico, several months ago. It is alleged by the American Consul at Glasgow that Capt. Blair's wife, to whom he is Nichols, has a wife and children in Scotland, and that Blair sent a paper to his wife, purporting to be the acceptance of his resignation as an officer in the United States Army, and that the paper was accompanied by a letter to his wife stating that he was about to seek his fortune in foreign climes, and that she need not trouble herself further about him. Mrs. Granger was a friend of the late Commodore Vanderbilt, who left $10,000 to her son, a cripple. During the last session of Congress Capt. Blair was very active in an endeavor to obtain the passage of a bill relieving him from the responsibility of accounting for $1,500 of commissary funds which he alleged had been stolen from him. Before the bill had been presented, the scandal was circulated, and the member of Congress who was to have introduced the bill decided to await the result of an investigation.

THE TRIAL OF JUSTICE PINCKNEY.

WITNESSES WHO HAVE NEVER SEEN HIM DRUNK—ONE BRANCH OF THE DEFENSE CLOSED.

The testimony elicited during the past three weeks from a large number of persons respecting the uniformly temperate habits and judicial deportment of Justice Walter S. Pinckney, while on the bench of the Seventh District Court, was repeated yesterday by as many as 24 persons. This branch of the defense is now closed, and it is promised that counsel will produce witnesses who will be able to contradict some of the specific allegations of the prosecution. Some points of interest were adduced during the cross-examination yesterday. Ex-Alderman Cooper, who testified that he had not seen Justice Pinckney under the influence of anything intoxicating while in court, admitted that he once saw him "feeling rather happy" down town, but that was shortly after his election as a Justice, and before he took his seat.

Assistant District Attorney Lyon testified that he was a witness in a case tried before Justice Pinckney, and that he was surprised to find a Civil District Court conducted with so much dignity. After examining other witnesses, counsel for the defense, to the surprise of everybody present, called Mr. Gambrell, an assistant of Mr. Miller, the prosecuting attorney. Mr. Gambrell testified that his position in the Corporation Counsel's office was more that of a student than an assistant, though he was acting in the latter capacity in this case in obedience to the orders of the Corporation Counsel. Mr. Reavey selected from a mass of documents a letter, the signature at the end of which Mr. Gambrell recognized as his. Mr. Gambrell requested Mr. Reavey to permit him to read the letter, but his request was refused. He, however, unhesitatingly gave it to Mr. Miller, who immediately handed it over to the witness for perusal. Mr. Miller then read it, and objected to its introduction in evidence, as immaterial and "not worthy of the lowest petty-fogger." Mr. Reavey replied: "We have asserted that this prosecution is a conspiracy. I now hold a paper that shows conclusively that such is the fact. It is written by Mr. Gambrell, and addressed to a witness for the prosecution, whom it directs to be partienlar."

"Mr Stenographer," said the Referee, "take this down." Mr. Reavey offers in evidence a letter from Mr. Gambrell to Moses Hellman. It is excluded on the ground that it ought to have been presented when Hellman was on the stand. It is now excluded as being impertinent." Mr. Gambrell explained to the reporters that previous to the examination of Hellman he privately questioned him. The office of the Corporation Counsel, and afterward wrote him the note, which instructed him to read over the examination carefully so as to know how to answer the questions, and to be sure to say he was an involuntary witness. Among the other witnesses examined yesterday was Mr. William H. Webb, President of the Council of Reform, and Michael Halloran, a blind lawyer, who practices in Justice Pinckney's court.

THE ERIE-DRINGER CASE.

BRINGING UP THE INTERMINABLE SUIT IN A NEW FORM — A NEW INDICTMENT LOOKED FOR.

The Passaic County (N. J.) Grand Jury, now sitting at Paterson, have the Erie-Dringer case before them in an entirely new form. Mr. Samuel Pope, one of the wealthiest citizens of Paterson, who holds a chattel mortgage on Dringer's stock of old iron to secure him for indorsing Dringer's note for $27,000 in 1876, has been before the Grand Jury to complain of a number of the highest officers of the Erie Railway under the Reconstruction, on a charge of conspiracy to divest him of his legal and equitable rights under the chattel mortgage. The charge is based on their testimony and that of others in the Erie-Dringer case, in the New-Jersey Court of Chancery, the result of which was the recent decision of the Court of Errors that Receiver Jewett's claims against Dringer must be settled first of all. It is understood that the Grand Jury voted on Friday to bring in a bill against the officials and certain lawyers complained of, but the Prosecutor informed them that the bill would not lie, as the evidence referred to was given at Newark, in Essex County, where most of the acts complained of had been committed. Among the witnesses already examined are Samuel Pope, S. Dringer, and Col. Bowman. Several others have been subpœnaed to be in attendance to-morrow, to give additional evidence of a conspiracy in Passaic County in the interest of the Erie Railway, against Dringer.

IMPRISONED AND FINED $500 FOR LIBEL.

A libel case of somewhat novel character was tried in the Hudson County Court of Quarter Sessions yesterday. The facts, as developed by the evidence, are as follows: In 1875 John McAndrew and Peter Welsh were partners as contractors in Hoboken. In the course of time they quarreled, and the partnership was dissolved. After the dissolution John McAndrew, Jr., a son of Welsh's former partner, took part in the quarrel on his father's account, and frequent and bitter disputes resulted. Finally, in March, 1877, Welsh printed and distributed a circular, in which he alleged that the elder McAndrew had deserted his wife, then a woman of advanced years, in Pennsylvania, and was living with a common prostitute; that when Mrs. McAndrew went to Hoboken to claim assistance from her husband and son, they refused to aid her; and that the latter had on one occasion dragged her out of bed and kicked her; and that finally she died in a shanty occupied by a colored man and his wife, who had given her such a home as they could for charity's sake. The defense made yesterday was that the statements were true, and affidavits to that effect were offered in evidence. Subsequently, however, Welsh withdrew his plea of not guilty and pleaded non vult. Judge Garretson, in passing sentence, characterized the libel as a most malicious one, and that the affidavits presented afforded no justification. He then sentenced Welsh to pay a fine of $500 and undergo an imprisonment of 60 days in the County Jail, and thence until the fine and costs were paid.

THE COMING BILLIARD TOURNAMENT.

The Brunswick & Balke billiard tournament will open on Monday the 20th inst., at Cooper Institute and continue two weeks. The contestants will be Dion, Daly, Garnier, Gallagher, Rudolphe, Sexton, Slosson, and Schaefer, who are now in perfect shape for the coming battle with the cues and ivories. Schaefer, in particular, is playing with astonishing skill and judgment, and if he can manage to maintain confidence, in which quality he was badly lacking in the last billiard tournament, will be a formidable candidate for first place. There are to be four liberal money prizes, and in addition to a large money stake the winner will receive a handsome trophy typical of the championship of the world. In sporting circles the betting on the match is very lively.

IS THE TRADE-MARK LAW VALID?

Judges Benedict and Blatchford, in the United States Circuit Court, have certified to the Supreme Court the following question for determination: "Can the act of Congress approved Aug. 14, 1876, entitled 'An act to punish the counterfeiting of trade-mark goods, and the sale or dealing in of counterfeit trade-mark goods,' be upheld wholly or in part as a law necessary and proper for carrying into execution any of the powers vested in Congress by the Constitution of the United States?" The two Judges named held different views on the subject. The question was forwarded to Washington on Thursday, and another case, in which the same question is raised, came on yesterday.

The argument on the motion for a re-trial of the Joyce-Malone election case in Jersey City, without a jury, was expected to be heard by Judge Knapp yesterday. The Judge declined to hear the argument, however, on the ground that, while he has a right to dispense with a jury under the special act governing such cases, such an interpretation might render the act unconstitutional. He would therefore assume that trial by jury was contemplated, and deny the motion. The date for the re-trial was not fixed.

A FEDERAL PRISON PROPOSED.

DRAWBACKS TO THE SYSTEM OF USING STATE JAILS.

A report has been submitted to United States Attorney Woodford by Assistant United States Attorney Fiero embodying the result of the latter's observations on the subject of the confinement, care, and expense of maintaining in prisons in this district persons convicted of offenses against the Federal laws. Mr. Fiero visited the Albany and Kings County Penitentiaries and Ludlow-Street Jail, examined the condition and treatment of the prisoners, the discipline maintained, the effectiveness of the prison régime, and the cost of maintaining such prisoners in establishments not owned by the Government, but where they are in effect "boarded" at Government expense, a fixed sum per diem being paid to the State or county for each prisoner. This inspection has occupied much of Mr. Fiero's time for the past year. He finds much to condemn in the management of the prisons, the fare being far inferior in quality as compared with its cost, the prison officials as a class being incompetent and ignorant, and the expense being excessively high. As an instance, he says, the Government paid for the support of prisoners in Kings County Penitentiary, in 1877, $10,454, about one-tenth of the cost of maintaining all the prisoners confined in that jail during the year. Yet the proportion of Federal prisoners confined there was only one-thirtieth of the whole number. The Government paid at the rate of $300 per year for the support of each prisoner, while the net cost was about $125.

Mr. Fiero calls attention to the anomalous and, as he believes, dangerous fact that while the person, for violating Federal laws, is arrested, indicted, tried, convicted, and sentenced under United States laws, the United States has virtually done with him thereafter, excepting so far as it is liable to the State authorities for payments for the prisoner's support and detention. He advocates the erection of a Federal prison, to be maintained at the expense of the Government, and to be controlled by officers responsible directly to the Government. Such a prison, he says, can be supported for $60,000 a year, and be made self-sustaining by the employment of convict labor. In this way, Mr. Fiero thinks, at least $150,000 a year can be saved to the Government.

AN ASSIGNEE ATTACHED FOR CONTEMPT.

A motion was made before Judge Choate, in the United States District Court, yesterday, by Mr. Charles Strauss, counsel for Philip Wolf & Co., to compel the Assignee of the estate of Charles Matty & Co., bankrupts, to make an accounting of the estate in his hands. The petition shows that Matty & Co. were adjudicated bankrupts on April 28, 1876, since which time nothing has been done; that at a meeting held before Register Dayton one Ernest F. Bernhardt was elected Assignee by the friends of the bankrupts, and that Bernhardt collected a large amount of money, for which he refuses to account. These facts being made to appear, Judge Choate ordered the peremptory filing of an account by the Assignee, and his attachment for contempt of court in not appearing to answer the petition, and directed that he be personally charged with the expenses of the proceeding. This is one of several similar motions made under the recent order of Judge Choate to compel Assignees to report their proceedings to the court.

At the time of his death Mr. Mallon owned considerable property in Minnesota and Brooklyn, and a livery stable at No. 25 Lexington-avenue in this City, which he superintended. He was never married, and was in some respects eccentric. The latter trait was especially marked in his purchases of clothing, for a suit of which he was never known to pay over $10. All his property is inherited by two sisters, who are now in Minnesota. Mr. Mallon's death was caused by inflammation of the bowels, and occurred at his late home, No. 327 East Twenty-third-street.

A DISGRACE TO HUMANITY.

THE PRISON SYSTEM OF GEORGIA.

RESULTS OF DEMOCRATIC RULE—WHITE LEAGUE CONTRACTORS—MEN AND WOMEN CHAINED TOGETHER—A TERRIBLE DEATH-RATE—HOW RICH CRIMINALS ARE PROVIDED FOR—STARTLING FACTS RECENTLY BROUGHT TO LIGHT—THE MEN WHO UPHOLD A CRUEL SYSTEM.

From Our Special Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Jan. 11, 1879.

For some months past it has been apparent to even the most casual observer that the much-lauded Democratic Government of Georgia falls far short of that excellence which, by its supporters, has been uniformly claimed for it. Closely following upon the exposure of the (to speak mildly) remarkable financial transactions of Messrs. Gordon and Colquitt, came the statement by Senator Hill that the Governor of the State had accepted a money consideration for the use of his executive authority. And now, verified by Col. R. A. Alston, a brave Confederate soldier and a life-long Democrat, comes a story in regard to the prison system of the Commonwealth which proves conclusively that the Democratic leaders of Georgia have been so much interested in securing their own financial welfare that they have utterly disregarded the commonest instincts of humanity. Col. Alston, the gentleman referred to, is a member of the Georgia Legislature and Chairman of the Committe on the Penitentiary. Acting in that capacity, he has had every opportunity to make himself fully acquainted with the condition of the convicts throughout his State, and the statement respecting their terrible situation which he finds himself forced to make is at once a disgrace to every Georgian and a reproach to American citizenship. It seems that, under a law passed some 10 years ago, and which, by reason of an act approved in February, 1876, is to be continued for 20 years from the 1st of April, 1879, the State of Georgia, being unable or unwilling to properly provide for its criminals, has entered into a contract with certain parties by which such criminals are leased out to companies who make bids for their labor. At present there are in the State upward of 1,100 of these criminals who have been let out in lots to some of the most distinguished leaders of the Democratic Party. Among these gentlemen may be mentioned ex-Gov. Joe Brown, Benjamin G. Lockett, Senator John B. Gordon, and John W. Murphy. For the services of the convicts, according to the contract, the State is to receive $25,000 per annum, out of which sum is to be paid the expense of what is known as the Principal Keeper, a chaplain, and a physician. This latter clause of the contract, however, has been necessarily inoperative, because the so-called camps of convicts are so widely separated that it would be an absolute impossibility for either chaplain or physician to visit them. Indeed, according to the report of Col. Alston, recently made to the Legislature, it would require one month of steady traveling for the Principal Keeper to spend two hours in each camp. For these reasons the Governor has not found it practicable to appoint either a physcian or a chaplain, and, for the same reason, the Principal Keeper has been unable to comply with the provision of the law which requires him to make a monthly inspection of all the convicts.

In short, it might as well be understood at the outset that the White League leaders who have thus contracted with the State for the labor of the convicts have done so with the single aim of making money. The laws regulating the keeping of such criminals are admirable ones, but they have been from the first utterly disregarded, and to-day the murderers, thieves, and other law-breakers of "the Empire State of the South" are controlled entirely by a set of avaricious men, who care not for the welfare of society, but for their personal gain. Indeed, according to the testimony of good Democrats, it can be stated that no effort is made to observe the law which requires the convicts to be safely guarded and kept. In the Dade coal mines, of which ex-Gov. "Joe" Brown is the principal Director, an effort has been made to keep the 300 criminals employed there under some kind of discipline; but in almost all the other "camps" where the men are employed upon railroads and in work for large contractors, no proper precautions are taken to prevent their escape. Indeed, the average of escapes from all the camps, except the Dade coal mines and excluding those killed in attempting to escape, has been from 20 to 45 per cent., so that there are now upward of 520 escaped convicts roaming at large through the State of Georgia. The law stipulates that a penalty of $200 shall be paid "by every lessee for each escape caused by his negligence unless the convict is recaptured and returned to work within 60 days." The section which makes this provision, however, has had no terror for the prominent Democrats who profit by the prison system, and although, as has been already stated, there are now at large over 500 escaped criminals, not one dollar has been received by the State as compensation for their loss. The principal keeper, upon whom devolves the duty of making prosecution for such escapes, holds that it would be impossible to do so, as no testimony can be procured to prove that the escapes were the result of negligence. When it is remembered that it costs the State of Georgia an average of $35 for every conviction, besides the cost of jail and jury fees paid by the county, it will be seen that this operation of the convict system under the model Democratic government, is not quite so beneficial to the people and society as it might be.

But regarded from another stand-point, the present Democratic prison system of Georgia is still more iniquitous. The rate of mortality which prevails among the convicts in many of the "camps" is so great that even Col. Alston and his fellow-committeemen have been obliged to admit that "the system which permits of such a startling death-roll is a reproach to our humanity." In the camp of W. D. Grant, a contractor in Jefferson County, 10 per cent. of the convicts have died within the last year; and again, in Grant's camp, in Lowndes County, the mortality has been 40 per cent. in four months, or 10 per cent. a month. In the camp controlled by Mr. A. S. Barnwell, another well-known Democrat, the average mortality for three years has been 16 per cent. a year. Excepting the Dade coal mines, in which the mortality amounts to but 4 per cent. a year, the average death-rate in all the camps is 10 per cent. a year. Just how startling these figures are will be the better appreciated when it is stated that official reports from the principal prisons in the United States show in them an average mortality of only 1 per cent. a year. Indeed, it is a matter of record that, considering the number of convicts, more persons have died in one year in the camps of Barnwell and Grant, in Georgia, than in the Maryland Penitentiary in 15 years. Even in Texas, where the lease system also prevails and the majority of the convicts are negroes, the death-rate is less than 3½ per cent. a year. There being no fines imposed for the loss of convicts by death, the Georgia contractors evidently do not feel themselves bound to take any precautions to preserve the lives of the unfortunate prisoners committed to their care. In fact, according to testimony which cannot be disputed, the prisoners are in many instances kept without even the nourishment which would suffice to sustain life in beasts of burden. They are made to work in swamps and wildernesses in which malaria abounds and where it is impossible for medical aid to reach the sick. In such districts they die by scores, and in one or two instances have been literally left to rot where they died uncared for by the heartless men who are their legal masters.

And, again, I must repeat that these crimes in the name of law are not caused by any lack of stringency in the statutes under which the convict system exists. They are due entirely to the fact that the Democratic contractors who lease the convicts have no regard for any law which interferes with their avarice. For instance, section 3 of the Lease act says that "there shall be such regulations, restrictions, and arrangements made by the Governor, to be enforced by law, as will associate only persons convicted of crimes of moral turpitude, which shall regard the condition of the sexes and age of convicts and their ability to labor." This portion of the statute is utterly disregarded. In many of the convict camps men and women are chained together and promiscuously occupy the same huts and sleeping-bunks. As a result it can be stated upon the authority of Col. Alston, and other Democrats now in Washington, that there are at present in the Georgia Penitentiary 25 bastard children, whose ages range from 3 months to 5 years, and that most of the female convicts are about to become mothers. The law prescribes in another section that lessees shall not use as guards any of the convicts or place them in positions of trust and control over other convicts. This section is also entirely disregarded, and in all the camps are to be found a number of so-called "trustees," who are selected from among the convicts and placed as guards over their fellow-criminals. Still another section of the law provides that the principal lessees shall not be allowed to sub-let convicts to minor contractors. This provision is likewise ignored, and in many cases criminals who have well-to-do relatives have been leased to them, and are now living at home in idleness and comfort. To illustrate: It will be remembered that Kate Southard, a well-connected white woman of North Georgia, in a fit of jealous rage killed a young lady with whom she found her husband dancing. She was sentenced to be hanged, but the Governor, influenced by mistaken public sentiment, commuted the sentence to imprisonment for life. Shortly afterward the woman was leased to a contractor named T. J. Smith, of Washington County; her husband was hired to guard her, and now they are living together, quite as happily as they did before the murder was committed. I am assured that various instances of a similar character could be cited. These and kindred revelations which are being brought out by the efforts of Col. Alston and other independent men, are doing much to open the eyes of the better class of Democrats to the iniquity of a party which permits the continuance of such a system. Senator John B. Gordon has already washed his hands of all connection with the lease system, and written to his partners desiring to be freed from the contract which he holds under it; and it is believed that other humane men will follow his example. Meanwhile, however, the principal lessees who are growing rich by the labor of the unfortunate convicts, are fighting tooth and nail to defeat the laudable efforts which are being made to break down the system. They have the leaders of the Democracy at their back, the White League sympathizes with them, is in their control, and, unfortunately for the cause of humanity, there is only too much reason to believe that they will be successful, and that the present prison system of Georgia will continue to disgrace the American people.

THURMAN'S CHANCES WANING.

HIS REFUSAL TO ATTEND THE JACKSON BANQUET CONSIDERED A SNUB — HIS POPULARITY GREATLY DIMINISHED — EWING AND PENDLETON NOW TALKED OF FOR THE PRESIDENCY.

CLEVELAND, Jan. 12.—During the past week THE TIMES' correspondent has had good opportunities to hear expressions of opinion from leading Democrats of the State. There is no doubt that there is much dissatisfaction with Thurman for snubbing the young men of Columbus by rejecting their invitation to the Jackson banquet. It is said that this is of the same stamp as his rejection of the Gubernatorial nomination, which was declined in a rude manner before it was offered. Not being particularly a man of the people, there is no doubt that he has lost much prestige by these actions. The banquet was given for the purpose of gathering together all the leading men of the party for consultation. The fact that the Ohio Democrats have been so notoriously wrong on the money question, and so peculiarly out of joint with their Eastern brethren, has weighed heavily upon the minds of the leaders here, and it was feared that unless some plan of harmonizing the factions was devised the party could take no leading place in the Presidential race. The banquet was arranged in Thurman's interest, and for him to turn the cold shoulder and refuse even to attend was thought to be peculiarly unkind to his friends and suicidal to his aspirations. However, the process of becoming harmonized with the hard-money faction of the party was worked out to a certain extent without Thurman, and other Knights stepped into the breach and carried off the honors. The Ohio Democracy are not as favorable to Thurman as they were two weeks ago, and talk of some other favorite son is being indulged in. So far as the present indications go, Gov. Bishop will be renominated for Governor. There has been a growing feeling in his behalf since Thurman has indulged in the snubbing business, and besides, while he is by no means attractive, great, or brilliant, he makes himself popular with the people. It is not improbable that he will aspire to the Presidency or Senatorship, and the members of the party who are determined to find a candidate for the chief magistracy in this State are now talking of Tom Ewing, Gentleman George Pendleton, &c., and insisting that Thurman has lost his golden opportunity. Unless he or his friends can find some means of turning the tide he will certainly be dropped.

THE OHIO RIVER ICE-GORGE.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 12.—The wharf was visited by thousands of people to-day in expectation that the ice in the river would break up. Tow-boats have broken the ice along the river front, and steamers of the mail line have taken refuge in the mouth of the Licking River. The ice is expected to move before morning. At Portsmouth the ice moved yesterday, smashing 5 coal barges, and sweeping away 15 others. At Maysville a breakup occurred at 3 o'clock this afternoon, sinking or tearing loose 15 barges, and damaging the wharf-boat somewhat. At 4 P. M. the ice gorged again below Maysville, and at last accounts was still fast. A rise of 20 feet is reported in the Kentucky River, which it is thought, will clear out the Ohio below the mouth of the former stream.

REV. H. H. HAYDEN'S TRIAL.

NEW-HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 12.—Attorney of State Platt said last evening that the trial of Rev. H. H. Hayden for the murder of Mary Stannard would begin on the 10th of February. Chief-Justice Park and Judge Loomis will preside at the trial. The State Attorney will be assisted by Judge Lynde Harrison.

A WIFE-MURDERER RESPITED.

HARRISBURG, Penn., Jan. 12.—The Secretary of the Commonwealth this afternoon informed the Sheriff of Philadelphia that a further respite had been granted in the case of Alexander B. Sayre, the wife-murderer, whose execution was fixed for Tuesday next.

A SELF-CONFESSED DEFAULTER.

GLOUCESTER, Mass., Jan. 12.—To escape an investigation of his accounts by the Mayor, Francis Bennett, the Treasurer of this City, has confessed to a defalcation of $8,600. Bennett has held office for many years, and has long been a leading citizen.

THE TABLES TURNED ON A PLAINTIFF.

ALLENTOWN, Penn., Jan. 12.—The libel suit of Henry Becht against the publishers of the Republikaner, was decided last evening in favor of the defendants and the prosecutor was ordered to pay the costs, in default of which he was sent to prison for three months.

CONGRESSIONAL PROBLEMS.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

A BELIEF THAT THE BURNSIDE BILL CANNOT BE PASSED—THE APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE DISCUSSING A PLAN TO BE INCORPORATED IN THE REGULAR ARMY BILL.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—The sub-committee of the House Appropriations Committee has nearly perfected the Army Appropriation bill, expects to have it ready to report to the full committee to-morrow, and it will probably be reported to the House on Tuesday. Great pressure has been brought to bear upon the sub-committee to induce it to add to the regular appropriation bill some legislation in relation to the reorganization of the Army. The committee is now considering what that legislation shall be, and will meet to-morrow morning to determine the question. All the members of the sub-committee were at first opposed to any corrective legislation on this bill, but their objections have been so modified by the belief that neither the Burnside bill nor any other of a similar character can pass that they have virtually agreed to report some plan for a reorganization of the staff. Their recommendations will not, however, include any reduction in the line of the Army. One member of the committee said to-night that the bill, when reported in the full committee, would in all probability be very similar to the bill of last year, as it came from the Appropriations Committee, with the exception of those clauses that affected the number of enlisted men and officers of the line. Mr. Hewitt, the Chairman of the sub-committee, said that there would probably be some legislation in the bill affecting the staff of the Army, but just what it would be he could not say until after the meeting to-morrow. He had at first been opposed to any legislation in the bill, but, becoming convinced that the Burnside bill could not be passed, he consented to add to this bill some features of Army reduction that he thought important and practicable. The sub-committee had, he said, prepared the regular Appropriation bill without any reference to reduction, and was now considering that question alone. He had been working upon this proposition for the past three days, and had matured a plan which would be submitted to the committee to-morrow. That plan is the one alluded to by the member of the committee first mentioned.

MONDAY'S BUSINESS IN THE HOUSE.

A PROBABILITY THAT REPRESENTATIVE SCHLEICHER'S FUNERAL WILL PREVENT THE REGULAR CALL OF THE STATES FOR BILLS — MR. WRIGHT'S EXTRAVAGANT HOMESTEAD PLAN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—The funeral services of the late Representative Schleicher, of Texas, which will take place in the hall of the House to-morrow, may interfere with the regular Monday business, which is always important to members, as upon that day the States are called for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to the standing committees. The funeral ceremonies are fixed for 3 o'clock, and it is not likely that any business will be transacted before that hour. As last Monday was included in the holiday adjournment, to-morrow will make two consecutive Mondays upon which the business for that day has been omitted. It is likely that an effort will be made to devote a portion of Tuesday's session to the call of States. Monday is the only day upon which motions may be made to suspend the rules, and should no business be transacted to-morrow, the opportunity to make this motion will not be again presented until one week from to-morrow.

The unfinished business for Monday is the motion of Mr. Wright, of Pennsylvania, to suspend the rules and pass his bill to appropriate from the Treasury $500 to each settler, in the shape of a loan to settlers upon the public lands, under the Homestead act. This loan is to be made to bona fide settlers, for the purpose of erecting buildings and purchasing seeds, implements of husbandry, and such necessary household articles and means of subsistence as may be necessary for the commencement of a permanent farming residence. The bill provides that $10,000,000 shall be the maximum sum appropriated for this purpose, and provision is made for the return of the money to the United States, with 3 per cent. interest. The money is to be disbursed by Receivers of the Land Office in sections where settlements are made, at the rate of $100 per month to each settler who may comply with the provisions of the bill and of the Homestead laws, to which Mr. Wright's bill is a supplement. Notwithstanding the novel and extravagant character of Mr. Wright's bill, there are many members who, from motives of personal and political expediency, will vote for it, and as many more who, from similar motives, will "dodge" the vote.

THE SUGAR CONTROVERSY.

A SHARP CONTEST EXPECTED—NONE OF THE PLANS SUGGESTED SATISFACTORY TO ALL CONCERNED—STATISTICS SHOWING THE EVASION OF DUTY BY ARTIFICIAL COLORING.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—The Committee on Ways and Means expect to close the discussion on the question of readjusting the tariff on sugars to-morrow, and to reach a conclusion as to the rate of duty to be imposed upon that commodity and the methods of assessing it. The delegations of importers and refiners from the principal cities now here are unable to agree upon any plan of readjustment, and no matter what the committee may report, the contest is sure to be carried to the floors of Congress, for the reason that no plan which may be reported will prove satisfactory to all the parties to the controversy. While there has been no formal expression of opinion upon the part of the committee, conversation with individual members indicates that the polariscope will be adopted as a means of determining saccharine strength, and that the rate of duty on all sugars, not above No. 10 Dutch standard, and testing by the polariscope 92° and over, will be fixed at two and one-fourth cents per pound and 25 per cent. additional. This proposition contemplates the abolition of grades below No. 13.

It is charged that artificial coloring, for the purpose of evading duty, is confined to the low-grade sugars, and in support of this charge the statistics of imports are referred to. It appears by the official statistics that, since the classification of 1875, there has been an enormous increase in the importation of sugars above No. 7 Dutch standard, and a corresponding decrease in the importation of grades between Nos. 13 and 16. In 1872 there was imported, of sugars not above No. 7, 246,000,000 pounds, upon which there was collected for duty $4,300,000. In 1877 there was imported of this grade 758,000,000 pounds, upon which the duty collected was $16,500,000, and in 1878, 72,000,000 pounds, yielding only $2,000,000 duty. The grade above No. 13 and not above No. 16 declined from 77,000,000 pounds in 1872 to 4,500,000 pounds in 1877, and 4,400,000 pounds in 1878, and the reduction in duty was from $2,000,000 to $50,000. The present rate of duty is as follows: On the grades named, sugars not above No. 7 Dutch standard, 1¾ cents per pound; above No. 7 and not above No. 10, 2 cents; above No. 10 and not above No. 13, 2¼ cents; above No. 13 and not above No. 16, 2¾ cents. On each grade there is, in addition to the specific duty named, an ad valorem duty of 25 per cent. It is claimed that if only one rate be established for all sugars below No. 13 Dutch standard, and testing by the polariscope up to 92°, the inducement for fraud will be removed, the collection of the duty would be simplified, and the revenue increased.

PACIFIC RAILROAD GOVERNMENT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—Representative Crittenden, of Missouri, on Monday, the 21st inst., will move to suspend the rules, and place upon its passage Senator Thurman's bill creating a Board of Commissioners to inquire into and report to the next Congress what legislation is necessary to compel the Pacific Railroads to comply with the provisions contained in the acts of 1862 and 1864. When Charles Francis Adams resigned his position as Government Director of the Union Pacific road, he gave as a reason for such action the statement that under the existing law Government Directors were simply aids to the roads and of no benefit to the people, in whose interest they were ostensibly created, and that they receive their pay from the roads and are constantly under obligations to their managers. The friends of the Thurman bill argue that this statement will do much toward inducing Congress to take prompt action upon it.

BLOCKED BY SNOW-DRIFTS.

THE EXPERIENCES OF A TRAIN-LOAD OF PASSENGERS AT RICHLAND, N. Y.—THE SNOW FROM SIX TO TWENTY-FIVE FEET DEEP.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., Jan. 10.—Richland is situated 40 miles north of Rome, on the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg Railroad, about 45 miles north of Syracuse, 32 south of Watertown, and 29 east of Oswego. There are here, besides the depot buildings, two small hotels, and four or five dwellings. This section of the country enjoys the reputation of being the most favorable for snow in the world, and this Winter its reputation has been maintained. Having endured with fortitude the first blockade of the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg Railroad from Dec. 21 to Jan. 2, on which day there seemed to be a passage-way through the colossal snow-drifts, I left Watertown for Syracuse on the first train. I took the precaution to fill my sachel with apples, cheese, and sandwiches, thinking possibly that the train might be stalled in the woods or fields remote from the habitation of man. The wind was howling and the snow driving at a furious rate as the train pulled out. The snow-plow had orders to work one station in advance of us, and by following closely we succeeded in reaching Richland. Here the passengers for Syracuse, Oswego, and the West changed cars. They had no sooner become seated than orders were received to abandon all trains. It was snowing and blowing furiously, and those who had means secured rooms at the hotels without delay. There were about 100 passengers, or three times as many as the hotels could accommodate. They were from all parts of the country, prominent among whom were Mr. Gifford and Mrs. Van Vleck and daughter, of New-York; Judge Dewey, of Watertown; Mr. Dunn, of Syracuse; Mr. and Mrs. Chadwick, of Three Rivers, Mich.; Mrs. Watson, of Oswego, together with the "Ten Nights in a Bar-room" Combination, composed of 13 people, who had been playing in Central New-York, and were then on their way from Oswego to Watertown. Very little in the way of amusement occurred Tuesday night. People generally settled down to their fate, hoping that the morning would bring relief. On Friday morning the storm was still raging, and during the night the snow had drifted badly, covering nearly all there was of romantic Richland. During the night, the rooms at the hotels having been all filled, many of the passengers slept on the seats and floors in the cars, among them being a party of five persons who were en route from Colton, St. Lawrence County, to Michigan, a little schoolmiss from Albion, a young lady from Utica, one from Poughkeepsie, and several old people. On Friday morning Mr. McAdams, a drummer from Utica, who was very anxious to get home, offered any one who would go with him to Rome $5 and expenses, which offer was accepted by a young man named Ryan. At 10 o'clock they started. They were reported at Albion at noon, four miles away. On Saturday morning we received a telegram from McAdams, still at Albion, saying that Ryan had fallen into a culvert and was disabled. This report was confirmed by Ryan himself, who walked back on Sunday. He reported that Mr. Adams was at the hotel at Albion, completely used up and willing to wait till Spring. The theatrical company struck the drifts in a day time. They were not prepared to tarry long, and had it not been for Judge Dewey and two or three others, who interested themselves in their behalf, they would have suffered. The company and their manager had had a misunderstanding, and it was discovered that the receipts of a few good houses would hardly be sufficient to settle their board bill. As a slight return for the favors shown them, they presented a play in the ladies' waiting-room on several evenings for the benefit of the passengers and the railroad boys.

The conductors, mail agents, express messengers, baggage men, brakemen, engineers, and firemen were on the alert at all hours of the day and night. On Sunday morning the storm broke, and the men began with shovels and picks to clear away the tracks to enable the locomotives to get back after coal and water, the process of coaling up having been accomplished heretofore by carrying baskets nearly half a mile, during which time snow was shoveled into the tanks and steam made from it. Sunday night came, and very little in the way of shoveling out had been done. Only a few shovelers could be obtained. The snow was piled "mountains high" in every direction, and it could only be removed by the greatest effort, so hard had it become packed. Monday morning found most of us still there. The situation was becoming monotonous. We knew not what to do. The telegraph operator kept us posted on all the important railroad orders, but had very little to tell us about the news in the outside world. He said the news wires did not run into his office. Consequently, we could not ascertain what was going on outside of Richland. On Tuesday and Wednesday many of the passengers became very impatient, and decided that they could not suffer much longer. The rations at the hotel were getting thin, and there was no possible way by which provisions could be brought in. Should the storm again burst forth and pile the banks still higher, filling the cuts that had already been opened, neither assistance nor provisions could be obtained, and the situation would be alarming. Prompted by these thoughts, many of the passengers started out for other quarters. Some went one way and some another, and many remained. I had the good fortune to be able to reach Watertown safely last evening, and if I ever pass Richland again I trust it may be in the night. The theatre company reached Watertown yesterday, and are billed to play here to-night. There are about 25 passengers still at Richland.

The snow along the line of the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg Railroad from Watertown to Rome is from 6 to 25 feet deep on the average. Yesterday a train was run from this city to Adams, 14 miles, and return, and during some of the way the snow was so high that lights were necessary in the cars. There are drifts, plenty of them, along the line where the snow is 25 feet deep on the track by actual measurement. Thousands of dollars have thus far been expended this Winter fighting the snow on this road. The company are doing all they can to keep the road open, but unless a thaw comes soon to lower the banks, it is difficult to predict what will follow.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., Jan. 12.—The main line of the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg Railroad between Rome and Ogdensburg is now open, and trains are running regularly.

GRAIN AND LIVE STOCK DEALINGS.

HUNTERDON'S PLUNDERERS.

HOW THE COUNTY HAS SUFFERED FROM A THIEVING BOARD OF DEMOCRATIC FREEHOLDERS — EXTRAORDINARY CHARGES FOR BRIDGES, SERVICES, AND "FIXTURES."

FLEMINGTON, N. J., Jan. 12.—Now that the neighboring County of Warren is bringing to justice its corrupt Board of Freeholders, and endeavoring to rectify and purify its official system, this County of Hunterdon is lamenting that it did not bring its board to account—a board equally as rascally and, in many respects, equally as degenerate in the matter of expenditures. Already, in previous letters to THE TIMES, the influence and control of the Pidcock Ring has been narrated, with the fight, sturdy and earnest, made by the Republicans at the recent election. It will perhaps be interesting and important just now to tell of the wholesale plundering by the Board of Freeholders in Hunterdon, which the dormant citizens have of late discovered—too late, unfortunately, to punish the offenders.

For three years the oppressive taxation and the increased expenses of the county have been complained of, but through the ingenuity of the Democratic officials in power the minds of the mass of the people were kept at rest, and no important disclosures leaked out. Last Summer, when the annual report of the board appeared in the columns of the local papers, the immense sum, nearly $300,000, which had been expended within the year, attracted attention and provoked comment, and the mysterious way in which the accounts were lumped together, without itemizing the several expenses, seemed very unbusiness-like. But the prominent politicians of the party hushed all fears by their assurances, and in the excitement of the Fall campaign the matter was forgotten. The indictments found against Mattison, Strader & Co. in Warren County revived an interest in the subject. Before this some of the more observant of the Republicans had been investigating the state of affairs in a quiet way, but they were greatly impeded by the keenness of the officers, who watched the movements of every stranger around the records. With some difficulty a persistent searcher has succeeded in getting into somewhat tangible shape the various items of expenditure by the board.

The great thing on which the board "doted" was bridges. From the amount spent for the purpose of rebuilding, repairing, and destroying bridges it would seem as though there must be some 20 large rivers flowing through the county instead of one small branch and a few miles of the Delaware. The item first set down for bridges is $53,820 48. No mention is made of what bridges were repaired, no specifications are offered as to the amount or quality of the work accomplished. It is true the line bridges between Readington and Raritan Townships are rated at $12,014 05, and bridge work in Delaware Township foots up $13,271 30. But this is the nearest to a particularization, and this is extremely vague. What the bridges needed, what was added to them, and who did the job, are mysteries. This $53,000 by no means completes the matter of bridges. The engineer and committee to remeasure the stone-work on the bridge at Rockafellow's Mills are set down for $20; do. As over $12,000 had already been set down for the bridges in that neighborhood, this extra seems very unaccountable. Then another large haul is made before this item is left. The board consider their services in watching over the bridges, that is, in standing around with their hands in their pockets and "bossing" the operation, worth $6,102 85. Thus $60,000 is extorted from the farmers and mechanics of this county of 25,000 inhabitants for bridges. Of course, no sensible man believes that more than half that amount really went to the spanning of the South Branch.

The board evidently felt that they had been extravagant, and therefore the clerk, J. C. Reeves, appends to the report the explanation that $25,000 was for "repairing bridges destroyed by last Fall's freshets, besides a corresponding increase of Freeholder's bills for services." The "corresponding increase for services" is very well said, and describes the uncertain position they occupied.

Leaving the bridges, a column of little sums exaggerated to tremendous proportions, could be transferred from the board's ambiguous rendering of accounts. A few of these will suffice, with what has already been adduced, to convince the unprejudiced of the corruption of Hunterdon's prominent Democrats. For instance, the carrying back and forth of the ballot-boxes for one day's election—November, 1877—seems to have been worth to the county $833 70. Considering that the boxes are kept in the clerk's office, and the two main polling-places are within a stone's throw of the place of deposit, $900 for taking them to the few outstanding townships is a very liberal charge.

The annual meeting of the board, held in the Court-house, in a room for which no charge is made, is valued at $120.

One more item will do for the present. Under the head of "Fixtures, &c.," $322 45 is set down; just what the fixtures were or where they were placed is not stated. It is now scarcely possible to touch this board. By the statutes of the State an indictment must be found within two years after the commission of the frauds, and that time has elapsed. There are probably acts within that period which are illegal and fraudulent, but owing to the friendliness of the Sheriff to the board, they have been so effectually concealed that it is well-nigh impossible to get hold of anything that will sustain an action. There might be a chance of detection and punishment if the next Grand Jury were to be honest, vigorous men, but, with the usual luck of the county, the new Sheriff, like the old ones, is hand and glove leagued with the Pidcock Ring; and since by law he has the choosing of the jurors, the result will undoubtedly be the same as heretofore. It is a heavy load that Hunterdon bears, but as long as she keeps the Democrats in power she cannot expect better things.

PROSPERITY IN THE IRON TRADE.

A GRATIFYING EXHIBIT FOR 1878—THE PROSPECTS FOR THE NEW YEAR.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 12.—A report of the condition of the American iron trade for the past year has just been completed by James M. Swank, Secretary of the American Iron and Steel Association. It states that the production of pig-iron in the United States in 1877 was 2,314,585 tons, and in 1878 was 2,382,000 tons. Pennsylvania shows an increase of over 100,000 tons, while Ohio shows a decrease of over 30,000 tons. In 1878 Pennsylvania made more than 50 per cent. of the total production of pig-iron of the United States. At the close of 1877 there were in the United States 716 blast furnaces, of which 270 were in blast and 446 out of blast. At the close of 1878 there were 700 furnaces, of which 260 were in blast and 440 out of blast. These figures, taken in connection with those of the production above given, indicate an increased average production of the active furnaces in 1878 over 1877. During 1878 18 furnaces were torn down, burned, or otherwise taken out of the active list, and there were two new furnaces erected, one in Ohio and one in Tennessee, showing a net decrease in the year of 16 furnaces. The stock of pig-iron on hand and unsold at the close of 1877 amounted to 642,351 net tons. At the close of 1878 they were very much less, being about 516,000 tons. At the close of 1876 the stocks aggregated 686,798 tons. In the whole of Pennsylvania there was a decrease in 1878 of about 30,000 tons, although in the Lehigh Valley there was an increase of about 13,000 tons. There was a decrease in New-York of about 24,000 tons; in Ohio of about 17,000 tons, and a marked decrease in Michigan, Missouri, and other States. The shrinkage in stocks was remarkably uniform in all producing States, and it is very significant of the caution which characterized this branch of the iron trade throughout the year. No State materially increased its stocks in 1878. The consumption and production of pig-iron, as well as the reduction of stocks, were greater in 1878 than during the previous year. A careful estimate shows that the production was increased about 70,000 tons. Stocks were decreased about 126,000 tons, and consumption increased about 195,000 tons. This indicates that the rolling-mills were more steadily employed during the past year than in the year preceding. Some of the reasons for this increased activity are the improvements in iron, ship, and bridge building, the requirements of the New-York elevated railroads, and the large manufacture of locomotives and railroad cars. Ten out of eleven steel-works were busily engaged in the production of steel rails during the entire year, and other steel-works were also active. The prosperity of agricultural interests, two good consecutive crops having been procured and the general revival of business throughout the latter half of the past year, were influences which favorably affected the iron trade of the country. The exhibit in connection with the production of Bessemer is particularly gratifying, equaling, perhaps, that of Great Britain during the year. In 1877 the production of iron rails amounted to 332,540 net tons, which was a great reduction from the production of 1876, which was 467,168 tons. In 1878 this decline was wholly arrested, the production during the year being fully as great as in 1877, and probably a few thousand tons greater. In 1877 the production of Bessemer steel ingots was 560,587 net tons, and the production of Bessemer rails was 426,150 tons. In 1878 the production of ingots was about 730,000 net tons, and the weight of Bessemer rails produced was about 600,000 net tons. Putting the iron and steel rail products of the year together, we have in round numbers a total of 930,000 net tons as the rail product of the year. This product has only once been exceeded in our history—in 1872—when the product reached 1,000,000 net tons. In 1879 we will probably equal even that immense product.

The decline in price of pig-iron during the year was $1 50 a ton, and on bar-iron it was one-tenth of a cent per pound, or $2 24 a ton. Iron and steel rails sold during the year at average prices, which were higher than the quotations like the French original of this theatrical story has for years been the dream of Mr. Charles Morton, the popular manager of this house, now devoted entirely to spectacle and ballet. The bird scene is a picture of grace and color and poetic movement. It is a poem in action, an artistic study worthy of an inspired painter. Nothing approaching the delicacy of tints and the general harmony of color has ever been seen on the London stage. There is "a gathering of nations" which is far in advance of all previous efforts in that direction, every leading nation being represented by troops of girls dressed in characteristic style and bearing published illuminated silken banners of the several States they represent. The American flag comes in for a loud burst of cheering, the nations most popular with the audiences being America, France, and Austria. Turkey, with a miniature British flag emblazoned on her bosom, denoting the Asiatic protectorate, was well received. A small attempt to hiss Russia was made, but it was promptly put down, out of deference, no doubt, to the pretty women who had been selected to represent the Northern power. The Irish flag was welcomed as noisily as it is in a New-York variety theatre. But the British blue jackets and the still more salable red were most popular, after all, and "Rule Britannia," when it came to that, "fetched" the audience, who sang it with the chorus on the stage, the effect being very inspiriting. The British Museum, South Kensington, the Tower, the picture galleries, St. James' Hall, and German Reed's had plenty of visitors; and yesterday there were not more than a holiday average of charges at the Police courts.

IN THE FUTURE.

One play to which we have been looking forward is not going to be produced, at least in its present shape, perhaps in no shape at all. The Lord Chamberlain has refused to license "Mother and Son." The fact is only at present known among a few, and it is not talked about, because it is hoped that, with some modifications, the play may yet be rendered acceptable. I have it on the very best authority that the rigors of the censorship have been intensified of late at the direct intervention of Queen Victoria. The Chamberlain's office is a court appointment, and her Majesty is determined that the duties shall be stringently fulfilled. Mr. Clement Scott, the accomplished critic of the Telegraph, has done the work of adaptation in the case of this latest exercise of the prohibitive power of the censorship. The success of "Mother and Son" in America, where playgoers are more particular as to stage morals than the English are, makes Lord Hertford's objections to this piece not a little puzzling. It is plain that for some years to come the work of transferring French plays to England is going to be very difficult. It is reported that the latest French success, "Fleur d'Orange," has been purchased for London; yet it has no more chance of being licensed than "Niniche" had. The seats for the opening night at the Lyceum have been booked for weeks past, and the stalls are secured for many nights ahead. Much, indeed, is to be done at Mr. Irving's theatre more perfectly than ever. Not a detail has been left unconsidered. The theatre has been redecorated and furnished on a lavish scale. But when the next London season opens St. James' is to be the handsomest theatre in London. The new lessee, Lord Newry, is spending $30,000 in remodeling the house. He has taken it on a 21 years' lease at a rental of $12,000 a year, with the right to purchase it at any time for the sum of $200,000. Mr. Toole is not coming to London until March. It is reported that he is to be the sublessee of the St. James'; while some of his friends say that a new theatre is to be built for him on the Thames Embankment. The Opera Comique is closed for important alterations. Mr. Gooch has renewed his lease for the Princess'. He intends in future to devote his attention to the revival of well-known dramas. His first step in this direction is "It's Never Too Late to Mend," which was originally produced at this theatre under the management of the late Mr. Vining. At a convenient break in these revivals a new play by Mr. Boucicault, which was accepted a year ago, will be produced. Mr. and Mrs. Kendall will resume their engagement with Mr. Hare at the Court next week, when "A Scrap of Paper" will be reproduced for them. The Prince of Wales is going back to another course of Robertson revivals. "Diplomacy" has latterly been played to a loss. They will overdo long runs in London. "Uncle" is not considered good enough to follow "Our Boys." Mr. Byron has, therefore, sketched out a new farcical comedy to be called "Our Girls," which has been accepted by James & Thorne. Mr. Tennyson's new play is to be produced at the Lyceum. The Laureate read it recently to Irving and a select party of friends. The recitation occupied nearly six hours.

ART AND LITERATURE.

The new year is not to see any addition to our newspapers. Nor do I hear that the old year snuffs any out of existence. Magazines, as a rule, do not pay, yet we are to have two new ones. The first aims at occupying ground of its own, and if it is well done will do well. It is called The Biograph, and only biographical notices of famous and useful men and women will be found in its pages. Moxons, I believe, will be the publishers. Mr. Guy Roslyn, the poet, will be the editor. The other publication is to be called Modern Thought. It is said that the Nineteenth Century will find a rival in this new claimant for public favor. There is a book in the press on Our Special Correspondents. A better title would be "War Correspondents." It will be chiefly occupied with biographies of Dr. Russell, (the "Pen" of the Crimean War,) and Mr. C. Austin, of the Times; Mr. A. Forbes and the late Mr. MacGahan, of the Daily News; Mr. Sala and the late Mr. Yerby, of the Telegraph; Mr. Hentz and Mr. O'Shea, of the Standard; and Mr. Fred Villiers, the draughtsman, of the Graphic. Mr. Warne (Warne & Co.) informed me yesterday that Mr. E. Barrett, who has written to a New-York paper complains of the injury to the form of That Lass o' Lowrie's in changing under some strange delusion. "The story," he said, appeared in Scribner; anybody could print it in England; but Scribners sent us advanced sheets of the closing pages to secure a sort of copyright in them, for which advantage they asked us, in behalf of Mrs. Burnett, for $150, which we paid, and it is very hard to have so much to hear that our conduct has been called in question." Mrs. Burnett arranged for prior or simultaneous publication for her new story, for which I believe she gets from Macmillans $3,000. That Lass o'Lowrie's is only what they call "a short story" in the trade. An English novelist's right to write a story of more or four times the length for republication either by the publisher or critic. It is a pity both for art and the public patience that short stories by English writers cannot be popularized on this side of the Atlantic. Long and eminently appreciative notices of Mr. Bayard Taylor have appeared in all the principal English journals. The Duke of Argyll is writing a chapter on the war in Afghanistan as a supplementary part to his book on The Eastern Question, which is to be published early in the year. Mr. Fawcett's Free Trade and Protection, in which he supports the policy of free trade, has gone into a second edition. It has also been translated into German and French. Prince Bismarck will carry out his new schemes of protection, nevertheless, and France will continue her sugar bounties and other methods of cheapening her products in the English market. Just before he died Major Whyte-Melville delivered to his publishers, Chapman & Hall, the manuscript of a new novel entitled, Black, but Comely; or, The Adventures of Jane Lee, which will be published in a few days. The death of Lady Melville, the novelist's mother, from the shock of her son's fatal fall, makes a sad termination of a brilliant career. "And such a good fellow!" said Mr. Fred Chapman, speaking of him to me this morning; "so generous—he used to give nearly all his money away—the very last £500 I paid him he gave away to a needy friend." A black swan, truly, as the Major would have said, if any other man had done it as himself. Among recent illustrated books, one of the cheapest, prettiest, and pleasantest is a square 8vo volume by Katharine S. Macquoid (who has written the letter-press) and Thomas R. Macquoid, (who has done the pictures.) It deals with the country and legends of Normandy and Brittany. It does not tell you much about the archæology of either one place or the other; but as you read you are continually finding yourself sitting in the shade of some ancient building listening to the story of a Brittany witch-like dame or to a legend told by a Normandy peasant. The effect is seductive in the extreme. One could have these charming stories "a local habitation and a name," but the author manages to put into them the atmosphere of the time, and yet to make you feel quite at home listening to them under modern conditions. The illustrations are reminiscences of old castles, quaint streets, picturesque market-places, and ancient fonts. The general effect of half a day with this book over a Winter fire in London is to make you long for Summer and its well-earned holiday, that you may seek out the footsteps of the Macquoids, and bask in the peace and rest of those Old-World nooks and corners where people still believe in fairies and miracles and priestly blessings. The publishers of this work are Messrs. Chatto & Windus, who appear to be competing sharply for the art reputation enjoyed by the great house of Virtue. Their Cyclopedia of Costume noticed by THE TIMES last year is now completed. It is Planche's masterpiece, and the best work of the kind extant.

The Art Exhibitions of the Winter season maintain the reputation of the several societies. To-day is the private view of the Grosvenor. While we are to have some novel modern works, the collection will be chiefly old masters' drawings "in silver point, ink, bistre, pencil, chalk, and colors," with a view possibly of competing with the Winter exhibition of the Royal Academy, which opens next week. The Duke of Devonshire has loaned for this collection some of his finest works from Chatsworth. The Duke of Newcastle has sent a rare lot of grand old works from Clumber, and the Queen has contributed several notable paintings from her Windsor gallery Mr. H. S. Marks has been elected an Academician. Several of his best works were in the possession of Mr. James Virtue (Virtue & Co.,) whose books were sold by auction last week, realizing about $12,000. Mr. Virtue is turning all he possesses into money, in the hope of pulling the firm through its troubles. Mr. Whistler has written a book. Will Mr. Ruskin be glad, or not? It is all about a recent trial. Mr. Whistler wears the "farthing damages" on his watch-chain. His book will be ready in a day or two. It will have a large sale at the popular price of 1 shilling. Mr. Herkomer, who was very ill, is getting better. A line engraving of his "Last Muster" is published, and is a more salable work than an etching of "An Ancient Custom." by Lucas, one of the pictures which excited so much admiration at the Academy two years ago.

A GREAT FIRE IN A SMALL TOWN.

THE BUSINESS PART OF BIRMINGHAM, CONN., NEARLY DESTROYED—LOSS $75,000.

NEW-HAVEN, Jan. 12.—A fire this morning destroyed the best buildings in the heart of the business portion of the thriving Village of Birmingham, on the Housatonic River, and at one time threatened to involve the whole village in ruin. The fire started about 1:30, in a brick building on Main-street, owned by Frederick Hull, and was caused by an overheated stove in the store on the ground floor, which was occupied by Hartz & Co., ready-made clothing. The flames spread until this building, the one adjoining, and Hull's dwelling, in the rear, were totaly destroyed, and several other buildings damaged. Fearing that they could not control the flames, the people sent to this city for help, and a steam fire-engine and firemen were sent there, but the engine was not used. Birmingham's water supply is from the hills, and a powerful head makes the hydrant streams very effective. The fire was confined to half the block bounded by Main, Elizabeth, Third, and Minerva streets. In all 22 persons were rendered homeless, but happily no one was seriously injured. The total loss is $75,000, and the insurance is $40,000. Among the losers are F. Hull, building, $20,000; insured for $10,000; Henry Somers, building, $15,000; insured for $6,500; J. H. Brewster, dry goods, $14,000; insurance, $9,000; Odd-fellows' Library, &c., insurance, $2,200; Globe Hotel, $5,000, insured; Joseph Young, hats and caps, $4,000; insurance, $1,500; and Miss. Hannah Smith, to be done; millliner; Mrs. Leline, school; C. W. Booth, carpets; G. H. Peck, drugs; Morse & Brierly, stationery; W. E. Miller, photographs, all lose more or less by water or fire. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Young, who slept in a room over the store where the fire started, had a very narrow escape.

The insurance companies mainly interested are as follows: Of Hartford, $5,000; Liverpool, London and Globe, $6,000; Williamsburg City, $3,350; Fire Association, $6,500; Merchants', of Newark, $8,200; American, of Newark, $1,850; People's, of Trenton $1,200; Lancashire, $2,250; Western, of Toronto, $2,000; Imperial and Northern, $1,000; Ætna, $1,000; North America, $1,000; Hartford County Mutual, $2,000; Prescott, $500; Atlantic, $800; Girard, $1,350; New-York City, $1,350; Traders', $1,350; Continental, $2,000.

OTHER LOSSES BY FIRE.

At 2:35 o'clock yesterday morning a fire broke out in the stables of Clark & Lewis, at No. 69 Tenth-avenue, and spread rapidly. Before the flames were extinguished the stock on the premises was destroyed, the damage to which was $2,500, and the building $1,000. The flames leaped to the kindling-wood yard of Rengerman & Wehage, at No. 79 Tenth-avenue, and caused a loss on the stock there of $300. During the fire Clark & Lewis's stables, six horses, worth $600, were burned to death. One of the animals belonged to Edwin H. Lord, two to N. B. Catrell, one to J. W. Lewis, and one to Clark & Wilkins. The cause of the fire could not be ascertained.

Levi Cralleson's storehouse, at Franklin, Ohio, containing 100,000 feet of lumber; Vail's livery-stable, with four horses and several wagons and buggies, and Vail's dwelling, adjoining, were burned Saturday night. The loss is estimated at $6,000; insurance, $3,000.

The tenement-house and beer-saloon of John Odendorfer, in Jamaica Plain District, Boston, were burned Saturday night. Mrs. Odendorfer and her 10-year-old son perished in the flames.

A NEW METHOD OF DETERMINING HIGH TEMPERATURES.

From Galignani's Messenger.

In very many manufactures an enormous degree of heat is required for carrying out the various operations—for instance, in casting iron. The means hitherto at our disposal for testing those temperatures, which sometimes require to be accurately regulated, were limited by the point of fusion of the thermometric tube. M. Crova, Professor at the Faculty of Sciences at Montpellier, has had the ingenious idea of bringing the spectroscope to the aid of the manufacturer, and his efforts have been most successful. By the means he has adopted, heats hitherto incalculable can be determined very precisely. The process by which he proceeds is—roughly speaking—to adopt a fixed standard, and, having settled that point, to examine, by the aid of the spectroscope, the flames of incandescent objects and reduce them by interposing obstructive of known power to the same level as the standard. That arrangement, he calls a spectrophotometer. Of course, in such an apparatus the primary data must be purely arbitrary. M. Crova takes as the point being nearly as to size is emitted by an ordinary moderator lamp burning oil, and that he fixes at 1,000 degrees. In comparing other incandescent substances with that standard, he finds that the heat of the platinum wire, warmed to the red in a gas-light, is 524; the same material raised to a white heat by the blow-pipe, 810; a regulation stearine candle, 1,162; an Argand burner of ordinary gas, 1,373; the oxyhydrogen light, (combustion of the oxygen on lime,) 1,806; the electric light, (60 Bunsen elements,) 3,060, and the light of the sun, 4,049. Carbon, lime, and platinum, when incandescent, have the same power, and probably magnesium. This system is calculated to be of vast importance to manufactures by enabling the operator to regulate his fires so as to produce the precise effect desired. M. Dumas, in bringing the above to the notice of the Academy of Sciences, stated that he considered it as the greatest discovery of modern times, and M. Berthelot warmly supported his statement.

DEATH OF A FRENCH SCULPTOR.

The death is announced at Paris of M. Antoine Augustine Préault, the sculptor. Born in Paris, Oct. 8, 1809, the son of an artisan, M. Préault was in his boyhood placed with a mercantile establishment. His natural inclinations finally prevailed, however, and at 16 he entered a sculptor's studio. Afterward he studied under David, and sharing in the romantic spirit of 1828, his works were characterized by exuberance and passion. His début was made in the salon of 1833 through the bas-reliefs, "Famine," "Gilbert Dying at the Hospital," and several medallions. During the succeeding decade he produced numerous works which won for him high rank and a large place in the salon of 1849. Since that time M. Préault has been represented at all expositions except those of 1855 and 1857. He was an active worker, and leaves a large number of important works, among them two large medallions of "The Roman Emperors," and the statues "La Reine de Saba," "Hee ube," "Charlemagne," and "Carthage."

THAT BULL-DOZING IN BENNINGTON.

From the Burlington (Vt.) Free Press, Jan. 11.

In regard to the charge of Republican "bull-dozing" in Bennington, recently brought forward by Senator Thurman, a correspondent says: "The only ground for it is that the Republicans appealed to the Sheriff of the county to be present at the election last September, and see that the Democratic policemen, who had been appointed by Democratic Selectmen, did not obstruct voters in the free casting of their ballots. The Sheriff came, and his presence secured fair play and the complete overthrow of the Democratic schemes and sandidates. An officious Democrat sent the case to Washington and Senator Thurman got hold of it, and, to use a common expression, 'put his foot into it.' The Republicans of Bennington would be glad to have the case investigated."

THE LOUISIANA OUTRAGES.

GOV. NICHOLLS' STATEMENTS RESPECTING THEM.

THE OPINIONS HE FORMED FROM HIS PERSONAL INVESTIGATION—THE WHITES RESPONSIBLE FOR THE ORIGIN OF THE DIFFICULTIES.

Following is the portion of the Message of Gov. Nicholls to the Legislature of Louisiana respecting the outrages in Tensas Parish:

"When, in the campaign of 1876, I proclaimed through the State that in the event of my election as Governor of this State I felt assured that peace and good order would follow, I did not do so relying in any manner upon the mere physical and legal instrumentalities which would be in my hands for that purpose, for I was well aware that these were extremely limited, confined almost entirely to reporting to this body careless or delinquent officials, and abstaining from a judicious use of the pardoning power. My declaration was predicated upon the certainty that the election of the officers who were before the people would eliminate most of the causes of bitterness and reproach then existing, and that the gradual operation of conservative influence would ultimately lead to a complete good feeling between all classes and races, and cause the crystallization of public sentiment against all species of lawlessness. My deliberate judgment is not to force, or attempt to force, these results by harsh proceedings, except when they can be judiciously employed, for I foresee that a course of that character will defeat the very end and object I have in view. The result of the softening influences of the last two years is apparent to any one who knows the State; and while here and there a few bad men, or a few foolish men, breed trouble, which all good men regret, and while the good men in some places have not taken the determined, active stand against them that I had hoped and expected, I am satisfied that day by day and month by month we are surely moving forward to the condition of things which all good citizens are hopefully anticipating. I would regard the retarding of these results by injudicious action, which some might deem wise and right, as a great calamity to the State. I say this under a full sense of the responsibility which attaches to my position. It has so happened that some of these acts of lawlessness (which I condemn and regret) have been directed against colored men, and it is sometimes supposed that they have been so directed by reason of their being colored men. This is not true. The fact results from the circumstance that the greater number of the infractions of the law are necessarily found in all communites among those classes who, from ignorance or idleness or thriftlessness, fail to understand and appreciate their duties and obligations; and that, in this State, the mass of these classes is found among the colored people. The fact of their being colored people is merely accidental and incidental. The same acts would take place under the same circumstances, without regard to color.

"It is a notorious fact that for over 20 years there have existed in some parts of Louisiana organizations known as 'Reliance Committees,' whose acts have stricken white men oftener than colored men. It is said that some of the troubles in this State within the last year have had their origin in politics. I do not suppose that there is any State in the Union in which politics have not been more or less the cause of difficulties. The passions and interests of men in every community become so much excited that, here and there, in every State troubles take place. Louisiana does not in this respect differ in this respect from her sister States. Troubles do not exist in Louisiana based on opposition to any man voting on account of his color. The exercise of that right in a manner different from that wished by other individuals causes opposition here, just as it does in Maine or Oregon. This sometimes results in personal difficulties, and whenever one such result that point there springs up here an element of danger not found in those States, not the cause of the difficulty, but resulting from it, and from the fact of there being two different races in the State. A difficulty originating in politics, with the usual pistol of blows or bloodshed, is apt to be participated in by others from that time forward, not on account of the politics involved in it, but race sympathy or race fear.

"I found this, in my opinion, (formed after a personal investigation,) to have been the case in the recent disturbances in the Parishes of Tensas and Concordia. The proximate cause of that trouble was the going on a night of a party of men, numbering from 20 to 25, to the house of one Fairfax, a colored political leader in Tensas Parish, which act resulted in the killing of Peck (who seems to have been the leader of the party,) and in the wounding of the companions of three colored men who were in Fairfax's house, one of whom afterward died. The visit of these men to Fairfax was utterly wrong—in my opinion without justification—and while attempted to be justified upon the ground that they went in the interest of peace to expostuate against a proposed rumored attempt of the colored people to force the quarantine lines at the town of St. Joseph. I am satisfied that was not the purpose, but that it had a political object. I do not think the purpose was to kill or harm Fairfax, but I do believe it was to influence his course and the local campaign in that parish. The killing of Peck and the wounding of the colored men was, in my opinion, totally unexpected, and attended by results which none of the parties contemplated, and from which political considerations immediately ceased. Just as soon as these men were killed and wounded reports of the same spread with astonishing rapidity through Tensas and Concordia, and instantly armed bodies of colored men, evidently organized prior thereto, moved from every direction to the scene of the occurrence. While this was taking place the Parish Judge of Tensas, who had been informed of the circumstances of Peck's death, issued a warrant for the arrest of Fairfax, who was charged with killing him. Instead of either leaving the parish, if he believed himself about to be wronged, or at once surrendering to the authorities, who were pursuing the forms of law, Fairfax remained with the large number of men who had assembled, some of whom were making the most horrible threats. These threats produced a feeling of terror and apprehension in the parish, and with the events which followed, in my opinion, politics had nothing to do.

"The situation will be understood when I say that Tensas is a parish of large territorial extent, with an exceedingly sparse white and very dense colored population, the former being nearly as to 20 to 1 in favor of the latter, and that the bodies of armed colored men parading through the parish are variously estimated from 1,000 to 2,000 men, while the whites numbered in the same parish but few. Fairfax fears entertained by the latter of general bloodshed and pillage, I am satisfied, were fully justified by appearances, and were, beyond question, thoroughly real. Their completely defenseless condition demonstrates at once the folly and wrong of the original act which brought about the situation, and also the fact that it was unexpected. I cannot conceive that men could wantonly and deliberately place the lives and property of their fellow-citizens in such peril as they were then in. Assistance was immediately called from neighboring parishes, and when it came it found the people of Tensas, white and black, already in possession of the situation. It needed but a spark to ignite the train, and it was given by the firing of a body of colored men upon a party, under the Parish Judge, proceeding to put an end to the armed assemblage. A fire was returned, and from the best information I can receive several persons were wounded, but not killed. The return fire caused the negroes to disperse. In the meantime, a negro set fire to a gin in the neighborhood of Waterproof, containing 70 bales of cotton. It is asserted that this was the preconcerted signal for a general rally of the colored people. This man was afterward, by some persons unknown, found and killed. This, together with the killing of another negro, also by persons unknown, and for a cause unknown, were the only lives taken at that time that I have heard of.

"The strife thus recklessly originated in the Parish of Tensas spread to the Parish of Consordia. Large bodies of armed colored men from that parish hurried toward Tensas and manifested their presence in various parts of the parish. An armed body of white men, acting under a warrant for the arrest of Fairfax, who, it was supposed had passed into Concordia, entered that parish for the purpose of the execution of the warrant, and while there some eight or nine colored men were killed. On the return of the men from the adjacent parishes, who had gone to the assistance of the whites, quiet was gradually restored and everything is now peaceable. The events of those few days will, I trust, serve as a lesson out of which possibly good may ultimately come. It may teach those who lightly engage in acts tending to such terrible consequences to halt before again venturing in that direction, and it must necessarily result in arraying solidly against such persons all who have at heart the well-being of the community. I do not know how far steps for the punishment of those persons who brought about this condition will be successful. Politically, the officers of the district in which Tensas is situated are Republican, the District Judge and District Attorney being of that party. I had intended going in person to several other points where it is said violence has occurred. Circumstances over which I had no control have delayed and prevented me."

A SLEEPY YOUTH AT PRAYERS.

From the Oswego Times.

A young man named Hubbard lives with Perry Worden, in Scriba. The other night Hubbard went to a dance, and was out nearly all night. He was sleepy the next morning, but nevertheless got up at the usual early hour, and was present at family prayers. After the rest of the family arose from their knees it was observed that Hubbard still remained in an humble attitude, his head resting between his hands on the chair. The good Deacon, thinking that the young man was in a serious and penisent mood, concluded not to disturb him, and went out and did most of the chores which Hubbard was in the habit of doing. When Mr. Worden returned to the house about two hours later he found Hubbard still on his knees. Thinking to offer him consolation, he knelt down beside the young man, and then found that he was fast asleep.

DON'T SMOKE WHERE THE CANARY IS.

From the Kingston Courier.

A city gentleman has a beautiful canary bird, which has been kept for some time in his reading-room, as the gentleman was very fond of hearing the bird sing. Now, it so happened that the canary's cage hung just above the chair in which the gentleman used to sit and smoke. As time wore on it was noticed that the bird had ceased to sing as much as formerly. After a while the bird ceased to sing altogether. Finally, one day the bird was observed wildly endeavoring to keep on its perch, and floundering about the cage as though dizzy and very weak. It occurred to the gentleman and his wife that perhaps the tobacco smoke might have something to do with the bird's strange condition, and it was taken into another room. The pure air seemed to have an effect. In a day or two it was heard singing, though in a weak and tremulous voice. After a week had gone by, it began to send forth notes of purity and clearness, and at the end of a fortnight it was itself again.

TWO HUNDRED MILES ON SNOW-SHOES.

TOILSOME JOURNEY FROM MANITOULIN TO TORONTO BY TWO MEMBERS OF THE CANADIAN PARLIAMENT.

From the Toronto Globe, Jan. 11.

Although snow-shoeing is a pastime frequently resorted to by residents in the more settled districts of Ontario, yet, when rendered an only means of locomotion, there is certainly more hard task than pleasure attached to the practice. This statement is fully borne out by the experience of a party, composed of seven persons, who left Manitoulin Island for Toronto on the 30th ult. The expedition was made up of R. A. Lyon and W. D. Lyon, members of the Provincial Parliament; W. A. Abney, Mr. Merryfield, and three Indians who acted as attendants while on the road to Parry Sound. The remainder arrived in the city on Wednesday, and yesterday furnished the account given below of the trip: At six o'clock A. M. on the 30th ult. the company left Michael Bay, at the southern extremity of the Manitoulin Island, on snow-shoes, for Toronto. They started out in a northerly direction toward Manitowaning, an Indian village in the Township of Assiquing. This place was reached about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, after a hard day's march through deep snow. Here the travelers were furnished with questors by the inhabitants, and on the following morning continued their journey northward about 4 A. M., well satisfied with the treatment they had received while in the village. A guide was procured to convey the luggage as far as Shoguandah, and the Indian attendants were thus relieved of a burden while crossing the rough country. The latter village was reached at noon on Wednesday morning the expedition again moved northward toward Killarney, 28 miles distant, which place they expected to arrive at before nightfall. The ice covering the water extending between Shoguandah and Killarney was pretty secure, and traveling over it was preferred rather than on the rocky land. Another advantage gained by choosing the ice was that the company could travel in a more direct course. Rapid progress was made for about 25 miles, when open water was reached, and they were compelled to travel by land again. Upon the advice of some Indians they endeavored to reach Killarney Village, by crossing the Killarney Mountain. In consequence of its very steep incline, together with the deep snow which covered its rugged sides, but little progress was made, and for over two hours they struggled to reach its summit. Darkness had by this time fully set in, and being obliged to remain where they were, a cotton tent was pitched and a fire lighted outside, on which supper was prepared. The meal was composed of roasted pork, bread, and tea. A comparatively comfortable night was spent, and on Thursday morning the company descended the mountain, and passing over a frozen channel, reached Killarney in the afternoon.

The journey was resumed about 5 o'clock next morning, and after having traversed about five miles over the ice in an easterly direction, an encampment of Chippewa Indians was visited. An invitation was extended to the party to remain over night, which they did, and were entertained very hospitably. The direction to be taken next day along the eastern extremity of the bay, and for distances traveling on the ice was rendered almost impossible on account of the many projecting pieces of ice which had been broken by the waves and afterward frozen solidly, so that there were numerous open water-holes, which obliged the company to take to shore. After having passed through a tract of rocky bushland they came to a morass, which was crossed with very great difficulty. Occasionally some of the party would sink down through the snow into the mud, and before it had been crossed some of them were so heated by the exertion that they took off their coats, and all this notwithstanding the fact that the mercury must have been below zero considerably. Grumble Point was finally reached in the evening, only 20 miles having been made during the day. One of the party and an Indian, who had given out and remained behind on the marsh, arrived at 8 o'clock, being about an hour after the rest. Here, as at the other Indian settlements, they were treated kindly, and although delayed there with so bad a day's travel, they early next morning toward French River, taking to the ice over the Georgian Bay once more. Nothing remarkable occurred until the party were crossing Bad River, when the ice broke several times, letting into the water some of those who were crossing. As a safe mode of getting over one or two crawled to the other side on their hands and knees, while the others felt the ice in front of them before crossing. The company halted about 6:30 o'clock P. M. at Borron's residence, on the banks of the French River. An interesting evening was spent with this gentleman, who is an ex-member for Algoma District. On Saturday morning they resumed their journey on the ice, and reached Byng Inlet, a distance of 26 miles, early in the evening. Leaving at 6 o'clock on Sunday morning, they traveled 35 miles to an Indian village, which was reached about 7 o'clock the same night. Taking an unusually early rise on Monday morning, they started off about 3 o'clock through a think bushland toward Parry Sound. After having walked 13 miles the party came to a wagon-road, where a team of horses was engaged to carry them through to Parry Sound. The Indians here left to return, and after 14 miles had been traversed Mr. Lyon and company reached Parry Sound about 5 o'clock in the evening. At 6 o'clock on Tuesday morning the party left by team for Bracebridge, a distance of 52 miles, and reached it in the evening. At 4 o'clock next morning the party left by stage for Gravenhurst, where the cars were taken for Toronto.

The whole distance traveled was about 374 miles; 210 miles of this distance was covered on snow-shoes, 64 by team, and 100 by rail. The time occupied in traveling the distance was about 10 days.

GAMBETTA AND THE DRUMMERS.

THE GREAT TRIBUNE ENTERTAINED BY A COMPANY OF COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS.

A banquet was given to Gambetta at the Continental Hotel, in Paris, on Christmas Eve, by about 630 commercial travelers. The correspondent of the London Times says: "The idea originated some months ago, during his visit to Grenoble and Romans, when a number of commercial travelers paid him a visit of congratulation, and when, in acknowledging the compliment, he humorously described himself as a commercial traveler of the Republic. Admission was rigidly confined to the class in question, but a few Senators and Deputies were invited as guests. M. Murat, a jeweler and Municipal Councilor (of Paris, presided, and the entertainment was very successful. The banquet commenced at 8:30. M. Gambetta, on entering, was received with loud cheers. After a cordial speech by the Chairman acknowledging the great services rendered to the country by M. Gambetta, and after the other toasts of the evening had been proposed and honored, M. Gambetta arose, amid long-continued applause. Having given his reasons for accepting their invitation that evening, M. Gambetta complimented them on the great services rendered to the country by the commercial travelers during the crisis of May 16, and described with much feeling and spirit the injuries and outrages which had been heaped upon them by the reactionary press. Coming then to the present situation, the illustrious orator, with no less spirit, throwing aside the accusations which had been made by false prophets in other times, said that the enemies of the Republic were once more on the eve of an immense deception, and that it would not be 20 voices that would prove to be the majority, but after the election of Jan. 5, the number 25 would be found to be below the truth. As in former speeches, M. Gambetta, with perhaps more force and eloquence than ever, stood out as the pioneer of the Democratic Party. He would abide by his own circle, and he knew of no greater or more honorable position than to be its servant; and as for the insinuations of his rivals, when the time came he knew how to meet them. I am not ambitious of power,' he said. 'On the 5th of January the Republic will enter into a new existence with an unprecedented freedom, and by prudence, wisdom, and patience'—this word was pronounced with marvelous eloquence—'the country will overcome all her difficulties and once more be happy and contented.' Here the orator, approaching the question of the propaganda of the Republican idea, denounced as senseless those who wished to carry it beyond France. 'No,' he said, 'it is a question for us other republics but ours; it is for the French Republic and for no other, if is for the development of our institutions, and of ours alone.' It would be impossible to convey in a short account like this an idea of this speech, one of the most eloquent that M. Gambetta has ever delivered. At the conclusion of it, and on resuming his seat, M. Gambetta was most enthusiastically cheered. During the banquet messages of adherence and congratulation were received from all parts of France, and could have been counted by hundreds. The cordiality and enthusiasm did not for a moment cease. After the supper the right hand of M. Gambetta clasped the right hands of the 630 guests, who passed before him in turn, and nothing can give an idea of the bonhomie with which he met this fatiguing manifestation of courtesy."

THE LOUISIANA AMENDMENTS.

Gov. Nicholls, of Louisiana, says in his Message that the proposed amendments to the Constitution of the State were rejected, and the New-Orleans Times wants to know on what authority he makes the assertion. The Secretary of State has declared that, owing to confusion and irregularities in the returns, he is unable to ascertain or promulgate the vote upon the amendments, and that he must leave it to the Legislature. The Times expresses the belief that they, or at least all the most important ones, were carried. It says: "We believe it will be found that the people have declared in favor of removing the capital to Baton Rouge, that they have sanctioned the proposed changes in the judiciary, saving nearly $250,000 annually in that department alone, and that, generally, all the reforms and retrenchments especially demanded at this time have been achieved. So long as this remains in doubt the Legislature cannot proceed in the matter of calling a convention. The Governor himself effectually says that the adoption of the amendments would avoid the necessity of a convention—now let us be told in some authoritative manner whether they were or were not carried."

A VOLUME OF CHRISTMAS TALES.

HANNIBAL'S MAN, AND OTHER TALES. The Aryan Christmas Stories. By LEONARD KIP. Albany, N. Y.: THE ARGUS COMPANY. 1878.

Genial, clever stories are these six short pieces of fiction bearing the imprint of the Argus Company, of Albany. Mr. Leonard Kip has put his best wine to the fore of his feast, and in Hannibal's Man shows himself a story-teller of originality and bold imagination. Hannibal's man is no less a person than a Carthaginian soldier who, during the historic passage of the Alps by the Carthaginian Army, fell asleep in the snow and became imbedded in a glacier. With the license readily accorded to the story-teller of Christmas time, Mr. Kip does not hesitate to revive his frozen warrior of the Alps, and confront him with the changes that have followed the 2,000 years elapsed since his first sleep. He revives him with all the certainty and with far less of the ceremony that Edmond About used in his celebrated L'Homme à l'Oreille Cassé. The situation becomes piquant when the revived heathen casts down a thick gold ring and demands that his deliverer shall give him his pretty wife, Ursula, in exchange. Being the stronger, he finds nothing discordant with his views of right and wrong in compelling the sale of Ursula at the point of his ancient spear. In Three Heads, the next story, relates to Albany in 1738, and tells of a Christmas festival at Gisbort Van Twiller's. The hospitality there retailed does not agree with the adverse reports on Albany made by Peter Kalm in his famous book of travels, a little later on in the same century. According to the Swedish traveler and naturalist, the Albanians were famous for miserliness, penury, and over-charges, so much so that in other cities he was condoled with for having to stop there overnight. In Three Heads may do something to counteract the sinister testimony of old Kalm. In The Ghosts at Grantley English scenes are introduced, and the speaker exhibits a charming ease in the presence of several talkative and decidedly material ghosts who appear by broad daylight. Ingenious is the description of these ghosts as they appear when they are placed with a light behind them. The Secret of Apollonius Septrio reverses the process of Hannibal's Man. Instead of cutting an antique man out of the ice, the narrator himself is the object of curiosity to developed men of the future, who possess wings and other marvelous attributes. Prior Polycarp's Portrait shows less ingenuity. St. Nicholas and the Gnome is frankly a fairy story. From Hannibal's Man we take this extract, where the speaker is about to find the frozen warrior:

"It was as I had supposed. Ere long, in a little recess where the rocks receded from the icy abrasion, I found a tuft or two of grass and a little bush of fast-dissolving snow-wreaths; and in the centre of all a clump of pale lilly-shaped (sic) crocuses. I severed them carefully from the ground, and first twined three or four in Ursula's dark tresses. Then, holding the others in my hand for the decoration of our cabin, I turned with her upon the homeward path. Yet, before departing, feeling moved by some indefinable curiosity, I approached the edge of the great Glacier and gazed down upon it.

"The vast icy sea here and there was cracked and broken—roughened in wide portions as though at one time watery waves had been raised upon it by the wind, and frozen by instantaneous blast; and throughout its greatest extent, was covered with sheets of snow laying (sic) many feet deep upon it. In certain spots, however, the snow had either blown or melted away, and in other places the surface of the ice had liquefied and again been frozen with glassy smoothness. This happened to have been the case just where now I stood, and I could look down many inches into the clear, mirrorlike depths of the ice, almost with the same ease and distinctness with which one can gaze into a quiet pool belonging to a running spring.

"'See, Ursula!' I said after a moment, and pointing downward, 'A log.'

The grammatical error noted in the extract is a very common one, and occurs elsewhere in the book. Mr. Kip is certainly unfortunate in his proof-reader. The stories will be found fresh and original in structure, and at times colored by a fine poetical strain. But they would be better for careful editing and condensation.

VAN LAUN'S FRENCH REVOLUTION.

THE FRENCH REVOLUTIONARY EPOCH: Being a History of France from the Beginning of the First French Revolution to the End of the Second Empire. By THEODORE VAN LAUN. 2 vols. New-York: D. APPLETON & Co. 1879.

Owing to the somewhat primitive method pursued by Mr. Van Laun in the composition of his historical work, the reader passes through his chapters with the feeling of surprise that overtakes one in turning over the album of a person with whom one has many friends in sommon. There are the photographs of people one has known in former years, some of them plainly distinguishable, others doubtful, others bearing only a provoking resemblance to some one long forgotten. Mr. Van Laun's introduction is at once perceived to be from Taine's Ancien Régime. The opening of Book I. could have been written by no other hand than that of Carlyle:

"No Hercules, however, either in aspiration or energy, is Louis XVI., (born Aug. 23, 1754; ascended the throne May 10, 1774,) except the Desired; at best but an amateur Vulcan, with a taste for lock-making, and like the lame God of Lemnos, hoodwinked and browbeaten by his spouse, (Marie Antoinette, born Nov. 2, 1755; married May 16, 1770.) A Jupiter Ronald King, or semblance of a King, amply provided with those 'good intentions commonly supposed to be employed in the making of a highway to perdition;' this and nothing more is Louis XVI. His predecessor is dead, and with him have retired into limbo debauch and profligacy, sent thither by the Court, which resolves to live henceforth cleanly, decently, and sparingly; for the Treasury is empty, gutted by the Pompadours, the Dubarrys, and their shifties, and we have all, perforce, to live sparingly, for the 24,500,000 of tollers are beginning to grumble at the 500,000 of idlers who grow fat in proportion as the others grow lean."

The same chapter that betrays Carlyle in the extraordinary rhythm of its sentences and in still more astonishing adjectives, contains passages from much soberer historians. Besides Taine and Carlyle, Mr. Van Laun wishes to acknowledge the use of certain volumes of the Histoire des Français, by Messrs. Lavallée and Lock, as well of De Gonsourt, Michelet, Quinet, and others. Like almost all historians, he has used freely the works of others before him, but fortunately few historians of mark have digested their reading so little. Mr. Van Laun appears to have made a history on so hot-pressed and modern a system that he has had no time for a style of his own, but alternately assumes the style of his temporary guide. This may be historical writing, but if it is, then we must call it historical writing of a new kind. It is a new departure in this branch of literature that is not likely to be much followed.

Aside from this, the compilation of Mr. Van Laun is, of course, not without its merits. A number of writers are brought together and joined one upon the other with rather less skill than greater; their united work is boiled down into two volumes of very large open text, which will prove instructive and even exciting reading, because the events they describe are in themselves so moving, and so important in their results to the march of politics in Europe ever since, that the absence of literary value, or of feeling in the reader for a strong personality in the author, is hardly missed. French history is brought down to the present decade, to the year 1870, and to the day when the deposition of Napoleon III. was demanded at the hall of the Assembly. In regard to which event Lock says:

"Thus fell the Empire; not as the Restoration, vanquished after a prolonged and sanguinary battle; not as Louis Philippe, taking flight before the irritation of all, and having scarcely tried to hold his ground; but sinking beneath the responsibility of its treachery, and overwhelmed by its political and military faults. 1848 had been a revolution caused by contempt; 1870 was a revolution caused by disgust."

In fine, The French Revolutionary Epoch is rather an intelligent compendium of a century of French history, than an independent historical work. Regarded from this stand-point, it is deserving of all praise.

AN ECLECTIC HISTORY.

THE TWO AMERICAS. THEIR COMPLETE HISTORY FROM THE EARLIEST DISCOVERIES TO THE PRESENT DAY. With an introduction by F. C. BRADLEY. New-York: HENRY S. ALLEN. Chicago: A. L. COBURN & Co. 1879.

For the convenience of people who have no library of reference at hand, and cannot bring together a number of standard works on the histories of North and Sout hAmerica, the editors of this considerable volume have placed under one cover a little selected library relating to a most important subject. Their intention is to make a "People's" edition, and they have gone the right way to work. The people, as a rule, cannot afford money or time to buy and read many books; they have to be content with only a few. Those few ought to of the very best quality, and contain much in little space. Alongside of the Bible, a complete Shakespeare, Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, and a copy of Josephus, there ought to be room for just such a compilation as this. It is a bulky tome, not meant for the fastidious handler of books who insists upon taking his reading by pleasant sips from a pretty duodecimo, but rather for the boy or man who puts the volume squarely on a table and pores over its fascinating pages of triple columns with the honest enjoyment in a pleasure which comes rarely. Five celebrated histories are embodied in this popular book. They are Biographies of the Early Discoverers, by Jeremy Belknap, D. D.; The Complete History of South America, Mexico, and Central America, by William Robertson, D. D.; The History of North America, by James Graham; Ramsay's History of the United States, and A Narrative of the Indian Wars in New-England, by William Hubbard. An appendix, by Prof. H. L. Williams, brings the histories of North and South America down to the present day. In addition to these books of reference, there are tables forming a full chronology from A. D. 458 to the present time, compiled from authorities by L. M. Stephenson, and aiming to be a compendium of the history of North and South America, civil, military, and political, inclusive of biographical details. At the end of the History of the United States there is a general summary of the development of the country in national wealth, in domestic and foreign commerce, manufactures, agriculture, and mining, together with details relating to social progress, to the system of public education, and to moral advancement. The whole is governed by a copious index and introduced by an elaborate essay from P. C. Headley. Scattered through the book are 34 full-page steel engravings of eminent men, important battles, &c.

The usefulness of a good book of this stamp for circulation among North Americans is too plain for comment, but in South America, also, it might find its way among those natives of the larger seaport towns who study foreign languages, and especially endeavor to get a working knowledge of English. The compilation is not exclusively North American, and, while the sentiments of the writers on South American history cannot be considered identical with those of historians in Spanish, yet the commercial supremacy of the United States, her advance in education and prosperity, has no little influence on the South Americans. They may not agree with an Anglo-Saxon view of the situation, but those of them who read English will be glad to find such a summary of the main facts of the history of the Americas and the progress of the United States. The History of the Two Americas bears as the decoration of its cover the statue designed by Bartholdi for New-York Harbor, and as a legend, the name that sculptor gave his work: "Liberty Enlightening the World."

VERNE'S LATEST ROMANCE.

DICK SANDS, THE BOY CAPTAIN. By JULES VERNE. Translated by ELLEN E. FREWER. Illustrated. New-York: CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS. 1879.

In this latest of Verne's romances of travel and adventure, the versatile novelist has found a new quarter of the globe, but pursues very much the same line of conduct as in previous books. The American is represented more completely than ever before. Not only the hero, Dick Sands, but the heroine, Mrs. Weldon, and one of the villains, Harris, are Americans. The head fiend is a Portuguese named Negoro, who, with Harris, is soon discovered to have affiliations with the African slave trade. These personages and four or five negroes are gradually introduced to the reader on board a top-sail schooner, commanded by Capt. Hull, which is returning to San Francisco from an unsuccessful whaling voyage. The relation between Captain and mates, whites and blacks, while to a certain extent piquant, is not exactly what is apt to obtain on board American ships; but we must make allowance for the demands of a romance of adventure. The seafaring terms and nautical knowledge is certainly not up to the mark of that displayed in The Wreck of the Grosvenor. There is a burlesque personage among the passengers and crew of the schooner which belongs to a type highly in favor nowadays, and very appropriate to books like those of Jules Verne that seek to instruct people in all sorts of odd information concerning the fauna and flora of distant parts of the world. This is Cousin Benedict, an entomologist so deeply absorbed in insects, spiders, and animals which most people class under the terms beetle or bug, that he does not know what he is doing, or where he is going. Then there is a dog of great sagacity, which has also had experience in the African slave trade, but, for lack of a voice, is constrained to do things that only excite the curiosity of his new friends without satisfying it. He has an unquenchable hatred of the arch-villain Negoro. Naturally this multiplied Swiss family Robinson is shipwrecked, and then is induced by the minor villain, Harris, to believe that a landing has been made in South America. The discovery of various typical animals and insects at length demonstrates the fact that they are in Equatorial Africa. Of the machinations of Harris, who keeps them in a negro village to secure a ransom, of his ignoble death, and of their eventual delivery from bondage vile, it is not necessary to speak. Suffice it to say that not Stanley, in his Through the Dark Continent, met with more thrilling adventures. Certainly Stanley did not observe, so opportunely and at every other moment, some rare and instructive specimen of natural history as these people did. Dick Sands is illustrated even more profusely than previous books. In its line—that once occupied by the works of Capt. Mayne Reid, for instance—it will take a good place, provided its readers have not been educated in the bolder school of writing of Capt. Reid. While Jules Verne is more artistic in the structure of his plots, he cannot compete with Reid in the peculiar quality of realism that the older writer shows. Reid's books for boys, in spite of their many faults, always sound as if the writer might really have seen the sights, if not done the deeds, that they record. We fear that many young American and English boys will hardly like the "Frenchiness" of the young heroes of Jules Verne.

GLEANINGS FROM THE MAILS

ABANDONED IN A STORM.

TWO PASSENGERS LEFT IN THE SNOWS OF WESTON PASS BY A ROCKY MOUNTAIN STAGE COMPANY—THEIR SUIT FOR DAMAGES.

From the Leadville (Col.) Reveille, Jan. 5.

Our citizens will remember the whirling, boisterous snow-storm that prevailed in Leadville on New Year's Day, and they can easily imagine how much more severe and blinding the storm must have been on the bleak summit of Weston Pass. On that day the stage line known as the South Park Company had so large a list of passengers that an extra wagon was provided, and in it four passengers took their seats. When this comfortless vehicle was within a mile or a mile and a half of the summit of the pass on the other side, the passengers were told to walk or else they could proceed no further. The driver finally gave peremptory commands to get out and walk. Two of them hung on to the tail-board to keep up and to obtain such slight protection from the driving snow as this slight barricade afforded against the furious blasts coming squarely in their faces. As there was room for only two at the rear of the wagon, the other two passengers, McNamara and James Burns, struggled and plodded along behind in the deep snow the best they could. One of them, Mr. Burns, being unaccustomed to the high altitude and to such a strain upon his naturally vigorous constitution, began to lag and to require from his more robust companion greater assistance than mere words of encouragement. The driver refused to wait for them when the summit was reached and with this fond hope to animate them they toiled forward, and in a thoroughly exhausted condition gained the top of the range only to experience the keen disappointment of finding the wagon gone, and themselves abandoned upon one of the most exposed spots of the Rocky Mountains in a terrible storm. The evidence in the suit which is to follow this inhuman abandonment will show that the driver waited only a few moments for these two men, and then deliberately proceeded on his way, leaving them to make the next station, or perish in the snow.

The wind had filled the track with snow, and only with great difficulty and delay could they keep the road by feeling with their feet for the beaten trail. After struggling along for a mile on this side, they stopped for consultation upon the desperate situation in which they realized themselves to be. Being strangers, and totally unfamiliar with the surroundings, they had no idea that Rocky Point Station was only three miles from them, on a down grade. Knowing that there was a station behind them they finally decided to retrace their steps, and actually toiled back to the summit and down the weary bleak eight miles to Platte Station, where they found shelter, food, and hospitable treatment. The coach of Thursday brought them into Leadville, and the men actually report that some employe of the stage company demanded fare of them.

McNamara and Burns sought legal advice, and have placed their suit for damages in the hands of Judge Nevison, of the firm of Tankersley & Nevison, of Leadville. Dr. Law being called in, examined the men, and found one of them had a leg solidly frozen. The Doctor thrust needles into the limb, and its owner never flinched. One hand of the other is badly frozen, being somewhat more severely holding a blanket in front of his face. The boys intend to push the suit to the bitter end. The damages sued for will be some $8,000 or $10,000 each.

SOME ENGLISH ACTORS.

RETIRED ACTRESSES — ORIGINAL OCCUPATIONS OF SOME WELL-KNOWN STAGE PEOPLE.

In noticing a book entitled The Dramatic List, by Mr. Eyre Pascoe, the London Daily News says: "Unhappily, the average period of an actor's career is, after all, but a brief period, if we reckon from the time when their merits become generally recognized to that of their final departure. Many there are here included whose professional course, though they are living, has for some time been really at an end. Mr. Buckstone, for example, whose professional life has been exceptionally long and prosperous, and who it appears was acting in public considerably more than half a century ago, has finally been compelled by infirmities to retire from the stage of the Haymarket, with which, since his final secession from the Adelphi in 1853, his name has been uninterruptedly connected. His old associate, Mme. Celeste, who is here stated to have been born in Paris in 1814, (ladies' ages, by the way, age, in dictionaries of contemporaries, notoriously untrustworthy,) has not been seen since October, 1874, when for 12 nights she reappeared in her old home, the Adelphi, and in her famous characters of Miriam Merle, in Mr. Buckstone's immensely popular melodrama "The Green Bushes." In the same category is Mrs. Charles Kean, known to an earlier generation as Miss Ellen Tree, who retired in 1868, on the death of her husband, with whom, on the stage as well as in the domestic circle, she had been inseparably associated. Mrs. Stirling, too, an actress who has left no equal in her peculiar way, is now seen only on the rare occasion of a benefit or some kindred interesting kind. The ladies of the stage, however, are subject to a peculiar sort of visitation, so to speak, which is apt to carry them off in the very moment of their triumphs. When a famous actor marries, he continues, as a rule, to act; but with an actress it is often not so. Thus, to confine ourselves to comparatively late instances, did Miss O'Neill vanish from the stage to become Lady Becher, and thus disappeared Mrs. Nesbitt when she married Sir William Boothby, and Miss Helen Faucit when she became Mrs. Theodore Martin; though now and then, on special occasions, the latter lady's Rosalind and Pauline Deschappelles have again delighted admirers, old and new. Miss Herbert and Miss Kate Terry are other examples of actresses thus prematurely removed from the stage to the great loss of the public. Mr. Pascoe has, no doubt, done his best to gather biographical particulars, but his task has not been an easy one. It would have been interesting if he could have told us more frequently from what business or profession his sprig of actor-nobility has been recruited. Acting, unlike most other pursuits, has, as we all know, neither apprenticeships nor articles of clerkship, though some players may be said to be to the manner born, or to have had by the accident of birth something like a regular training. That admirable actress, Mrs. Kendal, for example, was the daughter of a well-known traveling manager regularly 'going circuit,' as it was then called; and the Misses Leclercq were somewhat in the same position. Early instruction and practice is in such cases to be presumed. Miss Bateman was the daughter of a distinguished theatrical manager, and performed in regular plays under the popular description of an 'infant prodigy' when a mere child, as did Miss Lydia Foote. It is curious to observe that some of the clever little people who were playing a season or two ago in the pretty children's pantomime at the Adelphi are already emerging into the state of grown actresses, with their names rather conspicuously in the play-bills. These, however, are but exceptional instances. We have in England no institution corresponding to the Paris Conservatoire, nor have we many private trainers in the art of acting who do not themselves stand sorely in need of some little instruction. The ranks are practically recruited, as they always have been, from among stray enthusiasts who have deserted their predestined callings for the fascinating pursuit of theatrical fame. Garrick himself was an Adelphi wine merchant's traveling actor. Mr. Irving, it will be remembered, originally intended for mercantile life, and was for some time in the office of an East India merchant. Mr. Toole was also a clerk in a merchant's office; and Mr. Colvile was an officer in the Coldstream Guards. We also find instances of journalists, doctors, civil engineers, lawyers, artists, and foreign correspondents of city bankers. The greater number, however, of members of the profession was poor to have been reticent on these matters; and of the ladies we learn, as a rule, no more than their parentage; though the friends of the illustrious Mrs. Siddons, also an hereditary actress, were not ashamed to confess that she had once filled the situation of lady's maid at a salary of £10 a year."

DR. JACOB BIGELOW, OF BOSTON.

From the Boston Advertiser, Jan. 11.

Jacob Bigelow, M. D., who has long stood at the head of his profession in Boston, and whose exceptional literary and scholarly attainments, as well as his private character, have won him more than usual respect and honor, died at his residence on Mount Vernon-street, yesterday morning, at the age of 91 years. The name of Dr. Bigelow has for nearly half a century been intimately and prominently associated with Boston's literary and social history. Though a native of Sudbury, Mass., he was to all intent a Bostonian, having been educated at Harvard College and carried on his professional practice through life in this city. His birth occurred in the year 1789, and he graduated from Harvard in the class of 1806. He early attached himself to the study of botany, and in 1814 published his Florula Bostoniensis, a work on the plants of Boston and vicinity, which passed through at least three editions. In 1815 he was appointed Professor of materia medias and medical chemistry at Harvard, and retained the chair for 40 years. In 1816 he was also appointed first Rumford Professor of the university, an endowment founded by Count Rumford to teach the uses of science to the arts, and to the welfare of mankind, and he held this Professorship until 1827. His lectures delivered in the institution in this capacity, on the relations of science to the arts, were published in Boston in 1829, under the title of The Elements of Technology, a work subsequently enlarged by the author in his publication in 1840, under the title of The Useful Arts Considered in Connection with the Applications of Science. It was this work that first brought the word technology into familiar use. Between the years 1810 and 1820 Dr. Bigelow published in three volumes his work on American Medical Botany, a work notable for its accuracy and perspicacity. Perhaps his best-known professional work is a volume published in 1854 on Nature in Disease, embodying the author's discourses, essays, and miscellaneous papers on medical topics. Among these were his discourse "On Self-Limited Diseases," read before the Massachusetts Medical Society; his lecture on "The Treatment of Disease," before the students of the Massachusetts Medical College; an introductory lecture "On the Medical Profession and Quackery," in the same institution; an elaborate paper on "The Pharmacopœia of the United [illegible]

SOME OLD LONDON CLUBS.

ORIGIN OF THE SOCIAL ORGANIZATIONS OF THE PRESENT DAY.

From the London Globe.

The origin of clubs may be traced to two causes—political partisanship and the establishment of coffee-houses for convival meetings. Of the former we hear of the "King's" Club, which was formed a little after the return of King Charles II., and admitted into it only those who agreed in the surname "King," which it was imagined sufficiently showed that the members were untainted with anti-monarchical principles. As at the present day, a man would select his place of resort according to his political principles. During the reign of Queen Anne the "Cocoa-Tree," a chocolate-house in James-street, was reserved for Jacobites, while none but "Whigs" entered the St. James'. The club at the Mermaid Tavern, in Friday-street, was, according to all accounts, the first select company established with the view to good-fellowship and conviviality, and owed its origin to Sir Walter Raleigh. It comprised all that the age held most distinguished for learning and genius. There it was, in full flow and confidence of friendship, that the lively and interesting "wit combats" took place between Shakespeare and Ben Jonson, to which, probably, Beaumont fondly alludes in his letter to Jonson:

"What things have we seen
Down at the Mermaid! heard words that have been
So nimble and so full of subtle flame,
As if that every one from whom they came
Had meant to put his whole wit in jest."

But Ben Jonson's favorite club was the Apollo, which he appears to have founded, and which was held in a room of the old Devil Tavern. Over the door of the room was placed a bust of the poet, underneath which were inscribed in golden letters his own verses of salutation to the visitors:

"Welcome all, who lead or follow,
To the oracle of Apollo," &c.

The tavern stood between the Temple Gate and Temple Bar, and it eventually formed part of the banking-premises of Messrs. Child & Co., in whose possession, we believe, are the bust of the poet and the celebrated leges convivales drawn up by the poet in the purest Latin for the guidance of the club. A translation of those celebrated rules is still extant, entitled Rules for the Tavern Academy; or, Laws for the Beaux-Esprits. These convivial assemblies give an appearance of licentiousness to this period which in strictness does not belong to it. It must be remembered that domestic entertainments were at that time rare; the accommodation of private houses was ill-adapted for the purposes of social meeting; and there only remained taverns and coffee-houses for such meetings to be held. Long after the period we refer to we hear of the eminent characters of the day meeting at pastry-cooks', coffee-houses, and taverns. Addison tells us that most of the celebrated clubs of his day were founded upon eating and drinking, which are points, he says, wherein most men agree, in which the learned and illiterate, the dull and the airy, and the philosopher and the buffoon, can all of them bear a part. He then refers to the Kit-Cat," the "Beef Steak," and "October" clubs, whose names imply that neither of them would be averse to eating and drinking. The Kit-Cat was founded in 1700, and was held at the house of one Christopher Kat, a pastry-cook, renowned for his mutton pies. Another club, held at the King's Head, in Pall Mall, arrogantly called itself "The World," of which Lord Stanhope, Lord Cromartie, Lord Cheterfield, Lord Herbert, and other leading men of the day were members, and at which epigrams were scratched on the glasses by each member after dinner. Once, when Sir Yeomans Wynne was in the chair, he excused himself from conforming to this custom because he had no diamond. Lord Stanhope lent him his, and he immediately wrote:

"Accept a miracle instead of wit:
See two dull lines with Stanhope's pencil writ."

In 1800 there were only White's, Brooks', Boodle's, the Cocoa-Tree, Graham's, and another. White's, originally White's Chocolate-house, established in 1698, and the Cocoa-Tree, which was the Tory Chocolate-house in Queen Anne's reign, are the only existing representatives of the old convivial clubs. Our political, military, and other clubs of a representative nature are the creatures of the present century. The military seem to have taken the lead in the establishment of the Guards' Club in 1813, and the United Service in 1815, doubtless with the view of forming a refuge for the many officers who, at the termination of the Peninsular war, found themselves in London. Then the clubs which were followed by the universities and other learned and political societies, so that in the present day we have 40 well recognized clubs in the metropolis. Thus the social enjoyments of life may be traced in its progressive steps from the small associations, holding their meetings, as we have seen, at houses of entertainment, much in the same way as clubs of a lower grade do now, to the time when the club took possession of the house, and strangers could be only introduced under regulations by the members, until we arrive at the present stage, when they build for themselves houses, or rather palaces replete with every comfort that the luxurious taste of the age can suggest.

COUNTRY DOCTORS' HORSES.

HOW THEY AVOID DANGERS—SOME NOTABLE INSTANCES NARRATED.

From the Kingston Freeman, Jan. 11.

The physician who practices his profession in the country must necessarily have a life of considerable hardship, for no matter in what state the weather may be, or at what hour of the night, when a demand is made for his aid, if he would do his duty he must be ready and willing to give the service. In some of the mountainous regions in this county physicians attend families 10 or 12 miles from their offices, and are forced to travel that distance with a horse and wagon, generally over the worst roads known, and that, too, often in the night, when the way to an ordinary traveler would be one of great danger to limb and even a risk to life itself. These physicians, however, becoming acquainted, as they soon must, with almost every spot of ground in their circuit, and their horses, with that wonderful sagacity possessed by the most intelligent of these animals, acting as guides it might be said, in that kind of traveling, can generally go in places in perfect safety, at times when other men would run a chance of losing their way or in some other manner come to grief before they had gone over a dozen rods. So much dependence do physicians place on their horses that they have been known to fall asleep at night, when riding toward home, and be carried safely by their horses until they reached the doctor's residence. One of these gentlemen, practicing in the town of Wawarsing, was carried several miles in this manner over a dangerous road, where in portions of which if the wheels of his wagon had gone a foot from the track the horse, or members of the profession was thrown over a precipice a hundred feet in height. In going this distance, three bridges were safely crossed, and the Doctor was only awakened when the horse arrived at the closed gate near the barn and pawed for admittance.

As an illustration of the dangers to which physicians are exposed, last week when the wind-storm reached Shokan, the town of Olive, Dr. Hasbrouck, of Shokan, was at Kromville, about seven miles distant from home, and drove to Shokan in the night when the wind blew so hard it uncoofed buildings along the route, blew fences down in almost every direction, and often made a sleigh ride from the ground. While crossing the long bridge which stretches across the Esopus at Shokan, he found that three planks had been blown out of their place, and stopping his horse, he was about to alight and close the opening, when the animal, becoming restless, started, and, with a spring, cleared the space, taking the sleigh with him, and soon after coming to another place where planks had been blown out, the horse actually jumped over that opening also, taking with him in safety the sleigh and driver, so that the Doctor now claims that he has one of the best jumping horses in the country. It certainly was a very dangerous way of crossing the bridge, for the distance to the creek is far enough to break the neck of any horse should it fall through, and a man would be killed in the same or the same manner; though the Doctor is willing to stake his reputation that the horse knew he could go over the place in safety or he wouldn't have tried it.

CHRISTIANS AND ISRAELITES.

From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, Jan. 7.

The fire which destroyed the Second Baptist Church on Friday last was a misfortune long to be remembered by both minister and people; but it has served to give yet another proof of the truth of the saying that good cometh out of evil. The minister and his congregation had scarcely realized their loss before they received messages of condolence, often accompanied by offers of material aid. Nor were they confined to the accents of the special texts and observances of the Baptist creed. Lutheran, Methodist, and Episcopalian ministers and a Catholic priest were foremost in the good work of saving valuable books and papers on the flames, and the smoke of the ashes was hardly laid before another congregation set another example of warm-hearted and generous liberality. It was one not included in the Christian pale, but composed of a people who, from the earliest ages have worshiped the God of the Christians, and who, in all cases of distress, have been among the first to answer to an appeal for aid. As soon as the President and Trustees of the Israelite Temple Share Emeth heard of the loss, they held a meeting and, with the full concurrence and support of their rabbi, offered the Baptists, who were thus left without a church, the free use of the Temple until they could erect their own house of [illegible]

MONDAY, Jan. 13—A. M.

The statement of the Associated Banks, issued from the Clearing-house on Saturday last, was a favorable exhibit, showing a gain of $1,121,700 in the surplus reserve, thus raising the amount held by the banks in excess of legal requirements to $12,397,250. The legal-tender average shows an increase of $3,222,800, and the deposits an increase of $309,200. The other changes are a decrease of $3,568,000 in loans, $2,023,800 in specie, and $63,800 in circulation.

The following shows the condition of the City banks this week, compared with the previous statement, and with the statement for the corresponding week last year:

	Jan. 4	Jan. 11.	Jan. 12, 1878.

And the following the relation between the total reserve and total liabilities of the banks:

The monetary situation throughout the week was characterized by great ease, and loanable capital was in abundant supply, at very low rates. The majority of transactions in call loans on pledge of stock collateral were effected at 2@2½ ₱ cent., while borrowers offering Government bonds as collateral were accommodated at 2@2½ ₱ cent. There now seems every reason to believe that the Money market, for some time to come, will work smoothly. In the discount market prime mercantile paper, which was very scarce, was quoted at 4@5½ ₱ cent., according to date of maturity.

The foreign advices reported Consols at London strong, with an advance for the week of ⅛ ₱ cent. United States bonds were steady with the exception of 1867s, which fell off ½ ₱ cent., and 10-40s, which declined ¼ ₱ cent. In American railway shares, Illinois Central advanced 1⅝ ₱ cent., Erie, 3⅛ ₱ cent., the preferred, ½ ₱ cent., and New-Jersey Central Consols, 2 ₱ cent. New-Jersey Central stock showed a decline of 1 ₱ cent. The Bank of England gained £560,000 in specie during the week ending Wednesday, and since then £126,000 has gone into the bank on balance. The proportion of reserve to liabilities was 28¼ ₱ cent. against 28 7-16 ₱ cent. the previous week. The rate of discount remains at 5 ₱ cent. At Paris, Rentes were somewhat weak. The Bank of France lost 19,750,000f. specie during the week, and the Bank of Germany gained 1,820,000 marks in specie.

In the Sterling Exchange market the business for the week has been fairly active, having been stimulated both by the snow blockade and the Government calls for bonds. The rate for 60-day bills has been advanced from $4 83 to $4 84, while demand closes as it opened on Monday, at $4 88. It is useless at the moment to venture any opinion as to the future of the Sterling Exchange market, the influences controlling it being mainly speculative. While yet higher rates are likely to prevail we are inclined to think that regular remitters will consult their interests by supplying their requirements only as necessity demands.

Government bonds have been in very active demand, the immense purchases of the 4 ₱ cent. bonds being the feature of the dealings, which is regarded as the natural sequence to the successful accomplishment of the resumption of specie payments. The demand for these bonds has come from all sections of the country, and the dealers in Government securities report a large business in them over their counters. The Treasury Department issued three calls for 5-20 bonds of 1867 during the week, aggregating $30,000,000. In railroad bonds the business of the week has been larger than for a long time past, and the speculation has been very buoyant in tone. Without almost any exception, the entire list advanced steadily, and at the close an improvement of 1 to 7 ₱ cent. was established. Among the most active issues were the New-Jersey Central, New-York Elevated, Toledo and Wabash, Metropolitan Elevated, Denver and Rio Grande, and the Central and Union Pacifics. State bonds were generally dull and nominal. As an exception, however, there was a rather active business in North Carolinas, which made an advance of ½@2 ₱ cent. Louisiana Consols were extremely weak, and declined to 61⅜ bid, against 63 at the close of last week.

The stock speculation was rather dull throughout the greater part of the week, but, nevertheless, prices, as a rule, were well maintained. Toward the close the market assumed quite a buoyant tone, and under brisk purchases to cover short contracts and for the long account, an improvement was recorded, in which the entire list participated, with the single exception of Pacific Mail, which was adversely affected by the very unfavorable character of the report issued by the Directors in regard to the financial condition of the corporation. A steady demand for investment stocks prevailed at advancing quotations. The coal stocks shared in the upward movement, purchasers of the stocks being stimulated by reports, which were believed to be well founded, that negotiations were on foot looking toward a renewal of the coal combination, and with every promise of a satisfactory result. The dealings in Erie were on a large scale, and it is evident that the old-time favorite is destined once more to assume

The Signal Service Bureau report indicates for to-day, in this region, north-east backing to north-west and south-west winds, rising, followed by stationary or falling, barometer, partly cloudy weather, and slight changes in temperature.

The proposition referred to in our Washington dispatches for loaning to every settler on the public lands under the Homestead laws $500 to enable him to make necessary improvements, is the revival, in a slightly changed form, of a scheme that is nearly as old as the American Colonies. It is sufficiently absurd and extravagant, but it will doubtless find supporters more or less sincere now as in former times. The radical objection to it is that this kind of bounty-giving, once begun, has no assignable limits. If, for instance, the Government should lend money to settlers who have just received a farm as a gift from the Government, why should it not equally lend it to men who have only money enough to buy a farm; and if these two classes are to be gratified, why should not men with land, but no money to improve it, who have not received or purchased it from the Government, get a loan also? And if farmers are to be thus helped, why should shop-keepers, with shops and no means to stock them, be left in the cold, or deserving young couples able to rent a house, but not able to furnish it? Why not, in fact, adopt the Socialist theory in full, and every one live on the community at large? The reductio ad absurdum is as obvious as it is inevitable.

It is certainly a cheerful sign when the American iron-makers allow themselves to say that their trade is promising and that they do not need any addition to the tariff to protect them from foreign competition. This, it will be seen in our dispatches this morning, is the case. Though the entire number of furnaces in the United States decreased during the year by 16, and the number in blast by 10, the total production showed a very considerable increase. The stock on hand is also less than at the close of last year, and the net increase in consumption is not far from 200,000 tons. This state of things, of which some further illustrations will be found in the dispatches referred to, is explained by some special causes which have been in operation, and also, perhaps mainly, by the general revival of business, the commencement of which is generally acknowledged on all hands.

One would suppose that a man of so great power as Prince Bismarck could afford to be a little less impatient of criticism. The latest move attributed to his suggestion is the proposition of a law abridging the liberty of debate in the Reichstag to a degree which would be intolerable to a people accustomed to really representative government. The bill gives to a committee, composed of the two Vice-Presidents and ten members of the Reichstag, the power to inflict penalties on members, ranging from a public reproof to exclusion from the Reichstag for a fixed period. At the same time the member may be turned over to the courts, and may, by the action of the Reichstag, lose the right of being again elected. Further, the reproduction of the offensive speech is forbidden under heavy penalties. The American doctrine that falsehood is harmless so long as truth is left free to combat it, is probably too radical for the Junker Prince; but he might at least take a lesson from the recent history of France, where dangerous forms of Socialism are, by his own confession, completely disarmed by political liberty. The contrary policy to which the German Chancellor seems to have given himself over is so wholly hopeless, as well as so cruelly oppressive, that this last illustration of it is calculated to pain and dismay all true friends of Germany.

A gentleman who recently made complaint at the New-York Post Office concerning a registered letter, which was five days in coming from Albany to this City, was informed that the delay was caused by the fact that all the postal cars on the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad were snowed in at different points west from Albany, and, consequently, there was no one authorized to take charge of the registered letters. It would seem from this explanation that the postal-car system is run so narrowly, as to the force employed, or so inconveniently, that an accident at any point on a very long route may cause delay throughout its entire extent. The registered letters alone seem to suffer from this deficiency; but as these are uniformly of greater or less value, it ought not to be impossible to provide for their transmission under the charge of a special messenger, if necessary, where the delay is likely to be considerable. It is not unlikely that the limits imposed by the beggarly appropriations make such an arrangement difficult. If so, it is not the only or the most convincing illustration of that penny wise and pound foolish economy of which the Democratic House has made itself the champion and the public the victim.

Some interesting statements will be found in another column touching the management of convicts in Georgia, by which it will be seen that the old slave-driving spirit is not wholly extinguished in that State, and that its boasted superiority over other Southern States, to say nothing about the rest of the world, is not so firmly based on fact as might be desired. The practices which our correspondent recounts are some of them almost too repulsive for belief. Apart from the extravagance and corruption which mark the system, its combined cruelty and immorality will not escape attention. The scheme seems to be contrived for the benefit of a few favored contractors, who enjoy privileges without warrant in law, and which they abuse in a most shameful manner. Such abuses are not unknown in other States, but in Georgia they are in striking contrast with the arrogant pretensions so freely put forth to a Government by "the native and best" which is assumed to be a model for all other communities.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY AND RESUMPTION.

In the conduct of a great party, right and expediency should be convertible terms. The Republican Senators who met in caucus on Saturday wisely determined, therefore, that "it would be politic to make an effort to unite the Republicans" upon the subject of resumption. The effort, however, presupposes differences of opinion affecting the smooth working and permanence of resumption rather than the general policy whose alleged "eminent success" stimulates the Senators to action. Of avowed opponents of resumption, few were found in the Republican ranks. There were Republican Greenbackers in many of the States, and the party supplied its full quota to the movement which resulted in the Silver Law. Six months ago, too, there was a humiliating disposition to temporize, as the majority of State platforms show. If matters now stood as they were at the opening of the Fall campaign, the Senatorial committee would have difficulty in framing a resolution on which party unanimity could be secured.

But the change of opinion by which the caucus proposes to profit began in advance of resumption. It was found that, in the North and West at least, the party generally was sounder than many of its leaders in Congress and most of its representatives in State conventions. The demagogism which had asserted itself in Congress, and the time-serving which had dictated the platforms, were both rebuked by the mass of Republicans. The most popular speakers were they who were most decided in their advocacy of honest money and an untarnished credit; and the elements to which they ministered have, doubtless, contributed not a little to the condition of things which made resumption easy and safe. The same influences were felt in high places. Mr. Sherman's advance may have been in part occasioned by a clearer conception of the hindrances to successful resumption, but we may fairly assume that it was rendered more decided by a consciousness of the fact that the Republican Party had also advanced to a point of more decided hostility to the concessions and compromises which really were more dangerous to resumption than the direct resistance of its enemies.

Twelve days' experience of resumption cannot be considered decisive proof of its success, but it has produced an impression which few Republicans will venture to disregard. Sinister prophesies have been falsified and vague fears dispelled. No "run" occurred; no distrust has been manifested anywhere. Resumption is accepted as an accomplished fact; even those who imagined that the preliminary processes pinched them too severely have no disposition to disturb the result. Some grumbling is heard because the Treasury meanwhile confines its redemption operations to this City, but the prudential reasons which dictated this course are sufficiently apparent to prevent positive discontent. Bankers all over the country tell a tale corresponding to the testimony of the same class in the Atlantic cities. Of course, the men who are more anxious to cheat their creditors than to benefit their party or the country are still dissatisfied. They would force gold out of the country if they could. Business people, however, understand the bearing of resumption upon their own interests. It is not expected to work wonders; but it is relied upon gradually to re-establish confidence and to set in motion the wheels of industry and trade. Whatever indifference was felt upon the subject prior to the second of January has now disappeared. No sane politician would now attempt to undo what has been done or to declare war against the continuance of resumption.

And Republicans are slowly realizing the effect of what has been accomplished on the future of their party. Resumption being a Republican measure, its success contributes to the party's strength. The contest has been a tough one, and for a time the odds seemed to be on the wrong side. The law, however, Republican in its origin, has been administered by Republican hands, and, so far as the benefits arising from it are susceptible of a political construction, they will be favorable to the Republican cause. It will be remembered that the party which, on a former occasion, frustrated repudiation, has raised the greenback to a gold standard and restored the only basis on which financial confidence can rest. The achievement identifies with the party, more closely than ever, the moneyed and mercantile classes. It will be associated in the public mind with the policy whose early results are even now apparent, and whose whole tendency is to revive and strengthen the industries and enterprises which have been worse than dormant through five long years. The gain to the party will be substantial and lasting. Democratic tactics seem likely to give it an immediate value. We are not threatened with an open attack upon resumption, to be made by a united Democracy. But, unless the signs fail, the more active Democrats will in the next campaign wage war upon the national banking system as an auxiliary of the Treasury in resumption, and upon the conditions now regarded by the Treasury as essential to the lasting success of its policy.

The Senatorial committee, then, have need of firmness as well as clearness of purpose. The ultimate "eminent success" of resumption means a good deal more than the maintenance of things as they are. In its present shape, the Silver law is an evil whose magnitude steadily increases; while, in other than safe hands, the provision of law authorizing the reissue of greenbacks might render resumption impossible. The relation of the national banks to resumption, and the changes required to make them as powerful for good, in emergencies, as they ought to be, cannot be postponed indefinitely. These are aspects of the question which the Republican Party cannot properly ignore; and if Senators aim at the unity which signifies efficiency, they will not temporize with regard to them. Concessions at the cost of principle are bad enough at any time. Just now, they would be suicidal. Let us have sound principles as the foundation of unity, or wait until those who rank as leaders catch more of the spirit that animates the main body of the party.

RECENT COURSE OF FOREIGN TRADE.

The imports and exports for the month of November are thus reported by the Bureau of Statistics:

IMPORTS.

	1878.	1877.	Changes.
Mdse..	$38,102,823	$36,354,189	$1,748,634
Specie.	1,363,955	2,226,083	860,128

EXPORTS.

Mdse..	$70,092,328	$64,467,690	$5,624,638
Total..	$72,140,251	$66,032,544	$6,107,707

In 1877, as compared with 1876, goods imports showed a very heavy monthly increase from March to November inclusive; then came a decline monthly, by the same comparison, during nine months ending with August, 1878; September turned the other way, showing an increase of $2,600,000 over 1877; October showed a decline of $4,600,000 from 1877; and November shows an increase of $1,748,000 over 1877. In goods exports there has been much less fluctuation. Every month in 1878 has shown an increase over the corresponding month in 1877 and 1876; and except December, 1876, and March, 1878, there has been no month in the history of the country when the goods exports equaled those of November last. Taking the entire eleven months for comparison, we have the following:

IMPORTS, JANUARY—NOVEMBER.

Goods..	$400,127,922	$449,712,224	$49,584,302
Specie..	27,169,960	22,100,950	5,069,010
Total..	$427,297,882	$471,813,174	$44,515,292

EXPORTS, JANUARY—NOVEMBER.

Dom'c.	$656,971,324	$538,477,901	$118,493,423
F'r'ign.	12,715,217	11,539,313	1,175,904
T'l Gds.	$669,686,541	$550,017,214	$119,669,327
Specie..	25,402,654	46,399,670	20,997,016
Total..	$695,089,195	$596,416,884	$98,672,311

Goods imports show a decline of $49,580,000 from 1877, and goods exports an increase of $119,670,000, making a total change at the rate of $184,600,000 for the year. As to the trade balance the following shows the result for the eleven months, the first table excluding, and the second including, specie:

ELEVEN MONTHS ENDING NOV. 30.

Imp'ts.	$400,127,922	$449,712,224	$49,584,302
Exp'ts.	669,686,541	550,017,214	119,669,327
Exp't Exc'ss	$269,558,619	$100,304,990	$169,253,629
Imp'ts.	$427,297,882	$471,813,174	$44,515,292
Exp't Exc'ss	$267,791,313	$124,603,710	$143,187,603

The trade balance for the term is thus, $269,558,000, or at the rate of $294,000,000 a year; including specie, it is at the rate of $292,000,000. In specie alone the movement is as follows for the term:

Imports..	$27,169,960	$22,100,950	$5,069,010
Exports..	25,402,654	46,399,670	20,997,016
Net imports....	$1,767,306	.....	.....
Net exports....	.....	$24,298,720	.....

These last figures reduce somewhat the total standing as net import a month ago, but do not materially change the remarkable contrast between 1878 and 1877 in this respect, and the whole year will undoubtedly show a slight net receipt of specie by this country. Probably, however, the fact has by this time ceased to attract much attention, and has become accepted as a matter of course. Its significance and part in accumulating the coin reserve which alone made it possible to offer fulfillment of the legal-tender promises without finding any considerable desire for gold by those who have anything to exchange for it have already been pointed out, and now that the resumption day is past, the permanence of resumption depends upon the movement of foreign trade and the length of time the Silver bill is permitted to remain in operation, the status of silver continuing unchanged. As to the former, without pausing now to discuss it, we suggest that while a full return to the trade position of past years is not to be expected very soon, if at all, it would be unsafe to assume that the present position can long be maintained. The decline in imports must reasonably be expected to have some effect to reduce our exports, and that decline itself is unlikely to continue. Goods imports have shown great fluctuations from month to month during the last few years, and a change one way or the other is not enough to found an inference upon; still, it is noteworthy, that the imports in November were larger than in any month since October of 1877, and it is not improbable that the point of their extreme depression has been passed. The severe industrial troubles now pressing upon Great Britain, just as this country seems about to be relieved of them, naturally tend to an increase of our imports from her by forcing a reduction in the prices of her goods; and the same condition exists more or less in other countries which are our customers. If Congressmen could but be brought to see facts as they are and to take counsel of common sense, this prospect for foreign trade would seem, under the circumstances, an additional and cogent reason for not letting the session end without undoing the silver folly, which is about the most causeless and untimely, as well as stupid, piece of folly a nation ever committed in fiscal legislation.

THE CHEYENNE TRAGEDY.

The bloody affair at Fort Robinson is, let us hope, the final scene in an Indian drama which, from beginning to end, has been a disgrace to the Government and the people. The Cheyenne bands of Dull Knife and Old Crow are not, it is true, the sort of Indians to excite sentimental sympathy. They do not compare favorably with the peaceful, friendly, and humane Nez Percés of Chief Joseph and White Bird, who were driven to revolt in the Spring of 1877 by preparations to force them from lands that belonged to them by treaty. They committed many outrages, on their road through Kansas, that contrast with the chivalric sparing, not only of women and children, but of unarmed settlers, by the Nez Percé warriors. It may be admitted, too, that they were mischievous and restless, and that there was no absolute necessity for their escapade from the Fort Reno reservation on the night of Sept. 9. Nevertheless, it is a demonstrable fact that the Government had been shamefully remiss in its treatment of these Indians, and thus tempted them to the revolt which has had so bloody a course and ending.

These Cheyennes had taken part with Sitting Bull, on account of the military incursions of Custer, followed by those of the gold-hunters, into the Black Hills—a region pledged to Indian occupation by solemn treaty. But when Sitting Bull went to Canada, they left him and surrendered voluntarily, in the Spring of 1877, to Gen. Crook at the old Red Cloud Agency. They were told that they must remove to the Indian Territory. A part of them acquiesced; others, including Dull Knife's band, barely consented, as an experiment; others, like Little Robe's band, held back, and were only on their way eighteen months later, when Dull Knife escaped; and still others are far north, and have not gone yet. But when they went, it was on a specific agreement. We need hardly say that the military annals for the past eighteen months have been full of complaints that the conditions were not fulfilled, and that the Indians were dissatisfied. "All the Cheyennes are dissatisfied," reports one officer, "and complain that they are not receiving what was promised them; that they would be satisfied if they received what the treaty allows." But the matter is settled when we also find Agent John D. Miles, under date of Sept. 30, making an official report to Commissioner Hayt on the cause of the Cheyenne revolt, in which he says, after enumerating other troubles:

"In addition to these general grievances, and others relative to things which they claim were promised them as part of the consideration in obtaining their consent to come to this country; I will say that the full list of rations named in their treaty of 1876 has not been furnished them."

Agent Miles very properly goes on to show that he had done the best he could, and that he always gave the Indians plenty of beef, and also "such other rations as were in store," and that they were by no means starving. This, however, does not contradict his previous acknowledgment that the rations and other things promised on peaceful removal from their ancestral lands to a strange land and a strange climate had never been supplied. Can it be said that fifteen months was not long enough to wait for the fulfillment of the bargain? In addition, they were forced to do agricultural or other work, and when the warriors refused, their rations of coffee and sugar were stopped for weeks together, as Agent Miles' report shows. The Agent quotes department circulars of March and April, 1878, to justify him; but he does not quote any such justification from the treaty of 1876. The Indians made and acted up to the treaty, but they did not make or agree to subsequent department circulars or to acts of Congress.

Cheated under the contract for removal; forced, by cutting off their food supplies, to adopt at once occupations which, however foolishly, their customs had held degrading; prevented from going to hunt where game abounded, though other Indians, including some of their kindred who were still left north, could do so; and contrasting the malarial region in which they were with the healthy air of their old homes, they set out for the latter. They left their tents and everything in them; they did not strike a blow; it was only when they were pursued and attacked that they fought; and it was weeks after their battles, and only when soldiers and citizens closed in upon them, that they attacked the ranches on their route. After great exertions, the troops succeeded in capturing the fugitives, half-starved and half-frozen, in the Nebraska sand-hills, and took them to Camp Robinson.

That the dead of Winter should be chosen for their return to the Indian Territory was quite worthy of a Governmental policy which has repeatedly picked out this season for such purposes; that their refusal to go should be followed by disciplining them with starvation was perhaps not unexpected, because the Government first agrees to give Indians specific annual rations as a consideration for going to the Indian Territory, and then, when they have gone, cuts down the rations unless they will work. It had been intended to give up a good part of these Indian warriors in Kansas, on the way back, so that they might be tried and hanged; and it should not be surprising that they preferred to die in battle rather than at the end of a rope. These dead Indians have been officially abused with consolatory vigor as lazy, trouble-making, hoe-hating red rascals, who would rather hunt buffalo than draw rations, and who would rather die than obey department circulars; but is there, after all in this whole miserable business anything but a shameful record for the country and for the white race?

FALSE PRETENSES BEFORE MARRIAGE.

A woman in San Francisco has sued for a divorce from her husband, alleging as the ground of her complaint, that her consent to marriage was obtained under false pretenses. Of course, the plaintiff in this case regards marriage as a purely civil compact—a business transaction. She claims that she has been inveigled into a partnership by a false pretense. The pretension of the male partner was that he was in tolerably affluent circumstances, whereas, he was almost penniless. There are several odd features about this case, but the most striking one is that the pretended wealth of the husband consisted of an oil painting by "one of the old masters," and valued at $25,000. The name of the alleged old master is not given, but the lady believed her suitor when he exhibited it to her and declared that it was an undoubted original, and worth the sum above named. Now that she is married, she makes affidavit that, to the best of her knowledge and belief, the picture is not worth $25; and her opinion is shared by numerous experts. She affirms that she has been imposed upon, and she prays for a divorce from the impostor.

It will be seen at a glance that it may be difficult to prove that the picture-owning husband is an impostor. Perhaps the painting is a veritable antique of great value. Everybody knows how liable experts are to be led astray by their own prejudices or ignorance. Murillos and Titians have, before now, done duty as sign-boards for years without their true value being discovered. And sometimes it has happened that, after their transcendent merits have been made known by some expert, a rival "picture sharp" has asserted that the works should have been left undisturbed as sign-boards. The lady who is suing for a divorce on the presumption that she has been imposed upon with a worthless picture as a fortune, would be deeply mortified if, after she has, been cut adrift from her husband, it should turn out that a genuine Rubens, worth $25,000, had slipped through her fingers. Then, again, her hapless husband may have thought that he was the fortunate owner of a picture of great value. Such things have happened. Even in the learned and highly-cultivated society of New-York there are people who really believe that they own old masters, although the knowing ones wink at each other when they see these treasures, and say "rubbish." Every art connoisseur of repute will testify that he is constantly applied to by sanguine purchasers of queer canvases, who want a certificate that theirs is a Guido, a Rubens, or, at the very least, a Tintoretto, or a Velasquez. Men are perpetually digging up "old masters" in junk-shops, and paying trifling prices for black and blistered canvases which are expected to turn out to be worth a fortune. Perhaps the San Francisco husband was imposed upon instead of being an impostor.

But if women, as a rule, are to be inveigled into marriage by men who can pretend to have great riches in old paintings, the picture business will prosper. If, to gain the reputation of being well off in personal property, one need only show a collection of old masters, the foundations of a fortune may be laid at a trifling outlay. The Custom-house records exhibit some curious valuations. For example, there was imported, not long since, a Rubens valued at 15 francs. In the same lot an example of Poussin was valued at 10 francs, a Guido at 2 francs, and a work by David at 10 francs. In this remarkably cheap invoice the examples of modern, but deceased, masters were dearer than the old masters. Horace Vernet, for example, was set down at 15 francs; Henri Regnault at 50 francs; Picou at 250, Troyon at 18, and Diaz at 50, francs. But Watteau, for some reason, was not thought to be worth more than 5 francs, and one example of Corot was invoiced at 12 francs and another at 5. When a Rubens can be bought for $3 and a Guido for $4, why should not every man have his own old masters? or a houseful of them?

If false pretenses are to be used successfully as a basis for suits for divorce, the lawyers will be kept busy. If a woman can be divorced from a man who has falsely pretended that he was rich, why should not a man have equally good ground for complaint when he finds, after marriage, that his wife has not the angelic temper which she once pretended to have? or that she has false teeth? or the sorofula? or a cork leg? Let it once be established that married partners must be and have all that they profess to be and have before marriage, or be liable to the charge of imposture, and the bonds of society are fatally shaken. What man shows his true character and standing to the lady whom he is wooing with soft blandishments? What woman, with a woman's heart in her bosom, will confess to her lover that she "pads"? or that the family "do their own work"? or that her father made his fortune in selling swill-milk? Wild horses could not drag such secrets from the female breast. Nevertheless, in strict equity, the suppression of any of these facts, if they should be facts, would be just as truly a false pretense as the active promulgation of a fabrication. And if a condition of conjugal happiness is the exact statement of a man's income and possessions before marriage, it is apparent that an appraiser must precede the parson. It used to be said that marriage was a lottery. According to our present lights, it is a mere partnership investment. Persons contemplating matrimony will exhibit sworn schedules of their real and personal estate, or run the risk of a suit for a dissolution of partnership.

Popocatepetl, (meaning in Aztec smoky mountain,) which some of the excursionists from this City and Chicago expect to climb on arriving in Mexico, is about 10 miles south-west of the capital. It rises in the form of a cone 17,720 feet—near 2,000 feet higher than Mont Blanc—and is connected with Iztaccihuatl, another volcano, by a lofty ridge, which, as the Pass of Ahualco, is over 10,500 feet above the sea, and sometimes covered with snow. By this pass Cortez, accompanied by 6,000 Tlascalan Indians, made (1519) his bold march from Cholula to Tescuco and Mexico. He attempted to reach its summit, but was prevented by masses of snow. The feat was accomplished, however, by one of his followers, Francisco Montana, who let himself down into the crater by a rope some 800 feet. The mountain was not scaled again for more than 300 years, when it was done by Frederic and William Glennie. It has been frequently climbed since even by women. Popocatepetl is composed of porphyritic obsidian, and its lower parts are girded by forests; but at an elevation of 13,000 feet vegetation ceases. About the period of the Spanish conquest, it was very active, and it still smokes, though no eruption is known to have occurred since 1540. Thirty years ago, Capt. Charles P. Stone and five other officers of the United States Army went up, and observed several cones of eruption in the crater, and from these proceeded periodical discharges of sulphurous vapor and cinders, the larger masses of which constantly fell back into the crater. The American merchants who return from Mexico without ascending Popocatepetl will not have won their spurs of travel.

The management of newspapers here and in France is very different. In order to set up a journal there a Government warrant (brevet) is required in advance, carrying at its minimum 25,000 francs, (some $5,000,) as caution money. This is nominally held by the Government, which in return subscribes to so many copies, counting it as a kind of equivalent. As may be seen, this is a species of subvention or subsidy generated by Imperialism, and still continued by the Republic, which fears to make too many innovations upon established custom in a country composed of such variety of political opinions. The press of France, noticeably that of Paris, is hardly what it has been. Freedom of speech has run, in many cases, into licentiousness, and liberty of discussion into ribaldry and gross personal abuse. Low-priced journalism has introduced low morality and inferior talent. Still, the Paris newspapers are gradually working out of the slough of corruption into which the Third Empire cast them. All of them are not Figaros, Pays, and Gaulois. There are also Temps and Journals des Debats. One of the great editorial defects is want of supervision, conference, or agreement as to what shall be published. Each man, be he leader-writer, correspondent, or reporter, says, as a rule, what he likes or believes for the moment. The consequence is that the representative journal of the capital represents nothing but the passions and prejudices of each penman; and to form any idea of the policy or principle of the journal is no more possible than it would have been to learn a given language in the Tower of Babel. To this criticism, however, it must be said that the Republique Française, the principal Republican organ and the journal of M. Gambetta, is not open.

Elephants are not supposed, generally, to have any particular value except to showmen, but they have been killed so freely within the last 20 years in India, as well as in Ceylon and Africa, that they are getting comparatively scarce, and are, in consequence, improving in price. Steps have been taken recently to acclimatize the Indian elephant to the region of equatorial Africa, and it is not improbable that the success of the experiment may lead in that country to some facility of locomotion, the lack of which has always been the main obstacle to its opening up. The market for elephants is advancing, as may be seen from the fact that a herd of 55 wild Indian elephants, captured in one day, brought on the spot, not long ago, $20,000, or about $370 each. The elephant is growing more interesting, too. Persons who have studied the habits of the animal have come to the conclusion that he, not the lion, is the true king of beasts. The age of the elephant is still in dispute; but the best authorities agree in the opinion that, under favorable conditions, he lives to 150 years. The question, "What becomes of the elephants?" is still unanswered. No man appears ever to have seen an elephant that had died a natural death. The query which man has proposed so constantly and vainly to himself, "Where do we go when we die?" applies equally, though in a material sense, to elephants. We know that we die—that is a sensible fact; but the elephant's death, for he must die somewhere, of course, is, like our hereafter, a matter of faith.

The Revue Historique, founded in 1874 by G. Monod and G. Fagniez, and published every second month, has rapidly attained a very prominent position in historical literature, and it deserves it. During the nineteenth century French historiography has, in spite of its dazzling brilliancy, suffered from a very severe drawback. It was always polemical; it had always some special errand to do; even its greatest productions were tainted by the bias of the moment. By comparing the various accounts of the Revolution given by French authors before 1830 and after 1834, before 1848 and after 1852, before 1869 and after 1872, it becomes evident that the historical truth was never the sole object of the writer; he had always a political argument to make at the same time. Indeed, the manner in which the French historians have treated the period of the Revolution has, during the whole nineteenth century, been a pretty sure barometer with respect to the state of political feeling in France; even of the great work of Thiers, the various parts changed color according to the epoch of their publication. From this tendency the Revue Historique has entirely emancipated itself; it seeks truth and nothing else. Also another feature of its appearance is quite new. Before 1870 all French historians, with Guizot at their head, considered France as the centre of the whole modern history, and historical events in which France played no part they generally treated simply as moral examples or interesting illustrations. The Revue Historique has discovered that France is not the world, that there are and have been historical currents of the greatest importance, which, nevertheless, are and were entirely independent of French influence, and by paying due attention to this point it has not only enlarged but also elevated its own historical standpoint. Its reviews of what is going on in the historical department of foreign literature are remarkably full and remarkably correct, with the exception, perhaps, of America. What our historical societies produce seems not to the taste of the Europeans. Perhaps they don't know what to do with it. We will thus have to wait till we know it ourselves.

The commercial crisis of Stockholm is not yet over. Since our last notice two other great banking-houses have failed—Godenius & Co. and J. Hirsch & Co.—and great banking-houses are not counted in Stockholm by the dozen. All the houses which so far have failed have been more or less closely connected with the iron industry, and it is generally acknowledged that the present distress has, to a large extent, been caused by a change which, during the last ten years, has been introduced in the manufacture of iron in Sweden. The country is possessed of an immense amount of water-power. Sloping down, like the one side of a gable roof, from the Kjölen, which forms the boundary between Sweden and Norway, to the Baltic, it is traversed by a great number of powerful streams which move on with a rapid but tolerably even fall, and carry nearly the same mass of water all the year through. But, of course, water is a slow worker, and, what is still worse, its power cannot be concentrated or stimulated to any great degree. In the years between 1865 and 1875, when all commerce and industry had become feverish, the water-power was deemed too slow, and was dispensed with. Steam-power was introduced quite generally. But this change increased the cost of production so much that the profits were unable to carry the industry through a period of dullness like the present.

A correspondent of the London News says, in a recent letter, that "when Cæsar crossed the Rubicon he burned his boats." This was doubtless a slip of the pen. It was not there that Cæsar burned his vessels, for he could not have put them in so small a stream, as everybody knows who has seen it. The great Captain leaped into the Rubicon, according to tradition, and swam across, in defiance of the authority of Rome. The river which was the ancient Rubicon is still in dispute among the Italians. Three little streams claim the honor—the Uso, Urgone, and Fiumicino. The question was so zealously contested in the eighteenth century that an action was instituted at Rome, and decided in favor of the Uso. The peasants living on the banks of the last-mentioned stream still call it Il Rubicone. But many people argue vehemently for the Fiumicino. Recent investigations show that the Rubicon has entirely quitted its ancient course. None of the rivers, save at time of flood, are anything more than insignificant creeks.

FUNERAL OF HON. JULIAN HARTRIDGE.

Savannah, Ga., Jan. 12.—The funeral of the late Julian Hartridge took place to-day at 12 o'clock. The remains were taken from the Council Chamber, where they had lain in state during the night, under the escort of the Chatham Artillery, of which the deceased was an officer during the late war, to Christ Church, where the burial service of the Episcopal Church was read. The funeral cortège, escorted by United States troops and the white and colored Militia, then proceeded to Laurel Grove Cemetery, where the remains were interred. Immense crowds thronged the line of march. The funeral procession was the largest ever witnessed in this city.

AMUSEMENTS.

MR. STRAKOSCH'S CONCERT.

The concert at Booth's Theatre last evening attracted a full house. It was announced by Mr. Strakosch to be given to aid in defraying the expense of the musical education of Miss Marie Tuck, and several of the artists of the Italian opera troupe, with the orchestra and Mme. Teresa Carreno and M. Reményi, took part in this laudable enterprise. The programme was varied and interesting for a concert of this character, and was creditably performed throughout. Mme. Carreno and M. Reményi were the artistic successes of the evening, as might have been expected. Mme. Carreno's contribution to the programme was a performance of Liszt's fantasie on airs from "Faust," which she played in a brilliant and effective style, fairly earning the enthusiastic demand for an encore which she received. She is a pianiste of so much merit that it is to be regretted that she is not heard more frequently. M. Reményi played in his best and most characteristic way the Andante and Rondo of Mendelssohn's Concerto in E, with the orchestra, and afterward Ernst's "Elégie," a song composed by Mr. Korbay, of this City, and a transcription of one of Chopin's mazurkas. He was received with favor and responded to the applause of the audience with his own "Valse Noble," in which he exhibited his peculiar style. The vocal part of the concert was supplied by Miss Marie Litta, who was recalled, though she sang coldly and without spirit; Signorita Galimberti, who sang "Di tanti palpiti," and excited, as she always does, the enthusiasm of the audience; Mr. Westberg, who gave an artistic rendering of Gounod's Serenade, with cello obligato, and Mr. Gottschalk. It was an enjoyable entertainment, creditable to the artists who took part in it, and doubtless satisfactory to the young lady for whose benefit it was given.

THE ITALIAN OPERA.

Mr. Strakosch's season of Italian opera at Booth's will continue two weeks longer. This evening "Il Trovatore" will be the opera, and Signor Rosnati will make his first appearance as Manrico. Miss Kellogg will be Leonora, Miss Cary Azucena, and Signor Pantaleoni Di Luna. To-morrow evening, Miss Giulia Mario (Mrs. J. R. Polk) will be heard for the first time in "Traviata." On Wednesday "The Huguenots" will be sung; "Rigoletto" will be the opera on Thursday night, and Mr. Strakosch announces the production of "Carmen" for Friday.

FOREIGN NOTES.

There are now 37 theatres in London.

"Diplomacy" is still being performed in London, although it has now been kept on the stage for over a year.

Mlle. Zare Thalberg, tired of holiday-making in Barcelona, has signed for a concert tour in Holland early in the new year.

The Christmas number of the London World contains a lithograph called "At the Play," filled with the portraits of distinguished "first-nighters."

Jules Verne and M. D'Ennery have collaborated in a play called "Les Enfants du Capitaine Grant," which has just been produced in Paris with remarkable success.

In the January number of the Theatre Mr. Tom Taylor describes the manner in which "The Fool's Revenge" was written and first produced. The part of Bertuccio was designed for the late Mr. Phelps.

Miss Neilson, who is now in Italy, will appear at the London Adelphi in February next, supported by Miss Lydia Foote, Mr. Neville, Miss Pateman, Mr. Hermann Vezin, Mr. Flockton, and Mr. Ashley.

The Italian papers state that Mme. Patti has agreed to give eight representations at the San Carlo in Naples at the salary of £400 a night, the sum to include Signor Nicolini, who, as usual, is thrown into the bargain.

It is decided that the part of Gervaise in the "Assommoir" at the Paris Ambigu will be played by Mme. Hélène Petit, who will be lent by M. Duquesnel for the purpose, as she will not appear in "Samuel Brohl" or in either of the two other pieces which are to be brought out at the Odéon at about the same time.

The London Figaro remarks with a touch of malice: "Herr Anton Wallerstein announces that he has bidden farewell to the Neue Frankfurter Presse, and that in 50 years he has composed more than 300 dances. Perhaps the most fitting punishment would be to compel this aged Teutonic sinner to dance his 300 waltzes all at once."

The long-contemplated production of "Hamlet" at the Lyceum Theatre, London, has at last become a reality. Mr. Irving's performance needs no comment at this late hour. In general, says a leading critical writer, "everything connected with the Lyceum gives ground for the hope that at length we have a manager with the ability and the disposition to do justice to the national drama."

The London Telegraph mournfully observes: "We have, in glancing through the limited list of theatrical novelties produced since last January, once more to note that no dramatist has yet come forward to supply the vacant place of any one of the comedy writers of the past. That nearly all the popular places of the year have been adaptations is to be recorded as more complimentary to the resources of the French stage than creditable to our own."

FROM THE SEA TO SAHARA.

A PLUNGE INTO THE DARK CONTINENT.

A STEEP RAILROAD TO A CITY IN THE AIR—CONSTANTINE AND ITS QUAINT SURROUNDINGS—IN THE MIDST OF THE DESERT—SOLITUDE AND DESOLATION.

From a Special Correspondent.

CONSTANTINE, Saturday, Dec. 7, 1878.

Constantine, or, as its inhabitants poetically call it, the City in the Air, is undoubtedly the most picturesque spot of Eastern Algeria, which may account for its absolute neglect by the majority of European tourists. But although many pages would be required to do justice to its attractions and to those of the ascent thither by rail from the seaport of Philippeville, the two days' coasting voyage to that place from Algeria may be summed up in a very few words. Beautiful as the little towns of the African seaboard undoubtedly are, the whole five of them—Dellys, Bougie, Djidjelli, Collo, Philippeville—are as exactly alike as if originally issued in monthly numbers. In each and all one finds a deep, crescent-shaped bay shut in by frowning cliffs; a vast slope of dark-green mountain, with a little white town pasted on it like a postage-stamp; a long, low breakwater, white with lashing waves; a tri-color flag waving majestically over a fort about the size of an inkstand; a kind of miniature "great wall of China," pock-marked with unnecessary loop-holes, running up hill and down dale into places where no enemy would ever think of going, or could do anything if he did; one big new hotel thrusting itself forward from the mass of houses, like some white waistcoated John Bull elbowing his way into a front seat at the opera; and a population consisting chiefly of Arab beggars, who, with their gaunt faces and trailing white robes, look as if they had risen from the dead in such a hurry as to have not even thrown off their winding sheets.

But the Philippeville-Constantine Railway is a sight too good to be lost. It has not, indeed, the breakneck gradient of the Russian railway through the Caucasus, nor does it indulge in the eccentricities of the Brazilian line from Belem to Entre Rios, where I counted seven tunnels in three and a half miles, and where the track makes so sharp a curve at one point that if the train be a long one the passengers in the last car may exchange looks with their friends in the first, across a chasm of unknown depth. But, nevertheless, the ascent is very respectably steep, as may be gathered from the fact of the 57-mile journey occupying 4¼ hours! Nothing can be more striking than the gradual change from the wide, sunny valley, with its rich vegetation, to the gray moors and bare, stony uplands beyond, ending at last in one great wave of black, craggy mountain, flecked with new-fallen snow. The two highest peaks of this range, poetically known as the Twin Sisters, wear a very grim look under the shadowy twilight which covers the final hour of the way; while the passage of the last ridge before Constantine, when, in the spectral gleam of the rising moon, you look out from your car-window down a sheer precipice of several hundred feet, recalls the nerve-shaking passes of the Chilian Andes. It must be owned, however, that the improvements introduced by French civilization, while materially enhancing the comfort of the journey, absolutely kill its romance. Lying back in a well-cushioned seat, in a car whose lounges and settees would not disgrace any "Pullman" in America, it is literally impossible to realize that one is actually traversing a range of African mountains which, barely 35 years ago, were all ablaze with the worst horrors of barbaric warfare. Indeed, although the assertion savors of a bull, the happiest moment of a tour usually comes after it is ended. While the work is still in hand, the petty wants and annoyances of every-day life—heat, dust, flies, hunger, draughts, tight boots, and what not—hedge one in with a common-place atmosphere which mars the effect of the grandest surroundings. Were every traveler to make a truthful record of his feelings during a prolonged tour, it would probably run somewhat as follows:

> "By cool Siloam's sparkling rill
> My foremost thought was brandy;
> My wish upon the Pincian Hill
> To have my slippers handy;
> Beneath the Peak of Teneriffe
> I dreamed of chops a-frying,
> Sadly longed for bottled stout and beef
> While off Amalfi lying."

But when all is over, the memory of the glorious scenes through which one has passed has leisure to do its work, and to make its impress indelible. But how shall I describe Constantine? Seen for the first time, in the silence and loneliness of midnight, far up against the moonlit sky, it looks more like one of those phantom cities that haunt the fancy of Gustave Doré, than any habitation of living men. Nature herself might seem to have cut it off from the living world by the black and hideous chasm that yawns impassably around it on all sides but one, in the gloomy depths of which one can barely descry a gray, sullen stream winding amid masses of fallen rock, like a serpent shrinking from the light. The most formidable part of this tremendous gap is now spanned, close to the railway depot, by a magnificent iron bridge, over whose balustrades it may well try the strongest head to look down. But, in addition to these natural defenses, this miniature Gibraltar has a wall of its own, with double gates, which are shut every night at sunset. It is difficult to imagine a grander spectacle than that which presents itself to any one standing at daybreak upon the western angle of the rampart. As the morning mists roll away like the smoke of a battle, the great masses of wooded mountain deepen from gray to crimson, hilltop after hilltop catching the growing light, till all is one broad blaze of glory. Then, in one moment, the whole expanse of the beautiful valley bursts into view, rock and river, field and wood, village and waterfall, coming forth in all their splendor. Far down among the broken rocks, a white-cloaked Arab is herding his black, dwarfish goats, and springing from crag to crag as nimbly as they. On the other side, where a narrow neck of sloping ground bridges the encircling chasm, the camels of a passing caravan are slowly raising their huge, gaunt limbs from the earth, while the long, white robes of their masters are seen flitting spectrally to and fro preparing for the start. Suddenly a shrill bugle-call pierces the air, followed by the quick tramp of soldiers and the roll of a drum. A few minutes later the gates are thrown open and in stream a motley throng of bare-limbed Arabs, laden donkeys, blue-bloused workmen, red-capped native boys, jaunty Spahis in white gaiters and scarlet trousers, and the day is fairly begun.

IN THE SAHARA. Tuesday, Dec. 10, 1878.

I write on a ledge of sun-parched rock, rising abruptly from a wide, sandy plateau, with the black tents of an Arab camp dotting the hot, brassy surface on one side, and the white wall of a little French fort standing jauntily up on the other, in front of which some scores of blue-coated soldiers are waking the echoes with the sharp crack of their platoon-firing. Just below me a string of laden camels are gliding past with their long, noiseless stride, attended by a dozen of the stalwart Sahara negroes, whose white robes and dark, leathery faces give them the look of cigars wrapped in paper. On three sides rise the bare, rocky mountains, split by innumerable gulleys, through which we toiled all yesterday; while on the fourth, beyond the dark masses of plumy palms [illegible] burning, merciless sky, and the dim, unending level of the great desert, melt into each other in the depth of a distance which seems to have no end. The solitude of the Sahara has hitherto remained tolerably inviolate, but the outer world is now threatening to inundate it more effectually than M. De Lesseps' projected canal, and a few years more will make its northern border a fac-simile of Hood's country churchyard, which was "crowded with young men striving to be alone." The railway from the port of Bona to Constantine is already open as far as Guelma, very nearly half the entire distance, while the prolongation of the Philippeville-Constantine track to Batna, the starting-point of all excursions into this part of the desert, has advanced so far that the end of the coming year will probably find it completed. Even the desert itself has been invaded by the wheels of the diligence, which goes from Batna to the oasis of Biskra in 15 hours, stopping at that of El-Kantara to give its passengers a very good breakfast at the snug little white restaurant which clings like a daisy to the foot of the tremendous precipice that shuts in the famous gorge. At Biskra itself, M. Médan's comfortable Hotel du Sahara, a quaint little toy-house, with a garden as small as itself, affords a very passable lodging to those who have no ambition to go further, but all who can stand the four days' ride across the desert should certainly push on to Tugurt, and see for themselves the little islet of semi-civilized life which represents France's furthest advance into this great sea of desolation.

To attempt a description of the Sahara itself would be as futile as to try to photograph it, although the photographs which I bought at Biskra certainly represent it as fairly as human skill can do. A lecturer on natural forces once concluded his discourse as follows: "The rotatory motion of the earth being thus communicated to our own bodies, it follows that, were that motion suddenly arrested, we should each and all of us describe a parabola, which would probably be the only description that we should ever be able to give of the occurrence." So it is with the great desert. One may call it vast, barren, lifeless; one may compress its mighty desolation into the hard exactness of so many leagues, so many square miles, but no language can convey the faintest idea of the vastness amid which the proudest European army would be dwarfed into a mere swarm of ants, the wonderful clearness of atmosphere that makes a palm 10 miles off seem close at hand, the tremendous silence that weighs upon one like a nightmare, the overwhelming loneliness that blots out all sense of human companionship, and makes one feel utterly alone amid a dozen noisy comrades. As for the "uncivilized Arabs," many of them are becoming civilized, in certain points, quite rapidly enough. I, myself, sat "bodkin" for a whole night, in the coupe of the Batna diligence, between two of these "tameless sons of the desert," whose black eyes and grinning teeth, half-seen through the folds of the huge white burnouse, started out spectrally enough in an occasional glare of lamp-light. There were half a dozen more of them in the intérieur; and when they all emerged together at the half-way station, in the shadowy splendor of the moonlight, the effect was precisely as if a group of dead men on their way to the grave had suddenly jumped out of the hearse, and bolted, taking their grave-clothes along with them. But further away from the outposts of civilization, in the region which is peculiarly his own, this strange outlaw of humanity has a grim picturesqueness still. The great French painter, whose Arab pictures have made his name world-famous, could have made for no finer tableau than the group which passed me this morning—a couple of mounted Spahis, guarding 10 or 12 captured Bedouins. It would be hard to imagine a more magnificent contrast than these two opposing types of the same race, the soldier Arab, erect in his saddle, gay with the white and scarlet trappings of civilized warfare, his loaded carbine ready to his hand, every line of his firm manly face expressing the mixture of daring confidence and machine-like exactness which discipline alone can give; the robber-Arab, tattered, barefooted, manacled, swathed in a dirty white blanket, with the matted hair and sullen sidelong glance of a beast of prey.

Another very picturesque feature of the Sahara is its quaint little negro villages, whose gray walls of sun-dried clay, clustering palms, flat-roo ed, windowless houses, and white-frocked bobgoblins crouching in low, dark door-ways or slumbering peacefully in the dirt, are an exact copy of the Fellah hamlets of the Nile. These worthy aborigines still regard all strangers with a suspicion bordering upon hostility, while the very dogs, huge gaunt beasts, of a whitish-yellow color, suggestive of an ill-cooked omelette, seem to be good Mohammedans, and fly at every Christian with a heartiness of religious feeling that would entitle them to a high place in the Church of England. But such evidences of civilization exist only in the oases, which are the islands of this sandy ocean, and along the dreary wastes that lie between the sole token of human life is the whitened skeleton, half buried in drifting sand, of a horse, a camel, or perhaps a man, recalling the magnificent, unconscious sarcasm of good old Mungo Park: "When I had now been a long time in this trouble, and all hope of being saved was taken away, on a sudden I lifted up my eyes, and beheld afar off a man hanging in chains upon a gibbet; whereupon I knelt down and gave hearty thanks to Almighty God, who had been pleased to conduct me once more into a Christian and civilized country."

MISS CLARA MORRIS IN SAN FRANCISCO.

From the San Francisco Alta, Jan. 5.

On Thursday evening, Mr. Barton Hill left for the East in the interest of the management of the California Theatre. It is nearly five years since he wended his wey across the mountains. A great deal of interest has been attached to obtaining a knowledge of his mission. From a variety of sources we learn that Miss Clara Morris has entered into an arrangement by which she will play a season at the California Theatre, her terms being 65 per cent., and she to furnish six artists, who are to strengthen her support. These she has selected, and it is Mr. Hill's object when he reaches New-York to engage them. Miss Morris will produce all the plays of her two last engagements in this city, and several new ones. The exact date of the commencement of her engagement at the California Theatre is not fixed, but it will conclude before the first Monday in May, as on that date she is under contract to appear in Chicago. We also learn that Miss Morris' last terms at Baldwin's Theatre were $2,000 a week, and that it was a refusal to accept $1,500 a week for another engagement that caused the present arrangement to be made.

AN OFFICER RESCUES TWO CHILDREN.

A fire broke out at 6 o'clock last night in the basement of the four-story brick tenement at No. 315 Delancey-street, occupied by Michael Duffy as a rag store, damaging his stock to the amount of $100, and destroying about $350 worth of furniture on the floors above. The building became filled with a black, stifling smoke, and the panic-stricken occupants fled in terror to the street. When Mrs. Maggie Moore, who occupied the fourth floor, got to the street, she recollected that her two small children, Tilly, aged 5 years, and Emily, aged 7 years, were asleep in their room, and she swooned. The news spread rapidly, and created great excitement. At the time the house was still afire, a dense cloud of smoke was issuing from every aperature in the building, and no one dared to approach the place. Finally, Officer Michael Gorman, of the Thirteenth Precinct, heard of the children being in the house. He did not hesitate a moment, but learned the location of the children's beds, and at once entered the building. He crawled with his face to the floor all the way up to the fourth floor, found the two little girls grasped them in his arms, and managed to crawl all the way out with them and deliver them to their mother. The children were not seriously injured, but were close to the verge of suffocation. When the crowd saw Gorman, after his long absence in the building, emerge with the little girls in his arms, they set up a tremendous cheer, and Mrs. Moore fell at the officer's feet and cried out: "God bless you! God bless you!" Gorman, almost suffocated, and was somewhat [illegible]

SINGERS ON THEIR TRAVELS

MAPLESON'S TROUPE OFF FOR THE WEST.

A CONTINUOUS JOURNEY FROM BOSTON TO CHICAGO—TO NEW-YORK THROUGH A SNOW-STORM AND A MOONLIGHT TRIP AROUND THE BATTERY—COL. MAPLESON ENTHUSIASTIC AND HIS SINGERS HAPPY.

Col. Mapleson, and all the members of "Her Majesty's Opera Company," with the exception of Miss Minnie Hauk, who had been sent ahead as a precautionary measure, reached New-York from Boston about 3 A. M. yesterday on their way to Chicago. A TIMES reporter stared for the Mott Haven Station, by way of a Third-avenue slow transit horse car, at 2:30 A. M., and finished the journey about an hour and a half later. The car was heated by the same patent principle in operation on the East Side elevated road, namely, the generation of animal warmth from the packed freight of passengers, and the tediousness of the journey was almost neutralized by the amusing conversation of the complaining men and women. A smart walk across Harlem Bridge, which was deserted save by a sleepy policeman who was balancing his body against his locust club, which he had placed against a pillar of the bridge, and a slippery run down the frozen path crossing the Boulevard, led down to the station, the only signs of occupancy around which, from a distance, were the glimmering lanterns of the station hands. In the dark interior of the passenger-rooms resounded the snores of the slumbering station-men, but the door of a private room, opening suddenly, sent a bright ray of light into the darkness, and revealed a small party of five gentlemen, sitting upon inverted counting-house stools, and playing euchre in grim silence upon a lap-board. Edwards, one of the bosom friends of the late Harry Montague, the actor, recognizing the reportorial intruder, and surmising the reason of his presence, shouted out, "I've been waiting for that train since 11 o'clock, and she hasn't got here yet, and here it is nearly 4 o'clock, only two and a half hours behind time." The intruder came into the game, but "passed" on the hand he received. All the rest passed on their hands also, including Edwards. But his was a peculiar "pass." He passed his hand into the back pocket of his coat, and then drawing it back showed it up, revealing an object carefully wrapped in a copy of an esteemed contemporary. The party pronounced this the best "trick" played during the long hours they had been waiting for the belated palace cars, and a cork being drawn from the wrapped-up object, it was passed all round for sampling, and then the game was continued. The clock struck 4 during these proceedings, and half an hour later the stirring of slumbering men, some subdued explosions of profanity in the outer room, together with the ticking of the telegraph instrument, warned the party that something was coming. Shortly afterward the door was partially opened, and a shaggy head was stuck into the aperture, followed by the cry, "Here she comes at last." The station then suddenly awoke into life, and down the track, near the river, where the reflected lights of the Maryland glimmered and danced upon the rippling water, the Boston train came puffing and snorting with a great ado.

It was a long train of freight and passenger cars, the roofs and platforms of which were thickly covered with snow. There was but one palace car. It was brightly painted with red, and its roof and platform were free from snow. Painted on its side in large golden letters was the inscription, "Her Majesty's Opera Company. Col. Mapelson's Private Car." The TIMES reporter at once boarded this car, and knocked at the door. It was opened by a fat colored young man, who declined to take in a card to Col. Mapleson, and recommended the visitor to the Colonel's agent in the "other car." Signor Angelo, the agent in question, was found in the "other car," among the "chorus." This body presented a sorry plight, as they were cooped up in all sorts of uncomfortable positions in an ordinary passenger car, their efforts to woo tired nature's sweet restorer only reducing them to a drowsy irritability. He was also a member of the mendicant Academy of Medicine. Dr. Ranney belonged to a family of physicians. Five of his brothers and a nephew are now practicing physicians. These are James W., E. W., Lafayette, Martin L., and Ambrose L., Lafayette's son, all in this City, and Stephen Ranney, who is practicing in Vermont. The Doctor leaves his widow in comfortable circumstances. His two children do not survive him. The immediate cause of Dr. Ranney's death was heart disease, although he had been in failing health for several weeks. His remains are to be taken to his native State for burial.

EDWARD WALKER.

Edward Walker, a well-known retired bookbinder and publisher, of this City, died at his residence, in Yonkers, on Saturday, at the ripe age of 75 years. Mr. Walker was a native of England, and came to this country about 1832. He built up a prosperous book-binding and publishing business in this City, from which he was able to retire with a competency a few years ago, leaving his two sons to carry it on. During the early days of the rebellion Mr. Walker became a member of the Union League, and took an active part in sending off the first colored regiment to the seat of war. He held several prominent positions in the American Institute and other associations, and at the time of his death was a Trustee of the Bowery Savings Bank. He was a man of liberal views and great charity. He leaves a widow and five children, two sons and three daughters.

FRANK MORDAUNT, THE ACTOR, MISSING.

Frank Mordaunt, the well-known actor, attached to the Fifth-Avenue Theatre, was reported to Inspector Dilks, at Police Head-quarters, last night, as missing under suspicious circumstances. The report was made at the instance of Mrs. Mordaunt, who is exceedingly worried over her husband's singular absence. She says Mr. Mordaunt left his home at an early hour on Saturday morning and has not been seen nor heard from since by any of his friends. Mrs. Mordaunt says she fears her husband has met with foul play. She bases her fear upon her knowledge of the fact that he has enemies. Mordaunt was last evening engaged in land duties, but in 1870-1 he was in command of the Brooklyn, on the European Station. He was appointed commandant of the Portsmouth Navy-yard in 1877.

DR. HENRY D. RANNEY.

Dr. Henry D. Ranney, an old, and well-known New-York physician, died at his residence, No. 227 West Thirty-fourth-street, Saturday afternoon, aged 61 years. He was a native of Vermont, and was a son of Dr. Waitstill Ranney, who was for several years a member of the Vermont Senate, and was Lieutenant-Governor of the State from 1838 to 1840. Dr. Henry Ranney completed his studies at the Albany Medical College, and began the practice of medicine at Westport, Essex County, in this State, where he remained seven years. In 1841 he married a sister of Mr. Gardiner Billings, then residing in New-Hampshire. Twenty-five years ago Dr. Ranney came to this City, and soon succeeded in securing a lucrative practice in his profession, which he retained during the remainder of his life. During his residence here the Doctor delivered many popular lectures on anatomy and physiology, and for some years was a Deputy Coroner while his brother, Dr. James W. Ranney, was Coroner. He was for many years a member of the School Board of the Twentieth Ward, acting as Chairman of the board during most of the time. He was Vice-President of the North River Savings Bank up to Jan. 1, when his term of office expired, and, owing to ill health, he declined a re-election. Dr. Ranney was also a member of the Sanitary Committee of Seventy in 1871. At the time of his death he was a prominent member of the Broadway Tabernacle, where he was Chairman of the church association for the relief of the poor and the leader of a large Bible class. He was also a member of the Academy of Medicine. Dr. Ranney belonged to a family of physicians. Five of his brothers and a nephew are now practicing physicians. These are James W., E. W., Lafayette, Martin L., and Ambrose L., Lafayette's son, all in this City, and Stephen Ranney, who is practicing in Vermont. The Doctor leaves his widow in comfortable circumstances. His two children do not survive him. The immediate cause of Dr. Ranney's death was heart disease, although he had been in failing health for several weeks. His remains are to be taken to his native State for burial.

OBITUARY.

COMMODORE JOHN GUEST, U. S. N.

Commodore John Guest, commandant of the Portsmouth Navy-yard, died yesterday of gastric fever and heart disease, combined with a kidney trouble. He leaves a wife and a daughter—who is the wife of Lieut. Seymour, United States Navy—and four sons, one of whom is Lieutenant in the Eighth Cavalry. The remains will be taken to Philadelphia on Tuesday, and the funeral will take place on Thursday. Commodore Guest was 58 years of age, and was born in Missouri. He entered the naval service as Midshipman, Dec. 16, 1837, and after nearly six years of service in that capacity was promoted to the rank of Passed Midshipman on June 29, 1842. In 1844 and 1845 he was engaged on the steamer Poinsett in the survey of Tampa Bay. During the Mexican war he was attached to the frigate Congress, and took part in the battles of San Gabriel and Mesa. On Dec. 24, 1850, Guest was commissioned as a Lieutenant, and assigned to duty with the Japan expedition under Commodore Perry, during which visit the first landing by Americans was made in that country. From 1851 to 1855 he was with the East India Squadron, and did heroic service in several sharp fights with the Chinese at Shanghai. He was assigned to special duty at Washington in 1855, and in 1857-8 was attached to the Niagara, while that vessel was engaged in laying the first Atlantic cable. In 1861 he was placed in command of the Niagara, and subsequently of the Owasco, and was engaged at Forts Jackson and St. Philip, and at the capture of New-Orleans in 1862. He also took an active part in the battles on the Mississippi in the same year, up to and including Vicksburg. He was made Commander July 16, 1862, and, still in command of the Owasco, assisted at the capture of the Galveston forts. He was transferred to the iron-clad Dungeon on in 1863, which was the first vessel fitted with a spar torpedo. In 1863-4 he was engaged in convoy duty in the West Indies, and was subsequently in command of the steamer Iosco, which was engaged in the two attacks on Fort Fisher. On July 25, 1866, after 29 years of nearly continuous service, Commander Guest was promoted to the rank of Captain, and on Dec. 12, 1872, was made Commodore. Since the close of the war Commodore Guest has been mostly engaged in land duties, but in 1870-1 he was in command of the Brooklyn, on the European Station. He was appointed commandant of the Portsmouth Navy-yard in 1877.

WALKING DAY AND NIGHT.

MME. ANDERSON'S SUNDAY TRAMP.

WHAT SHE DOES WHILE OFF THE TRACK—THE LONG WALK TO BE FINISHED TO-NIGHT—THE PLUCKY WOMAN AT TIMES NEARLY OVERCOME WITH DROWSINESS.

While for the majority of people yesterday was a day of rest or recreation, it was certainly neither for Mme. Anderson, the Englishwoman, who is nearing the end of her 28 days' walk in Mozart Garden, in Brooklyn. Through the long hours of the day she answered the call-bell promptly at the beginning of each quarter, and pluckily trudged the weary rounds. All day the front entrance to the garden and the bar were closed, but through a side door a never-ceasing stream of visitors poured in and out from early morning until morning again, and at any hour of the day or night the spectators of the walk could be counted by hundreds, and during the afternoon and evening by thousands. Among these spectators, shortly after noon, were several, if not more, who, by their conversation, had evidently just come from listening to the harangue of Mr. Talmage. Brooklyn has become very much interested in Mme. Anderson, and her enthusiastic admirers watch her by night as well as by day. Yesterday morning at 4 o'clock 500 spectators were in the hall, and of these a dozen or so were women. A few nights ago, one lady, who had made a small wager that the Madame did not walk all night, entered the hall at 8 o'clock in the evening, and did not leave until 6 o'clock the next morning, when she took her departure, fully satisfied that during that night, at least, the walking had been faithfully performed each quarter of an hour. The women are so fascinated by the spectacle of a woman on the track performing a feat of which the majority of men would be incapable, that they watch her for hours at a time, day after day, with unflagging interest, and invariably beg to be allowed to stay and see her come out "just once more, and then once more again," long after their male escorts have declared it time to go home. From these female enthusiasts are heard on all sides such expressions as "Oh! the poor dear, "Isn't she just splendid!" "How I should cry if she should fall after all," &c. Volunteers are not allowed to walk with her now as much as they have been heretofore, it being deemed best to have one of her immediate friends or attendants with her most of the time, but when they do receive permission, and take advantage of it, the spectators can hardly be blamed for mentioning "cake-walks," so very self-conscious are the amateurs. They generally hold themselves very straight, talk with, or rather at, the Madame all the time, and make the most extraordinary efforts to appear unembarrassed, and to imitate the style of their companion, which they never fully observed by the amused spectators, and last evening one big Englishman, who had made himself unusually conspicuous, was presented with a bouquet as he left the track.

Mme. Anderson's attendants were much amused last evening by the sudden appearance at the door of the retiring-room of an embarrassed reporter, who hesitatingly explained that his mission was, if possible, to interview the "lady." He was invited to make a thorough inspection of the premises, which he did conscientiously, and then retired with apologies, after staring hard at the two female attendants and the only visitor in the room and satisfying himself that there was not any resemblance between them and the woman who was at that time on the track outside. The story that there are two Mme. Andersons, and that one walks while the other attends, has been circulated extensively, and is either a very silly fabrication or a poor joke.

The room into which the Madame retires upon the completion of each quarter of a mile is regarded with the same curiosity by the spectators that is excited in the minds of the uninitiated by the "behind the scenes" of a theatre, and a crowd is always gathered opposite the little doorway, draped with the folds of a British ensign, from which and into which the Madame appears and disappears. Each time the door is opened they stretch their necks to catch such momentary glimpse of the interior as the opportunity affords. This interior is very simple, and is bounded on two sides by rough boarding, on a third by the outer brick wall of the building, and on the fourth by a piece of canvas hung on a sagging cord. To the left of the little door as one enters is a low double bed on which the weary pedestrian throws herself at the completion of each quarter of a mile, and in the intervals of which she sleeps, of whom she has two, one for day and one for night, removes the shoes from the tired feet, and puts them on again when the bell rings three minutes before the time for a start. If the Madame is suffering from a drowsy fit she is sound asleep the moment her head touches the pillow, and before she can be roused must be lifted from the bed, set on her feet, and sometimes soundly shaken. At times it is utterly impossible to rouse her, and at one time yesterday she walked an entire quarter of a mile with closed eyes, and apparently fast asleep. At other times she is wide awake and laughs and laughs with her friends as she lies on the bed, or receives food from her attendant. She takes a great deal of beef-tea, with pieces of bread soaked in it, and is allowed more solid food whenever she asks for it. Her appetite is good, and she eats frequently and with evident relish. She has a sponge bath every day, generally of water, but sometimes of alcohol. This bath has to be given in homeopathic doses, as the Madame is one of her rests long enough to admit of her taking a complete bath. Behind the red curtain, hung at the foot of the bed, is a small kitchen, in which is a stove, table, and cooking utensils. In the room with the bed are also two tables, a large trunk, and two chairs. On the tables are numerous presents that have been made to the Madame during her tedious walk. Conspicuous among these is a large and very beautiful wax doll, for which she had expressed an admiration. Several glasses contain roses that fill the place with their fragrance, and among other things is a large box of candy taken to the Madame last evening by a little girl. On all sides are quantities of bottles of wine, ale, extracts, and medicine, and amid all wanders and purs a pretty maltese kitten, of which the Madame is very fond.

It is at times pitiful to see the weary woman throw herself, face downward, upon the bed, lie there motionless for 10 minutes, and then stagger to her feet as the bell rings, and her attendants lift her from it. She is so thoroughly womanish that, with all her weariness, she rarely neglects to smooth her hair with a brush, if it has become disordered during her brief nap, before resuming the track. She talks very cheerfully, and feels very certain of accomplishing her task at 11 o'clock this evening. At 10 o'clock last evening, amid cheers of encouragement from the spectators, the Madame started on the first of her last hundred quarter-miles, and at midnight she had completed 2,608 quarters, or 652 miles. It is expected that the little hall will be crowded to its utmost capacity this evening, and it is rumored that the admission fee for to-day is to be double that of the past few days. Arrangements have already been made by the Madame's admirers to give her a grand dinner in Mozart Garden on Thursday evening, when she shall have become thoroughly rested.

THE PLEASURES OF FASHION.

BALLS AND OTHER ENTERTAINMENTS ANNOUNCED FOR THE MONTH.

The season of fashionable dancing and other entertainments opens to-morrow evening with the flower party at Delmonico's. Among the invited guests are Sir Edward Thornton and his daughters, and the Russian and Italian Ministers, and it is said that Joaquin Miller will attend to illustrate the poetry of motion. Delmonico's parlors are to be transformed into a bower of exotics for the event, after the pattern of the altar at Trinity at the recent wedding.

The Cercle Francais de l'Harmonie announces a programme of more than common fascination for the grand carnival ball on Monday evening, Jan. 20, at the Academy of Music. Carron and his staff of dancers sur les mains are to make their first appearance here after setting Paris wild, and there is to be a representation of Camargo, another Parisian novelty, which will no doubt prove equally effective. The costumes are to be very elaborate and picturesque, and the affair will recall the bewildering spectacles described as appertaining to the European carnival season.

On Thursday evening, Jan. 23, the Academy is engaged for the grand military and civic reception of the Old Guard, for which very elaborate preparations have been made. Downing's Ninth Regiment Band will furnish the promenade, and Bernstein's String Band the dance music, and both promise a tempting variety of new and beautiful selections. It is stated, also, that the floral decorations of the Academy will be something bewildering to those who have not followed the advancement during the last few years, of the passion for flowers on such occasions. The ladies of Charleston and Savannah have announced their intention to mingle the luxuriant Southern buds with more sober and less magnificent conservatory products, by way of giving variety to the decorations. Of course, there will be exotic palms and ferns, festoons of smilax, and pots of begonias by the hundred. The sale of boxes and tickets has already netted a larger amount than on any previous year, and, as the event partakes of a military coloring, our best society will be represented by the most brilliant names. Officers of the regular Army and Navy, Governors and their staffs, and members of the National Guard from nearly every State in the Union have already signified their intention to be present. The diplomatic corps and the various foreign Consulates will also be fully represented.

On Wednesday evening, Jan. 29, Gilmore's Garden will be the scene of the second grand military and civic reception of the season, that of the Morton Commandery, No. 4, Knights Templar, which promises an entertainment worth witnessing, particularly as the Sir Knights are to appear in full uniform, and the music will be furnished by Gilmore's band. It is too early as yet to give details.

To avoid interference with the arrangements of Col. Mapleson, who had engaged the Academy for Feb. 24, it was decided not to make the regulated alternoon [illegible] the date of the Martha Washington reception has been announced for Thursday evening, Feb. 20, four days earlier than was intended. This is always an affair of social éclat and importance. A part of the entertainment this year will consist, it is rumored, of a representation in costume of the first inauguration of Gen. Washington as President of the United States.

TWO YOUNG WOMEN MISSING.

MISS WIGHT'S SECOND DISAPPEARANCE—A YOUNG GOVEBNESS NOT HEARD FROM.

A few additional facts were learned yesterday about Miss Cornelia Wight, of Poughkeepsie, who mysteriously disappeared from her home last Thursday. Detective Dunn, of the Central Office, who was put on the case, discovered that Miss Wight had secretly contemplated flight from home for some time, and had arranged her plans with much shrewdness. By a careful study of the papers she learned of a private boarding-house near the City Hall, in Brooklyn, that suited her. Miss Wight opened a correspondence with the landlady, and carried it on without letting any of her relatives or friends know of it. When she had concluded her preparations she suddenly went directly to Brooklyn, where she was well received. She remained at the boarding-house until the newspapers published accounts of her flight and descriptions of her person. Then she packed up and suddenly left the boarding-house in such a hurry that she left several articles of clothing behind her. Detective Dunn was at this time following her so closely that he reached the boarding-house a very short time after Miss Wright had left. He there lost all trace of her, as no one had any idea where she had gone. Dunn secured the hat, and her relatives have since identified it as belonging to her. Her second disappearance causes even more anxiety than her first among her friends. Yesterday a brother of Miss Wright called at the Central Office and had a long interview with Inspector Thorne in regard to the young woman. Mr. Wight says that his sister has been quite ill for the past two years, and that it is believed her mind is somewhat deranged.

Leonora Ehrs, a beautiful and accomplished governess, employed in the family of C. L. Bernheimer, at No. 662 Lexington-avenue, was reported to Inspector Thorne, at the Central Office, yesterday, as missing. Miss Ehrs was born in France, and is 19 years old. She has a fair complexion, dark hair and eyes, is about 5 feet 4 inches tall, slenderly formed, and wore a black hat, gray ulster, gray gloves, and brown dress. She speaks three languages fluently, English, German, and French. She left the house on last Friday ostensibly for a walk, and has not been seen nor heard from since. All her clothing, except what she had on, and all of her other effects were left behind. Ehrs are retained by Mr. Bernheimer's family, among whom Miss Eliza was a great favorite, that some harm has befallen her.

A MYSTERIOUS FIRE.

Dr. John P. Ermentraut, Medical Director of the Tompkins-square Homeopathic Dispensary, yesterday reported to Capt. Cherry, of the Eleventh Precinct, that at an early hour in the morning an attempt was made to set fire to his residence, at No. 249 East Fourth-street. Capt. Cherry laid the facts before Fire Marshal Sheldon, who immediately began investigation. The facts ascertained disclose a rather singular state of affairs. No. 249 East Fourth-street is a three-story high-stoop brown-stone house, jointly occupied by Dr. Ermentraut and family, and August Hassey, Esq., owner of the building. Dr. Ermentraut occupies the first floor and basement. Mr. Hassey, who is a widower, with his sons Edward and August, both lawyers, have the second and third floors, their domestic affairs being looked after by a housekeeper. About 11 o'clock on Saturday night Dr. Ermentraut and his family retired. At 4 o'clock yesterday morning the Doctor was awakened by a loud noise, and learned that Edward Hassey, in a nearly helpless condition, was staggering through the hall. About 10 minutes after Edward had succeeded in getting up stairs Dr. Ermentraut heard two persons quarreling, and found that they were Edward and Mr. Hassey's housekeeper. Soon afterward he heard Edward raise the alarm of fire. The Doctor quickly dressed, and when he opened the hall door a thick volume of smoke rushed into the room. Making his way out Dr. Ermentraut met Edward and the housekeeper, the latter having a lighted candle in her hand. Both told him that some person had been trying to set fire to the house, and both were sure that the person was still in the house. The Doctor went with them to the place where the fire had been found, in the middle of the stairway ascending from the second to the third floor. Several pieces of very dry willow-wood, well saturated with kerosene, were lying smoldering. Edward said that as he went up stairs he saw the wood burning brightly and put out the flames. He was astounded at the discovery, and considered it very fortunate that he went home as late as he did. The housekeeper had no excuse to offer for being up and dressed at that time of night. Dr. Ermentraut picked up the wood on the stairway and found that the pieces were from a large willow basket. He took possession of them, and then made a search of the house. No stranger was found in it. A singular coincidence in connection with the attempted arson was discovered yesterday. Mrs. Ermentraut at an early hour in the morning went to the family butcher's. She there met Mr. Hassey's housekeeper. The latter carried a basket which attracted Mrs. Ermentraut's attention. It was much broken and smashed in on one side, and there was a hole made by the large and thick pieces of willow having been cut out. The pieces of saturated and ignited willow found by the Doctor on the stairway, Mrs. Ermentraut thought, would have fitted exactly into the hole cut in the basket carried by the housekeeper. The above facts were communicated to the Police, and the detectives sent to investigate the affair asked the housekeeper for the basket. She said it

FLOUR AND MEAL—A fair inquiry prevails for State and Western Flour, values of most kinds of which show rather more steadiness, though without marked alterations. Sorts put up mostly for trade, in part for Winter Wheat product. In the line of Minnesota Extras, Patents attracted more attention.....Sales have been reported since our last call 30,950 bbls. of all grades.....included in the reported sales were 2,850 bbls. low Extras, for shipment, within the range of $3 65@$4 15, (mainly at $3 65@ $3 80; 1,000 sacks went on the basis of $3 60 ₱ bbl.); 2,900 bbls. Buckwheat Flour in light demand at $1 50@$1 70.

GRAIN—Business in Winter Wheat has been to a comparatively liberal aggregate, largely on an invoice account, and prices have been again advanced, generally ½c., and, in instances, as much as 1c. a bushel, closing, as a rule, firm at the improvement. Spring Wheat has been in unusual favor with buyers. Spring Wheat has been quiet, the restricted offerings of desirable lots and stronger views of holders operating against activity. The actual dealings indicate a somewhat higher range. Cable advices were of a more encouraging tenor. The tendency in ocean freights was against the export interest. Sales have been reported to-day of 751,000 bushels, of which 479,000 bushels for early delivery, including 9,200 bushels Extra White at $1 21½@$1 22 (is boat-load at $1 19;) 15,200 bushels White State at $1 11@ $1 12; 64,000 bushels No. 1 White at $1 10@$1 11, chiefly at $1 11, (one lot of 10,000 bushels sold on steady made public;) 2,400 bushels No. 2 White at $1 08¼; 19,000 bushels ungraded White at $1 08@$1 11; 8,000 bushels White Canadian, in bond, on private terms, and 17,600 bushels No. 1 Red at $1 10¼@$1 11¼, (of which 16,000 bushels, in store, at $1 10½;) 41,000 bushels No. 2 Red at $1 07@$1 10, (of which 10,000 bushels, January options, at $1 10¾@$1 11, closing at $1 11; 80,000 bushels do., February options, at $1 11@$1 11¼, closing at $1 11¼; 24,000 bushels do., March options, at $1 12; 13,000 bushels No. 3 Red at $1 02½@$1 05, (a boat-load at $1 02,(but 272,000 bushels ungraded Red at $1 05@$1 10; 16,000 bushels Rejected Red at 92c. 400 bushels No. 1 Amber at $1 11, delivered; 135,000 bushels No. 2 Amber, in store and afloat, at $1 06@$1 07; 40,000 bushels do., January options, at $1 08½; 32,000 bushels do., February options, at $1 07½@ 1 07¾; 54,000 bushels ungraded Amber at $1 05@$1 11, (very choice Pennsylvania at $1 11;) 16,000 bushels No. 2 Milwaukee Spring at $1 02; 26,000 bushels No. 3 Spring at 92c.; 10,000 bushels Rejected Spring at 75@77½c., (1,000 bushels delivered, as low as 75c.;) 2,000 bushels ungraded Spring, in store, at 86c.....Corn has been quoted at higher rates, and has been in active speculating business, though the demand has been fair for prompt and forward delivery.....Sales have been reported of 211,000 bushels, (of which 147,000 bushels for early delivery,) including New-York No. 2 quoted at 47¾c. afloat; do., in store, 54,000 bushels, at 46¾c.@47c.; New-York No. 2, January option, 24,000 bushels, at 47¾c. do. TALMAGE TO HIS CRITICS.

A MOST REMARKABLE DISCOURSE.

THE TRUE VERSION OF HIS FIRST WIFE'S DEATH AND OF HIS SECOND MARRIAGE—VARIOUS OTHER SCANDALS REFUTED—A CURIOUS AUTOBIOGRAPHY—AN AUDIENCE IN CONVULSIONS OF LAUGHTER.

Mr. Talmage's sermon yesterday took the form of a personal explanation, or, as he termed it, a reply to his critics, lay and clerical—the first he had attempted since his entrance into the ministry, 25 years ago. His text was Mark xiii.: 34: "To every man his work." He said that there are in the world 1,377,000,000 fields of usefulness—one to every individual—and that no one can do the work of any one else. If any man neglects his work, it must remain undone forever. He regarded the day as a double anniversary. It was nearly 10 years since he first became Pastor of his present congregation, and on Wednesday last he was 47 years of age. On this account the audience should not be surprised if he were somewhat autobiographical. He started from an old-fashioned Christian family, which had prayers morning and night, and asked a blessing at table, and never allowed any deviation from those rules. He never saw his father cry but once, and that was when the lid was screwed on his mother's coffin. Her hair had grown perfectly white, and her face was very much wrinkled, for she had worked very hard, but she was perfectly beautiful to him. "There were 12 of us children," he continued—"six of whom are now in heaven. I started for the legal profession with an admiration that has never cooled, but God converted my soul, and put me into the ministry through a variety of circumstances, for which I thank him. I know about 5,000 ministers, personally, and they are as near perfect as human nature ever gets to be. I'll not hide the fact that my chief ambition has been to apply the ministry of 6,000 years ago to the present day. I found the religion I wanted in the Garden of Eden, where it was promised that the woman's foot should bruise the serpent's head. I have started on a mission to bruise the serpent's head. I hate him. I never see his head but I throw something at it, [laughter,] and I have always found that the harder he was hit the louder he hissed. Hitherto, however, I have gone for him with but one foot. Hereafter I propose to use both feet, and I now declare a war of 25 years against him if God will let me live so long. Between us there shall be no truce, no compromise. When I am dead I ask but for one thing. I want no slab, no draped church, no oration. A plain box will be enough if my elders will say, "He never compromised with evil."

I don't forget that my style of preaching has been severely criticised by my clerical brethren. It has come to be understood that at installations I am to be served up as an awful example. I send my deacons to these places to hear Talmage exeoriated, and they are generally gratified. [Laughter.] I have heard of ministers who, whenever their congregations become dull from lack of ventilation, take the proper means to wake them up, and at once there is a cry, "There's Talmage!" [Laughter.] Three words are principally used to describe me. They are mountebank, sensationalism, and buffoonery. [Laughter.] This only shows that some of my clerical brethren are not happy. I have never assailed them. On the contrary, I wish the dear souls all the good possible—large congregations, $15,000 salaries, houses full of children, and heaven to boot. [Laughter.] No one ever heard me say anything against any Christian worker, and no one ever will. I am so busy assaulting the powers of darkness that I have no time to stab a member of my own regiment in the back. I might answer these gentlemen in two ways. I might use the same bitterness, acrimony, and cant with which they have assaulted me, but would that advance our holy religion? Nothing so prejudices people against Christianity as to see ministers fight. Let them go on. It relieves them and don't hurt me. In a war of words I might prove their equal, for nobody has ever charged me with lack of vocabulary. [Laughter.] There is another way—by giving kindly, loving, brotherly advice. I therefore advise them to remember, what every layman knows, that no one can ever build himself up by trying to pull anybody else down. [Loud applause.] In trying this my dear Christain brethren fail in two respects. They don't build themselves up and they don't pull me down. I have an immense membership in this church, and they are all my friends. There are also a great many regular and occasional attendants, and they all know that I never gave bad advice. God, by conversion, saves as many souls every year through this church as through any other. When you assault me, my brothers, you assault all the homes represented here. You are a metaphysician. May you succeed in driving people to heaven by raising a great fog on earth! [Laughter.] You are logical. Go on hooking people into heaven on the horns of a dilemma. [Laughter.] Your work consists in pastoral visits. God go with you as you go to take tea with the old ladies. Remain all the afternoon if you wish, and, if the evening be damp, stay all night. [Great laughter.] You will reach people that I never can, and I will reach people that you never can. Go ahead! In every possible way I will help you, and when you throw a brickbat at me I'll pour holy oil upon your head until it runs down over your coat-collar. [Renewed laughter.] May God put a blessing in your shoe and another in your hat and another before you and another behind you and another on top of you, until you can't get out, and may you in the end be lifted to heaven, where I now appoint a meeting with you to talk over the glory we have both had on earth. But we ought to be an example to other occupations, and, if we have spites and jealousies, let us at least hide them from sight.

During these 10 years I have not only been criticised, but I have often been misrepresented. I don't suppose any man with a special work escapes. You remember the story of Rowland Hill making a pair of shoes, by cutting off the tops of a pair of boots, in the pulpit; of Whitfield catching at a fly, and missing it, after saying that sinners would have no more chance of escape than that fly; of Spurgeon sliding down his pulpit-rail to illustrate the facility of descent into sin, and of Beecher on a hot day using an expletive more emphatic than devout. [Laughter.] Lies, all lies! I certainly haven't escaped. [Laughter.] A few years ago, when living in Philadelphia, I came hither to unite in marriage Dr. Boynton, the eloquent geological lecturer. The ceremony was performed in one of the parlors of the Fifth-Avenue Hotel, and a wedding excursion was afterward taken in a balloon that went up in the Central Park in the presence of 5,000 spectators. Next day it appeared in the Philadelphia papers that I had desecrated the marriage ceremony by performing it a mile high above the earth in a balloon, and thousands believe that story to this day. [Laughter.] Eight or nine years ago, during the Christmas festivities in our chapel, in the presence of 800 or 900 children who had been made roaring happy with candy and cakes and sweetmeats, noticing among the decorations a star made of Christmas greens, I said "Boys, I feel like a morning star." It happened that that was a line in a street song, though I did not know it at the time. Two days afterward there appeared over the name of a man who is a member of a neighboring church, a statement to the effect that in the pulpit I had quoted two or three verses of "Shoo Fly." [Laughter.] The communication went on to say that that song was sung in our Sabbath-school every Sunday. [Renewed laughter.] And the editor of a prominent newspaper, thinking that a church member could not lie, wrote a grave editorial deploring the fact that the pulpit had been so desecrated, and lamenting the sin that was coming on Sabbath schools. [Roars of laughter.] Some years ago, in the Independent, I wrote an article denouncing the exclusiveness of churches, and in the midst of it were two ironical sentences, representative of the disgust felt by the aristocracy at contact with the workingman. Those two sentences were sent around the world as my sentiments in regard to the working classes. A prominent magazine said that I preached every Sunday in kid gloves, and a swallow-tailed coat. [laughter,] and to this day I am constantly in receipt of letters from all points on the earth, inclosing newspaper scraps on the subject, and asking, "Did you really say that?" [Great laughter.] A few years ago I preached a series of sermons on good and bad amusements. In the newspapers appeared a sermon as mine denouncing all amusements as bad, and all actors and actresses, without exception, as dissolute. I was made to say that it was wrong to go even to a zoological garden, and a sin to look at a zebra. [Roars of laughter.] Every word of that sermon I wrote, often in a printing office, by a man who had never seen me—except the text, and that was got in another printing office. [Laughter.] The editor of a religious newspaper in Maine has in his possession a letter from a clergyman which says that I came into this pulpit on one Sunday morning in full Indian dress, with a head-dress of feathers and brandishing a tomahawk. [Great laughter.] It also says that the platform was appropriately decorated with arrows and buffalo robes, [renewed laughter,] and its author asks, with tears in his eyes, if some ecclesiastical authority could not be evoked to prevent such exhibitions. [Great laughter.] I state these things not to stop them, but for public information. I don't want them stopped. They make things spicy. [Laughter.] Long ago I learned that they do good. I consider it a great privilege to be able to preach the Gospel through the press of these two cities. The newspapers have done me more than justice, and I thank them for it. I should be base and ungrateful to object to their editorial columns when their reportorial columns have been so fair. My enemies have given me this privilege. They have told such lies about me that the world is curious to know what is really said in this pulpit, and now the leading papers of the entire country give me a regular and conscientious hearing. I was called here by 19 persons, and now, thanks to my enemies, I have a congregation of between 7,000,000 and 8,000,000 souls. Go on, mine enemies! I can afford it if you can.

There is a falsehood, however, that strikes a different key, for it invades the sanctity of my home, and when I get through with this part of the subject every fair-minded man and woman who listens will be indignant at its atrocity. It has been stated over and over again in private circles and has been hinted at in the newspapers, that 16 or 17 years ago I went sailing on the Schuylkill River with my wife and her sister, that the boat capsized, and that, having the opportunity of saving either my wife or her sister, I let my wife drown and saved her sister, marrying the latter within 60 days. I now propose to nail the infamous lie on the foreheads of its authors, and hereafter I will invoke the law to punish whoever revives it. [Applause.] Here Mr. Talmage produced a manuscript, from which he read in substance as follows:

My sister, Sarah Talmage Whiteman, and her daughter came on a visit to me at Philadelphia. In order to make it pleasant for her, I suggested a trip to Fairmount. There were in the party my wife and our daughter, and my sister and her daughter. At that time I was ignorant of the topography of the place. When we arrived at the banks of the Schuylkill, I proposed a row, and, hiring a boat, we all got in. Not knowing about the dam, and unwarned by the keeper of the boat-house, I pulled straight to the brink, suspecting nothing until some one began wildly waving his arms on the shore. I looked back and saw that we were already in the current of the dam. I tried to back the boat—in vain. No one can ever know the agony of terror I suffered. We went over the dam, the boat capsized, and my wife instantly disappeared, sucked in by the undertow. Her body was not brought out until some days afterward. I, not being able to swim a stroke, was hanging on to one side of the boat. My niece was hanging on to me and my sister was hanging on the other side. A boat from the shore rescued us, and after an hour of effort at resuscitation my child, who was nineteenths dead, breathed again. A carriage drove up, and, leaving my wife on the bottom of the Schuylkill, we rode to our desolate home. Since then the world was created a more ghastly and agonizing calamity never happened, and it is of that scene that ministers of the Gospel, and men and women who pretend to be decent, have made sport. The innocent wife was not within 100 miles of the place. The two were entire strangers. They had never heard of each other, and not till nine months afterward did I even know of the existence of the innocent wife. I was introduced to her by my brother, her Pastor, Rev. Going Talmage, now stationed at Paramus, N. J. My first wife's name was Mary R. Avery, and she was a member of the Reformed Church of South Harriman-street, Brooklyn. My present wife is Susie Whittemore. She was a member of a church at Greenpoint. Multitudes saw us land on the banks of the Schuylkill, and hundreds who knew Mary R. Avery would have been found at any time in Brooklyn. What do you think, husbands and wives, of a lie like that? I have never spoken of this before, and I never will again; and I give fair notice that, if any two responsible witnesses will give me the name of any responsible person repeating this slander, I will pay $100 for the information, and I will put on the criminal vagabond—the loathsome, accursed wretch who utters it—the full force of the law. [Great applause.]

Mr. Talmage laid down his manuscript, and said: "With my congregation in sympathy with me, and with the blessing of God upon me, my 10 years of ministry here have been years of rapture. As to the future, I would say that my ideas of a sermon have changed, and my theology has become condensed into one word of four letters—'Help.' I want to help everybody—in the stores and in the kitchen, as well as in the church. I want to preach sermons that will last through the entire week, and that will mitigate the struggles of daily life as well as relieve the agonies of a tormented conscience. In conclusion, Mr. Talmage announced that on next Sunday, before returning to his series of sermons on the moral condition of the country, he would answer one more of his critics, and his text would be "Sensationalism versus Stupidity." This announcement was greeted with laughter.

MR. WOODMAN'S DISAPPEARANCE.

A BOSTON LAWYER'S SUPPOSED SUICIDE FROM A FALL RIVER STEAM-BOAT.

No light has yet been thrown upon the mystery surrounding the disappearance of Horatio Woodman, a well-known Boston lawyer, who, after several days' sojourn in this City, embarked for home on the steamer Newport, and did not reach his destination, as far as can be learned. Mr. Woodman had been in financial straits for years, and the object of his visit here was to raise money to refund amounts owed by him to estates which he managed, and to clear off old scores growing out of his pension business. He met with no success, and started on his return trip as stated above. The only person on board the Newport who knew him was the barber, Revallion, who has also a shop in Boston. He had often shaved Mr. Woodman in his Boston shop, and knew him well. Revallion says that the steamer was well on its way when Woodman entered the barber's shop. He seemed to be in excellent spirits, and chatted pleasantly with the barber. Baggage Agent King was questioned by Woodman as to the time the steamer landed at Newport. He said that he had engaged to meet a man there, and was perplexed to know how he could get word to his wife, who was down at home by the Fall River train which the steamer connected with. Agent King offered to carry a letter and forward it by the railway baggage agent. The proposition struck Woodman favorably, and he wrote the note and intrusted it to King. It was then off in the direction of the state-rooms, and has not been seen since. The steamer lay at Fall River while two trains were dispatched. After leaving Newport, Conductor Hatton, Mr. Morgan's valet, made his rounds collecting the Providence tickets. He found the door of the state-room occupied by Woodman open. The bedding was disordered and a hair brush and shawl were lying on the floor. Who owned them was not known up till a week afterward. A nephew of Mr. Woodman, who inquired concerning him in Fall River, identified the articles, and ascertained the few circumstances relative above. The letter to his wife had been duly forwarded. It was brief, but in cheerful tone, and assigned a business engagement in Newport as the cause of his detention. It contained no hint of a suicidal purpose or premeditated crime. The officers of the company made diligent inquiry at Newport, Providence, and Fall River, but found nothing that served as a clue. His friends have concluded that he fell, was thrown, or jumped, overboard.

Notwithstanding Mr. Woodman's cheerfulness of demeanor, the condition of his affairs has been found to be rather bad, and it is not improbable that he committed suicide to escape the humiliation of losing most of his 40 years at the Bar he made a specialty of the land-warrant business, and secured a large and very lucrative practice in claims before the War and Pension Departments at Washington. For the past 10 years he has been considerably embarrassed financially, and on July 19, 1870, went into bankruptcy. Though that was over eight years ago, he has not yet been discharged, nor has his Assignee been yet able to declare a dividend. From the court records it appears that his liabilities footed up $199,896, while his assets, including large tracts of Western lands of doubtful value, are set down at $93,641. His bounty and pension business was the main source of his troubles. In one case it was shown that Woodman had exacted illegal fees for procuring a pension for Mrs. Martha A. Towner, the widow of Walter R. C. Towner, of the Forty-eighth Massachusetts Volunteers. He was tried and fined $250, besides the costs, which amounted to $102 45. In addition to this charge, there was a more serious one, namely, that of having forged Mrs. Towner's name in valuable papers. Forgery against him on account of this transaction is now pending, and was to have been put on the February docket for trial in Boston.

GEOGRAPHY AND POLITICS.

HOW AN IMAGINARY LINE INFLUENCES NEW-JERSEY LEGISLATION AND SENTIMENT.

The "Merry Monarch," Charles I., having, in 1664, granted to his brother James, Duke of York and Albany, the territory now comprising the States of New-York and New-Jersey, the Duke soon after sold Jersey to Lord John Berkeley and Sir George Carteret. In 1673 the former sold his undivided half to John Fenwick, who subsequently brought over a colony of Quakers who occupied the southern section, and, on July 1, 1676, Fenwick and his associates executed a deed with Carteret for the division of the province into East and West Jersey, each section being thereafter a separate, independent province. This division existed but 22 years, when the Province was reunited under a Royal Governor, and yet, so strong are traditions attached to the soil that the line, run in 1675 from Barnegat Bay northerly to the Delaware River, to this day marks a political difference between the two States of the two sections that even the white heat of the Revolutionary struggle could not obliterate, nor nearly two centuries of a common Government wipe out.

The Legislature which organized Hudson County divided between the claims of East and West Jersey, as nearly every one of its predecessors has been. So strong is the pressure of locality, that the man who votes against his section is regarded almost as a traitor to his constituents. The West Jersey has six of the eleven Republican Senators who control the upper branch of the Legislature. Two of them are known to be strongly favorable to the election of Senator Hobart, of Passaic, as President, but the traditions and popular pressure of locality are all forcing them to vote for Gen. Sewell, of Camden, who is regarded as the special representative of West Jersey interests. Then, too, the Pennsylvania Railroad many years ago entered in and occupied the land of West Jersey, and usually controls the politics of that section. Thus, locality and railroad interests favor the election of a West Jersey Senator as President. In the Assembly precisely the same sort of issue has arisen. East Jersey will be almost solidly in favor of Senator Jackson, of Essex. West Jersey and the Pennsylvania Railroad interests are understood to be uniting in support of William Budd Descon, of Burlington. Even in regard to the minor offices, the same sort of a contest exists, though in a much less degree. It is a singular spectacle, this division of the politics of a State on an imaginary geographical line that was wiped out, governmentally, 177 years ago.

There has been rumors, for some weeks past, of a probable compromise of the rival railroad interests, but the present indications point to no such amicable adjustment. Some of the more sanguine Jersey City people have believed the Pennsylvania Railroad would relinquish its opposition to the proposed new street from Jersey City to the Central Railroad at Communipaw, but as yet there has been no agreement to that effect. To-night's Republican caucus may settle the matter. The lobbyists pray for a long and bitter struggle, but they are likely to be disappointed.

BOUND TO BE SURE OF IT.

August Bergmann, of Passaic City, is a jolly and sanguine German, who has made up his mind to be Assistant Door-keeper of the New-Jersey House of Assembly. He returned home on Saturday from his fifth round of personal visitation to every Republican Assemblyman in the State, and was so elated at his prospects that he immediately had printed several hundred visiting cards, inscribed with his name and title of office, as aforesaid. Knowing the uncertainty of politicians' promises, however, he proposes to set out this morning on his sixth round of personal visitation, to remind the Republican Assemblymen of their quintuple pledges.

KILLED BY FALLING DOWN STAIRS.

Bernard Kelly, aged 61, fell down stairs at his residence, No. 16 Morris-avenue, Newark, N. J., yesterday morning, and was killed. He had been asleep, and got up about 3 o'clock to get a drink of water, for which he had to go from his room to the kitchen in the basement. His foot caught in a hole in the stair-carpet, and he was precipitated to the bottom of the stairs. When he was taken up his neck was broken. He leaves a wife and five children.

CONVENTION OF THE B'NAI B'RITH.

The annual convention of the District Grand Lodge No. 1, Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, was opened yesterday in the bank building, corner of Third-avenue and Fifty-fifth-street. H. S. Herrman presided. The district embraces New-York and the New-England States, and was represented by 158 delegates. After the election of 51 new members, the Executive Committee of the General Committee made a report recommending the erection of a home for old and indigent members and their widows and orphans, for which purpose the Grand Lodge holds a fund of $122,485 35. The lodge already owns a site for the proposed institution at Yonkers, consisting of nine and a half acres. The Executive Committee is of the opinion that the building of the home should not be longer deferred. The Committee on the General Fund also recommended the appropriation of $40,000 toward building the home. The general report for the district showed that the Grand Lodge contains 8,595 members, and that during the past year $32,231 90 had been disbursed to applicants for aid. It also showed that $35,007 39 had been paid into the endowment fund, and that the segregate fund held by the Grand Lodge is about $200,000. The Widows' and Orphans' reserved fund amounts to $44,757 38. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Edmund L. Gerstle, Boston; First Vice-President, Joseph Fox; Second Vice-President, Adolph L. Sanger; Treasurer, S. Schultzberger; Secretary, S. Hamburger; Sergeant-at-Arms, Joseph Levison. The West Jersey has six of the eleven Republican Senators who control the upper branch of the Legislature. Two of them are known to be strongly favorable to the election of Senator Hobart, of Passaic, as President, but the traditions and popular pressure of locality are all forcing them to vote for Gen. HARDSHIPS ON THE OCEAN.

STORIES OF OCEAN PERILS.

SEVERAL VESSELS ABANDONED AT SEA—CREWS RESCUED FROM SINKING SHIPS—DANGEROUS NORTH-WEST GALES EXPERIENCED.

Several shipwrecked crews arrived at this port yesterday who had been obliged to abandon their vessels, which had become leaky or were dismasted during the recent gales. The Norwegian bark A. M. Schweigaard, Capt. Johnson, which arrived from Shiloth yesterday, had on board Capt. Davis and his crew of 11 men, who had been forced to leave the British bark Lord Clarendon in a sinking condition, on Jan. 5, in latitude 37° 10′ and longitude 69° 49′. The Lord Clarendon left Bordeaux for the Delaware Breakwater, in ballast, on Nov. 5, and had light winds and fair weather until Dec. 26, when the Gulf Stream was reached. It then began to blow heavily, and a strong north-westerly gale set in. The bark labored so violently that a serious leak was sprung, but all attempts at pumping were futile, as the water slowly but surely gained on the crew. Some of the men were at the pumps constantly until the vessel was abandoned. On Jan. 3 one of the sailors fell from the main-topsail yard, and the second mate having been laid up for several weeks, they were short-handed, and the constant labor began to tell on the men. Shortly after daylight on the 5th the vessel, which proved to be the A. M. Schweigaard, was sighted to leeward, and the sailors, after consulting together, went aft, and their spokesman asked the Captain whether he would not hoist a signal of distress, as they had become thoroughly exhausted. Soundings showed that there were five feet of water already in the hold, and as there was no port which they could hope to reach, the Captain acceded to the request of his men, and accordingly hoisted the signal. The Lord Clarendon's mizzen-mast, which was found at any time in Brooklyn. What do you think, husbands and wives, of a lie like that? I have never spoken of this before, and I never will again; and I give fair notice that, if any two responsible witnesses will give me the name of any responsible person repeating this slander, I will pay $100 for the information, and I will put on the criminal vagabond—the loathsome, accursed wretch who utters it—the full force of the law. Then, too, the Pennsylvania Railroad many years ago entered in and occupied the land of West Jersey, and usually controls the politics of that section. Thus, locality and railroad interests favor the election of a West Jersey Senator as President. In the Assembly precisely the same sort of issue has arisen. East Jersey will be almost solidly in favor of Senator Jackson, of Essex. West Jersey and the Pennsylvania Railroad interests are understood to be uniting in support of William Budd Descon, of Burlington. Even in regard to the minor offices, the same sort of a contest exists, though in a much less degree. It is a singular spectacle, this division of the politics of a State on an imaginary geographical line that was wiped out, governmentally, 177 years ago.

There has been rumors, for some weeks past, of a probable compromise of the rival railroad interests, but the present indications point to no such amicable adjustment. Some of the more sanguine Jersey City people have believed the Pennsylvania Railroad would relinquish its opposition to the proposed new street from Jersey City to the Central Railroad at Communipaw, but as yet there has been no agreement to that effect. To-night's Republican caucus may settle the matter. The lobbyists pray for a long and bitter struggle, but they are likely to be disappointed.

BOUND TO BE SURE OF IT.

August Bergmann, of Passaic City, is a jolly and sanguine German, who has made up his mind to be Assistant Door-keeper of the New-Jersey House of Assembly. He returned home on Saturday from his fifth round of personal visitation to every Republican Assemblyman in the State, and was so elated at his prospects that he immediately had printed several hundred visiting cards, inscribed with his name and title of office, as aforesaid. Knowing the uncertainty of politicians' promises, however, he proposes to set out this morning on his sixth round of personal visitation, to remind the Republican Assemblymen of their quintuple pledges.

SPORTS ON THE ICE AND SNOW.

SIXTY THOUSAND SKATERS AT CENTRAL PARK YESTERDAY—JUST A LITTLE SLEIGHING.

Fully 100,000 persons visited the lake in Central Park yesterday, and of these, certainly 60,000 were skaters. At no time during the afternoon were there less than 20,000 skaters on the ice. Such, as least, was the estimate of Capt. Beatty, of the Park Police, who has had some experience in the matter. All classes were represented, and high and low, rich and poor, bustled and crowded each other about on the most perfect terms of equality. All were in the best of humor and the air rang with laughter. Not a single incident occurred during the day to call for the services of the Police. The ice was in splendid condition, and there were no dangerholes, save a few along the edges of the lake. Shortly after 5 o'clock, when the crowd had thinned out to about 15,000 skaters, Capt. Beatty, accompanied by a Sergeant, 10 patrolmen, and 10 of the Park laborers, began the work of clearing the lake. They started at the northern end. For five minutes, at least, the skaters in that vicinity could not be made to understand that they must leave the ice, as they did not know that skating after 5 o'clock on Sunday night is not allowed. But repeated explanations, accompanied sometimes by a few pushes, or in very refractory cases, by a light touch of the club, accomplished the purpose, sending the skaters to the other end of the lake. The work then consisted in keeping them moving and preventing perverse men and audacious small boys from willfully doubling back to pass ranks of the force "just for fun." Soon the majority of those on the ice were rapidly making for the shore. In the crush, friends became separated and called loudly for each other, and the boys lent their shrill voices to swell the chorus. It was especially annoying to the Police, on account of their propensity for breaking through the ranks of the latter and skating away over the clear space behind. It took only 40 minutes, however, to clear the lake. The usual number of lost children were reported at the office in the Arsenal Building, but by 8 o'clock all these had been accounted for, except two lads of about 12 years of age, who, doubtless, were afterward found safely at their homes. Only one accident occurred during the day, and that was caused by a boy's attempting to skate down the side of a hill on the shore so as to get an impetus to carry him over the ice. He fell, and received a severe scalp wound, which was dressed at Roosevelt Hospital.

The sleighing yesterday within the park and north of it was very good. There a number of teams out, however, was very much smaller than would have been the case had there been any sleighing in this City. To drag light cutters over the bare cobblestones until the Park was reached was more than most horsemen cared to attempt owing to the danger of wrecking their light sleighs and the disagreeable nature of the journey. A few experienced persons, however, sent their sleighs out early in the day and then drove out in carriages to join them, but this caused more trouble and expense than most persons cared to have, and thus the sights on the Lane were neither numerous nor especially attractive.

METROPOLITAN ELEVATED ROAD.

RICHARD P. MORGAN, JR., BRINGS SUIT IN CHICAGO FOR ALLEGED INFRINGEMENT OF PATENT.

From the Chicago Inter-Ocean, Jan. 11.

The Morgan Elevated Railway Company of Illinois filed a bill in the United States Circuit Court yesterday against George M. Pullman. The bill states that Richard P. Morgan, Jr., obtained, April 20, 1869, a patent for an improved elevated railway. On Nov. 10, 1876, the Morgan Elevated Railroad Company obtained an assignment of the patent. George M. Pullman, however, has since, without any license from the owners of the patent, constructed in the City of New-York an elevated railway on Morgan's patent. An injunction is therefore asked to restrain Pullman from further infringing the patent.

This was all the information given by the bill, which would have delighted the most orthodox writer on chancery pleading, on account of its strict adherence to rule. An inquiry from Messrs. Sweet & Bates, solicitors, disclosed the fact that the bill was drawn by Hamilton Spencer, a prominent lawyer of Bloomington, for Richard P. Morgan, Jr., and brought to town by Mr. Morgan to be filed. It appears that in 1867 Mr. Morgan, who was then a civil engineer of considerable ability, having surveyed the Chicago and Alton Railroad, was considering the necessity for an underground railroad, or some other like scheme, to facilitate rapid transit in New-York. He subsequently elaborated the idea of an elevated railway similar to those now in use. The underground railroad was mooted, but it was found to be impracticable. Mr. Morgan came to New-York and met the parties principally interested in the scheme, and suggested the idea of a railroad to run over the streets. His idea was, however, declared to be visionary. In 1869 he completed and patented his invention, which has been used by the companies now in operation in New-York, in defiance, as he claims, of his patent. Mr. Pullman has just completed the building of the third elevated railway in New-York, which starts at the Battery and runs through West Broadway and up Sixth-avenue, the contract for which he took in 1876. This road Mr. Morgan claims to be a direct infringement on his patent, and hence the present suit.

DEPARTURE OF THE RICHMOND.

The United States steam sloop-of-war Richmond, which is to take ex-President Grant around the East Indies, left the Navy-yard on Saturday to join the Asiatic Squadron. The Richmond is one of the best ships of the Navy, and is a sister ship to the Brooklyn and Worcester. She was built at Norfolk, Va., in 1867, and rates second class, being of 2,000 tons burden, carries 14 guns, and has a crew of 320 men. While at the Boston Navy-yard she received new boilers, a new screw, and other new machinery. Her cabins are very handsome, have been elegantly fitted up for the comfort of the ex-President and his son, Col. F. D. Grant, who travels with him as his aide. New and elaborate carpets and furniture have been added to the cabin and ward-room, and the interior fittings give it a palatial appearance. The Admiral's, or poop, cabin has been fitted up in a sumptuous manner for the express accommodation of Gen. Grant and his suite. The officers were selected for this special cruise. It is expected that the ex-President will embark either at Marseilles or Spezzia. After conveying Gen. Grant on his Oriental tour through the Mediterranean Sea and the Suez Canal, the vessel will proceed to Aden, Muscat, Bombay, Singapore, Calcutta, and thence to Hong Kong, where she will become the flag-ship of Rear-Admiral T. H. Patterson. She is commanded by Capt. A. E. K. Benham. Her principal officers are: Executive Officer, Lieut.-Commander Lewis Clark; Navigator, Lieut. Charles S. Sperry; Watch Officers, Lieuts. George G. Clay, Thomas H. Stevens, N. J. K. Patch, and Sidney H. May; Purser, Paymaster O. C. Tiffany, and Doctors, Passed Assistant Surgeon J. F. F. Branaford, Assistant Surgeon Clement Biddle.

A PIN WHICH CAUSED DEATH.

James Stewart, of Flushing, Long Island, 19 years old, died suddenly last Wednesday night after a brief illness, which would not yield to treatment. There being doubt as to the cause of death, a post-mortem examination was made on Friday, which resulted in the discovery of a bent pin in the form of a hook, which had been unconsciously swallowed, and which had lacerated the exterior coating of the intestines, producing acute inflammation, which caused death.

ONE POLICY SHOP CLOSED.

Henry Delmonte, a cigar-maker, of No. 128 North Oxford-street, was arrested Saturday night on the charge of keeping a policy-shop at No. 368 Hudson-avenue. The place has been for some time under Police surveillance. On Saturday Robert Turner, of No. 42 North Elliott-place, purchased two policy-slips of Delmonte, and then went and made a complaint against him. Charles Davison, of No. 304 Third-avenue; Edward Leonard, of No. 136 Franklin-avenue; Robert Fields, of No. 166 Willoughby-street, and Turner, were arrested at the same time as witnesses, and Delmonte was held for trial.

A DESPERATE MAN.

Frank Powers, who said that he was 23 years old, and resided at No. 230 Hoyt-street, was arrested by Officer John Kee, of the Second Precinct, at 4:40 A. M. yesterday, while in the act of breaking a pane of glass in the show-window of the store of the American Tea Company, at No. 124 Bridge-street. When taken to the station, Powers said he had no money to pay his board, and that he broke the pane of glass in order to get some tea on which to raise some money. He was held for trial on a charge of burglary.

READJUSTING THE SUGAR DUTIES.

A BILL AGREED UPON BY THE WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE—THE POLARISCOPE TEST NOT AUTHORIZED—PROPOSED ABOLITION OF THE GRADES BELOW NO. 13.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—The Committee on Ways and Means to-day agreed upon a bill to readjust the duties on sugars, and will report it to the House as soon as possible. The bill does not authorize the introduction of the polariscope test, and is substantially in the terms outlined in THE TIMES' dispatches last night. It provides that tank bottoms, syrup of sugar, cane juice, melado, concentrated melado, and concentrated molasses, and all sugars not above No. 13 Dutch standard, shall pay a duty of 2 40-100 cents per pound. Sugars above No. 13, and not above No. 16, shall pay 2 75-100 cents, and sugars above No. 16 shall pay 4 cents. It will be noticed that the grades below No. 13 are abolished by this bill, and that the ad valorem duty of 25 per cent. additional now imposed is omitted. The duty now imposed upon the two grades abolished, namely, not above No. 7 and not above No. 10, is respectively 1¾ cents and 2 cents per pound. It is understood that 9 of 13 New-York refiners are willing to accept the bill. Havemeyer & Elder, the Donner & De-Castro Refining Company, Matthiessen and Wiecher, and the Brooklyn Refining Company, all of whom work the low grade sugars, are opposed to the bill, and will contest its passage, for the reason that they believe the bill would practically prohibit low grade sugars. None of the parties directly interested can be said to be satisfied with the bill, but those who advocate specific duties and confining the classification to two grades, regard it as a vast improvement upon the present system, and will earnestly work to secure its passage. The committee expect to report the bill on Wednesday, and will ask a day to be fixed for its consideration.

MR. SCHLEICHER'S FUNERAL.

ANOTHER IMPOSING CEREMONY IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—The funeral services over the remains of Mr. Schleicher, the dead Representative from Texas, occurred in the House to-day. The President, members of the Cabinet, Judges of the Supreme Court, and Senators, were present. The galleries were crowded to overflowing and the floor was thronged by the families of members admitted by resolution. Mr. Schleicher was the sixth member of the present House who has died. The first was Mr. Leonard, a scholarly and promising Republican from Louisiana; the next, Mr. Quinn, a Democrat and a prominent citizen of Albany, N. Y.; and next, Gen. Williams, a distinguished Democrat, of Michigan, who had grown old in the service, met his death. Beverly Douglas, a Democrat, of Virginia, was the next to die, and, closely following him, Julian Hartridge, of Georgia, went to his grave. Mr. Schleicher was by birth a German, and in politics a Democrat, but he discharged his duties so conscientiously, and fought all the financial and other heresies of his party friends so bravely, that his loss is deeply mourned by all good men in the Capitol.

Soon after the Speaker had called the House to order, at 2:55 P. M., the Door-keeper announced the presence of the Senate, and the Speaker and members arose and remained standing while the Senators, headed by the Vice-President and accompanied by their principal officers, filed down the main aisle and took the seats assigned to them on either side of the main aisle, the Vice-President taking his position beside the Speaker. The same ceremonial was observed when the Chief-Justice and Justices of the Supreme Court, wearing their silk gowns, entered and moved to their seats on the west side of the area in front of the Speaker's chair, and immediately afterward the President and members of the Cabinet took their seats on the opposite side, corresponding to those occupied by the Judges. Other chairs in the area were reserved for the members of Mr. Schleicher's family. Shortly after 3 o'clock, the funeral cortège appeared, in charge of Sergeant-at-Arms, who, as well as the attendant pall-bearers, wore a white muslin scarf, buttoned with a black rosette. As the body was borne up the aisle and placed on the catafalque, over which flowers had been strewn, all those present stood up reverentially, and everything being in due order, the religious ceremonies were performed by the Chaplain of the House, assisted by the Chaplain of the Senate.

At the conclusion of the services the House adjourned. The remains were taken to the railroad depot, whence they were sent to San Antonio by this evening's train.

A NEW ARMY REORGANIZATION BILL.

MR. HEWITT'S PLAN FOR REDUCING THE ARMY TWENTY PER CENT.—PROBABILITY THAT IT WILL BE ADDED TO THE ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—At the meeting of the sub-committee on appropriations to-day Mr. Hewitt submitted a new bill for the reorganization of the Army. It provides, in substance, that a reduction of 20 per cent. shall take place among staff officers. This would make necessary the retirement of 104 of these officers. The bill further provides that the heads of staff departments shall hold the uniform rank of Brigadier-General, and opposes the recently-advanced propositions that staff officers be appointed at intervals from the line, and that the positions of staff and line officers may be interchangeable. It is further proposed by the bill that the Army shall hereafter consist of 32 regiments, 8 of which are to be cavalry, 4 artillery, and 20 infantry. Battalion organization is also provided for, and it is stipulated that most of the proposed reductions shall be made by refusing to fill vacancies caused by death or otherwise. The entire reduction contemplated will amount to about 250 officers. Doubtless with a view of affecting this reduction by easy stages, the bill provides that all officers over 62 years of age shall be retired. The President, however, is authorized, in his discretion, to continue officers in the service until they are 65 years of age. Incompetent officers may be retired by an examining board, to be called in the discretion of the President, who is also the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, and any officer who resigns shall be entitled to receive three years' pay after such resignation. In short, the theory of the bill is to reduce the Army 20 per cent. by a failure to fill vacancies as they occur. In accordance with the plan, the offices of General and Lieutenant-General are, upon the death of this present incumbents, to be abolished, and the number of Major-Generals is to be reduced to one, he to be the chief officer of the Army. The number of Brigadier-Generals of the line is reduced to six. Graduates from West Point, unless there are places for them, are to be paid $750 when they leave the Academy, and then remain for two years in private life, subject, however, to be called into the service at the pleasure of the Government. It is believed that the bill will be tacked on to the regular Appropriation bill, and in that way presented to the House.

CONGRESSIONAL TOPICS.

THE NEW-YORK CUSTOM-HOUSE NOMINATIONS TO BE DISPOSED OF ON THURSDAY—THE FREE SHIPPING BILL.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—It is announced by members of the Senate Committee on Commerce that a meeting of that committee will be held on Thursday next, and that upon that day the New-York Custom-house appointments will be taken up and disposed of. Those members of the committee who will converse upon the subject express the belief that Merritt and Graham will be reported adversely, and that their nominations will be rejected by the Senate.

The House Committee on Commerce will hold a meeting on Friday next to hear arguments for and against the bill to provide for free ships. Invitations have been forwarded to persons directly interested to be present, and delegations from various cities, representing commercial exchanges, vessel-owners, and shipbuilders are expected to appear.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13, 1879.

Gen. Butler was in the House to-day.

The subscriptions to the 4 per cent. loan to-day amounted to $6,222,150.

The receipts from internal revenue to-day were $527,598 07, and from Customs, $419,727 31.

Senator Jones, of Nevada, made his first appearance of the session in the Senate this morning.

Representative Finley, who is suffering from an incipient attack of pneumonia, has gone home to Ohio.

N. P. Hill, Senator Chaffee's prospective successor, was formerly a Professor of Chemistry in Brown University. He is at present Superintendent of the Boston and Colorado Smelting-works at Denver.

Representatives Crittenden, Clark, Hatcher, Morgan, and Pollard, of the Missouri delegation, had a long interview with the President this morning, and urged the appointment of ex-Senator John B. Henderson to the vacant mission at Berlin. Senators Armstrong and Cockrell and Representative Metcalfe, of Missouri, also called upon the President and Secretary of State in the interest of Mr. Henderson.

A sub-committee of the House Committee on Elections held two sessions to-day, hearing argument on the contested election case of Nutting against Reilley, of the Thirteenth Pennsylvania District. Mr. Reilley was heard in his own behalf at the morning session, and Mr. Broome, attorney for Mr. Nutting, closed the argument at the afternoon session. The sub-committee will now prepare a report to be submitted to the full committee.

The House Naval Committee this morning had before it ex-Chief Engineer King, who was examined by ex-Chief Engineer Wood, in relation to certain boilers condemned by the latter, and which witness had previously testified were serviceable and ought not to have been sold. He was confronted with an inspection report made by him in 1865, wherein he reported a number of these same boilers as of inferior material and imperfectly constructed. To this he replied that the report was made while the boilers were in process of construction, and that the defects were remedied by his continued care.

The House Committee on Expenditures in the State Department to-day continued the examination of Dr. S. Wells Williams, of Yale College, in regard to the premises owned by him and occupied by the United States Legation at Peking, China. No new facts bearing upon the investigation were elicited. In the course of his remarks Dr. Williams explained to the committee that he had been instructed to purchase the buildings in question, because, while acting Chargé d'Affaires at Peking, he had felt that the United States Government was being humiliated in occupying their previous quarters, and in illustration of this fact he related that when the Chinese Prime Minister and other prominent dignitaries of that Government paid him an official visit they were compelled to place their chairs in the street in consequence of the doors of the American Legation building being too small to admit of their entrance.

THE PRESIDENT CALLED UPON BY A COMMITTEE OF WOMEN.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—A committee of the Woman Suffrage Convention, held in this city last week, consisting of Mrs. Gage, Mrs. Spencer, Mrs. Wells, and Mrs. Williams, the two latter of Utah, called upon the President this morning and presented a memorial and other papers in relation to female suffrage, and charging that the President had ignored the women of the country in his annual Message. They also called the attention of the President to the recent decision of the Supreme Court in relation to polygamous marriages, and to the effect of enforcing the act of 1862, and said it would make thousands of women outcasts and their children illegitimate. The President said he was deeply impressed by what had been said, and requested that Mrs. Williams and Mrs. Wells make out statements in writing and submit them to him. He wanted all the information on the subject he could procure. They promised to do this, and the President then asked them how he could serve them. The reply was: "By vetoing any bill to enforce the act of 1862." In answer to the memorial and the remarks made in relation to female suffrage, the President said: "You say I have ignored the women of the country in my annual Message. I will carefully consider what you have said, and the papers you have presented to me, in my next Message. I will act according to the dictates of my conscience and the best light I have."

OLD CUSTOMS SUITS DECIDED.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—The United States Supreme Court to-day rendered a decision in the case of Otto B. Andrese against C. C. Redfield, Executrix, and others. There are pending in the Circuit of the United States for the Northern District of New-York 60 or more actions, begun by sundry merchants in 1864, against Heman F. Redfield, late Collector of Customs at the port of New-York, to recover excess of duties paid by them under protest on freight charges and commissions between the years 1853 and 1857. These merchants, 112 in number, unite in the present suit in equity, which is intended to restrain the Collector or his legal representative from pleading the Statute of Limitations in bar of the pending suits above-mentioned. The Supreme Court holds, in an opinion delivered by Justice Clifford, that the parole statements and letters of the Secretary of the Treasury and other officers of the Government, to the importers did not amount to an agreement not to plead the Statute of Limitations. The decree of the lower court is, therefore, affirmed, Justices Miller and Fields dissenting.

THE LATE CALEB CUSHING.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—The resolutions of respect and condolence adopted by the members of the Bar of the United States Supreme Court upon the receipt of the intelligence of the death of Hon. Caleb Cushing were to-day presented to the court by Attorney-General Devens in an appreciative and eulogistic review of the deceased statesman's life and character. The resolutions, which have already been published, were ordered to be entered in the records of the court, together with the eloquent tribute of the Attorney-General to the memory of his distinguished predecessor.

A DISAGREEING JURY.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—The jury in the case of Samuel A. Clark, tried for the murder of John Lee on Christmas Day, 1877, have been out since Saturday night at 6 o'clock, and, being unable to agree, were locked up again to-night. It is said that they are hopelessly at variance. The presiding Judge asserts that he will keep them together the entire week if he does not get a verdict before the expiration of that time. This is Clark's third trial. On the first he was convicted of murder and sentenced to be hanged. An appeal to a full court procured a new trial, in which the jury disagreed.

A COLOSSAL LAND CLAIM REJECTED.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—The case of Benjamin Scull and others against the United States, in which a claim was set up under a Spanish grant to 11,000 square miles of land, embracing 24 counties in the States of Missouri and Arkansas, was to-day decided by the United States Supreme Court adversely to the claimants. It is held that no adequate survey of the alleged grant has ever been made, and that no survey can be made which will correspond with the concession, owing to the erroneous ideas which were entertained at the time it was made as to the source and direction of White River, by reference to which it was intended to be located.

MISSOURI LEGISLATIVE PLANS.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 13.—A Jefferson City special says a bill has been introduced in the Senate providing that the retention by county collectors of fees not allowed by law shall be felony, and punishable by imprisonment in the Penitentiary for not less than five years. A bill for the establishment of the whipping-post, and another making life insurance policies non-forfeitable after the second annual payment were also introduced. A bill has been introduced in the House making the crime of rape punishable by hanging.

TWO MURDERERS TO BE HANGED TO-DAY.

MAUCH CHUNK, Penn., Jan. 13.—All the preparations for the execution of Charles Sharpe and James McDonnell, for the murder of George K. Smith, to-morrow have been made. The scaffold was erected this afternoon. Sharpe's friends said good-bye to him this afternoon, but for some reason McDonnell's relatives have not arrived. They are expected early in the morning. The execution will take place at 10:30 o'clock.

THE SEAT OF WAR IN ASIA.

ENGLAND'S VICTORIOUS MARCH IN AFGHANISTAN.

THE PESHAWAR AND KHURUM COLUMNS IN WINTER QUARTERS—A STRONG DISTRIBUTION OF TROOPS—A GRAND DURBAR AT JALALABAD—GEN. STEWART'S MARCH THROUGH KANDAHAR.

LONDON, Jan. 13—A Calcutta dispatch to the Times says: "The troops of the Peshawar and Khurum columns are now settled down in quarters which, unless unforseen events occur, they are intended to occupy for the next two months. Gen. Browne's and Gen. Maude's divisions are in echelon, in mutually supporting detachments, extending from Jalalabad to Nowshera. This extension and distribution of the forces, besides affording the requisite protection to the entire line of the road, has the advantage of diminishing, as far as possible, the strain upon the Commissariat Department. Major Cavagnari has received friendly letters from most of the Kabul and Ghitzai chiefs.

"An imposing durbar was held at Jalalabad on the 1st of January by Gen. Sir Samuel Browne. Most of the local Khans and influential men of the neighborhood attended. Major Cavagnari, addressing them, explained the Viceroy of India's proclamation. He commented on the recent events as manifesting the strength of the British Government, and the failure of the Ameer's resistance, and repeated the assurance that we have no quarrel with the people of Afghanistan. The principal Khan replied in language, which may be taken for what it is worth, expressing his contentment with the change of authority, and freely offering his services.

"The health of the troops at present is good, and they are settling themselves down comfortably in their different camps. With wet weather, however, there will certainly come more sickness, but not sufficient to make a serious inroad on the strength of the force. The most unhealty positions are probably Ali-Musjid and Dakka.

"Gen. Stewart's troops marched through Kandahar, on the 9th inst., (probably,) and are encamped on the Chuznee road. Supplies are being plentifully offered by the people, who show a friendly spirit. Along the whole of Gen Stewart's line of march, in fact, the population has been quiet. There has been no molestation of baggage or attempts to interfere with the progress of the column."

EUROPE'S DEPRESSED BUSINESS.

END OF THE RAILWAY STRIKE IN ENGLAND —FRENCH MANUFACTURERS REDUCING WAGES—STRIKES IN VARIOUS BRANCHES OF TRADE.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—A strike of cotton operatives at Preston on the 23d inst. is feared, when the 10 per cent. reduction of wages will be enforced.

In consequence of the resumption of work by the railway conductors at Leeds, all the striking railway employes at Bradford have asked, and have been granted, reinstatement on the terms offered by the railway Directors.

The molders, fitters, and blacksmiths of the Railway Rolling-stock Works, at Barrow, have struck against the extension of the hours of labor from 54 to 59 hours a week.

A Paris dispatch to the Times says that the velvet manufacturers of St. Etienne have resolved to reduce the wages of their operatives 20 per cent., as the only means of facing foreign competition.

The Times, judging from the uncertainty and the divided counsels shown at the various meetings of the Midland Railway employes, editorially declares that it is not too much to say that they are ready to return to duty if the olive branch is held out to them.

The foundrymen, ship-builders, and house-builders of Bangor, and in that vicinity, have struck.

Six hundred weavers at Carlisle have struck. This strike will affect other departments of the mills.

The strike has begun in the wire trade at Warrington, and 1,500 men are idle in consequence.

The strike on the Midland Railroad has virtually ended, the men at the Central Station at Derby, by whose action those at a number of other places agreed to be governed, having unexpectedly resumed work to-day. Nearly all the men at Staveley, Hasland, and Claycross have followed suit, and the block to traffic is disappearing. It is anticipated that everything will be as usual by Tuesday. It is expected that the failure of the strike among the guards will prevent a strike of the signal men.

THE RUSSO-TURKISH TREATY.

RUSSIA'S AMBASSADOR ACCEPTS ALL THE ARTICLES OF THE DEFINITIVE TREATY.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—Reuter's Constantinople dispatch says: Eleven battalions of Turkish troops have been ordered to hold themselves in readiness to occupy Adrianople as soon as the definitive treaty with Russia has been signed.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 13.—Prince Lobanoff, the Russsian Ambassador, has accepted all the articles of the definitive treaty of peace as agreed to by the Porte, but clause 2, relative to Russia's supervision of the execution of the treaty of Berlin, is only accepted ad referendum.

The scheme for the organization of a gendarmerie, adopted by the Eastern Roumelian Commission, provides that the commander and instructors be Frenchmen.

THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

AGITATION IN FAVOR OF A NEW CABINET —RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF WAR BOREL—THE BEY OF TUNIS APOLOGIZES.

PARIS, Jan. 13.—At a meeting of the Republican Union, the Left and the Extreme Left, to-day, M. Floquet urged the desirability of replacing the present Cabinet by one of a more pronounced Republican character. He was much applauded, but the Moderate Left and the Left Centre are determined to uphold the present Cabinet.

The National announces that M. Louis Blanc and 35 extreme Radicals have resolved, against the advice of the leaders of the majority, to issue a manifesto asking for the fulfillment of the will of the country as expressed by the recent elections.

The Temps announces that Gen. Borel has resigned the Ministry of War, and that Gen. Faidherbe will succeed him.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—Ben Ismail, the Prime Minister of Tunis, repaired on Friday, in full uniform and accompanied by a numerous suite, to the French Consulate, and, on behalf of the Bey, tendered a full apology. The Consul of France received Ben Ismail surrounded by all his staff and the officers or the French fleet stationed off Tunis.

RUSSIANS APPEALING TO THE CZAR FOR CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS—THE NEW REGULATIONS FOR PREVENTING COLLISIONS AT SEA.

VIENNA, Jan. 13.—The Tagblatt publishes a long petition from the Russian Provincial Chambers to the Czar for constitutional rights. The petition states that the members of the Chambers, in their present degraded position, feel themselves entirely powerless to respond to the Government's appeal for aid against the Nihilists.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 13.—The Russian trade route to China is more dangerous than ever. Another Russian caravan has been robbed.

MADRID, Jan. 13.—Marshal Serrano has written to Señor Sagasta denying that he [Serrano] has seceded from the Constitutionalists and proclaiming his respect for the present institutions.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—The Governments of Germany, Great Britain, France, the United States, Italy, Belgium, Spain, and Portugal are said to have agreed to the rules drafted at Berlin to prevent collisions at sea.

BERLIN, Jan. 13.—A dispatch from St. Petersburg to the North German Gazette contradicts the report that the Czar intends to form a responsible Cabinet under Count Schouvaloff.

LONDON, Jan. 14.—A dispatch to the Daily News, from Berlin, says the Conservative journals agree in expressing scruples about the article of the Parliamentary Discipline bill which provides for handing an offending member over to the courts. This is interpreted to mean that the Government will sacrifice that provision, because a constitutional difficulty has been discovered, and not as a concession to the Reichstag.

ABOUT THE LOUISIANA OUTRAGES.

THE TELLER COMMITTEE'S INVESTIGATION—TESTIMONY FROM BOTH SIDES.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 13.—G. R. M. Newman, (colored,) Clerk of the District Court of St. Mary's Parish, testified concerning the destruction of ballot-boxes and the efforts made by Democrats to get possession of the duplicate returns in his possession, and the attack made on his house at night, &c., substantially confirming the newspaper reports published at the time of the occurrence.

W. B. McNeal, of Caddo, a Deputy Sheriff, testified concerning the Caledonia affair, corroborating Norwood's testimony. When they started from Ream's house and were fired upon, they were unarmed. The witness found a dozen stand of arms at Ream's house. The witness published the statement to the effect that 20 negroes in all were killed, but could not say when or where each negro was killed. He served in the Federal Army during the war.

Secretary of State Strong was called and requested to furnish the election statistics.

David Wise, of Tensas, testified that the election was peaceable and quiet; he lived within a quarter of a mile of Fairfax, but knew nothing of the troubles until they were over; he did not see the men, and never heard the reason of their visit. He said: "My gin was burned by negroes on Tuesday following; I don't know the reason; I never gave them any cause; I saw armed colored men marching through Waterproof the day before my gin was burned; consequently, when it was burning I was afraid to go out to see about it; I think the armed bodies of negroes came from Catahoula Parish; there were about 200 of them; next day another crowd of armed negroes came into town, made a great deal of fuss, and cried that they were going to burn the town; Fairfax was the leader of the negroes; it was understood he was keeping up the color line, making speeches, and advising the negroes to preserve a bold front; I sold ammunition at my store to any one who wanted it; the negroes did not buy an unusual quantity at this time."

H. Moss, of Tensas, testified that he gave the negroes assurances that the Waterproof people had nothing to do with the Fairfax affair; that the negroes and white people of Waterproof people were common; that "we would protect them in their rights provided they acted as they should;" "I saw negroes pass by hundreds through the town." He testified: "There may have been 1,000 of them, and they were all armed; the negroes dispersed when the Sheriff of St. Joseph arrived; they also heard that white men from Mississippi were coming; I don't believe there were more than 20 white men in Waterproof; we were very much frightened; the negroes threatened to kill the children and outrage the women; I think they would have burned the town on Tuesday if the Sheriff's posse hand't arrived."

J. S. Watson and J. G. Schaeffer, of Tensas Parish, testified that the election at St. Joseph was quiet and fair. The troubles in the parish were due to negroes, who, after the Fairfax affair, assembled in great numbers and threatened to burn the Town of Waterproof.

MR. THURMAN'S THIRD INSTALLMENT.

A BATCH OF AFFIDAVITS RECITING INTIMIDATION AND FRAUD SENT TO THE TELLER COMMITTEE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—Senator Thurman has just addressed the following letter to Hon. H. M. Teller, Chairman of the Select Commitee of Investigation:

UNITED STATES SENATE CHAMBER,
WASHINGTON, Jan. 13, 1879.

DEAR SIR: Again complying with the request of your committee for information, I have the honor to send you installment No. 3, to wit:

First—An officially certified copy from the office of the Secretary of State of Florida of an affidavit of James H. Paine, showing misconduct and violation of the law by Federal officials at the late election in Duval County, in that State.

Second—A like certified copy of an affidavit of James M. Whitaker relating to the same subject, and to the intimidation of Democratic voters by armed Republicans.

Third—A like certified copy of an affidavit of S. C. Tucker, proving that at the late election, at Precinct No. 12, Alachua County, the United States Supervisor of Election, N. P. Gruelle, insisted that the ballots, as they were cast, should be numbered to correspond with the number of each voter's name as it appeared on the registration list; and that in compliance with his demand the larger part of the ballots were so numbered, and the secrecy of the ballot thus effectually destroyed.

Fourth—A like certified copy of an affidavit of Robert M. Witherspoon, County Judge of Madison County, in said State, showing his illegal arrest and detention by a United States Commissioner and United States Marshal in order to prevent the discharge of his duties as one of the Board of Canvassers of the late election in said county.

Fifth—An affidavit of Edward S. Francis, a colored citizen of Duval County, Fla., and a member of the Board of County Commissioners of said county, proving the intimidation practiced in that State to prevent colored citizens from voting the Democratic ticket.

Sixth—An affidavit of James C. Williamson, a colored citizen of the same county, to the same effect.

Seventh—A certificate of the Sheriff and County Judge of said county, and of the President of the City Council of Jacksonville, and of the City Clerk and City Marshal, attesting the good character and standing of said Francis and Williamson.

Eighth—An affidavit of John B. Marshall, of Madison County, Fla., showing misconduct on the part of United States Deputy Marshals and intimidation practiced by them at the late election in said county.

I have a number of letters from the North and West, making specific charges of intimidation and bribery, that it may be proper that I should lay before your committee, but I withhold them until the wishes of the writers in this respect can be ascertained. I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. G. THURMAN.

ILLINOIS' SENATORIAL CONTEST.

A CAUCUS THAT PROBABLY WILL BE POSTPONED—PROSPECTS OF THE CANDIDATES.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 13.—The caucus to be held to-morrow night probably will not accomplish anything, as the friends of Farwell and Oglesby will demand a postponement on account of an alleged irregularity in the call. It is not believed that there will be a full attendance of Republicans. The Logan men may agree to an adjournment until Wednesday, but no longer. They desire to test their strength immediately and discover who, if any, will bolt the caucus. If the decision of the caucus governs all the Republicans, Logan will be elected. If there is a bolt, he will not be, and it is hazardous to predict who will be. Gov. Cullom is the second choice of the Logan men. It is rumored that enough Republicans to beat Logan have agreed to stay out of the caucus, and it is probable there is something in the rumor.

ARKANSAS LEGISLATURE ORGANIZED.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 13.—Both houses of the Legislature met at 12 o'clock to-day. The House, on the second ballot, elected K. B. Bearden, of Ouachita, Speaker; J. S. Holland, of White, Clerk, and J. G. Baxter, of Monroe, Sergeant-at-Arms. The Senate, after 20 odd ballotings, chose M. M. Duffee, of Dallas, President; L. S. Kretchmer, of Clark, Secretary; W. A. Fatherly, of Pulaski, Assistant Treasurer, and Terry Roberts, of Jefferson, Sergeant-at-Arms. Notices of organization were exchanged and both houses adjourned until to-morrow.

EARTHQUAKE SHOCK IN FLORIDA.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Jan. 13.—A severe shock of earthquake was felt here yesterday about 11:45 P. M., which lasted about 20 seconds, and appeared to move from south-east to north-west. Buildings were violently shaken, crockery rattled, and doors were thrown open. The shock was felt at St. Augustine, and down the Gulf Coast from Punta Rassa to St. Mark's, as well as over the interior portion of the State. Nothing of the kind was ever experienced here before.

TRYING OFFICIAL ROBBERS.

THE OVERTHROW OF THE WARREN COUNTY RING.

HOW DEMOCRATIC OFFICE-HOLDERS PLUNDERED THE TREASURY—SEVERAL OF THEM CONVICTED BY THE TESTIMONY OF TWO OF THE CONSPIRATORS—FOUR OTHERS NOW ON TRIAL.

BELVIDERE, N. J., Jan. 13.—The third week of the trials of the indicted officers of Warren County, of which this town is the county seat, commenced to-day, and, as has been usual, the court-room was packed to its fullest extent, while many persons were turned away for want of even standing-room. So intense is the interest manifested that the ladies' gallery has also been completely filled each day. Many of the spectators came long distances from the country. Every hotel is full to overflowing, while long rows of sleighs, drawn up before hotel and livery stables while the horses belonging to them are being taken care of, show how many country folks have come in to the trials. The large number of persons indicted, the extent of the frauds they practised, and their heretofore high social positions all have made a sensation for the generally quiet county, the like of which it has never before enjoyed.

Warren County is very old-fashioned, extremely conservative, and seldom aroused to more than a slow, easy-going movement. Ever since the county has existed as such, it being set off from Sussex in 1825, it has been governed by Democratic officials; not only was it impossible to break their yoke, but they increased in influence and strength year by year, and were supported at the polls by Democratic majorities ranging from 1,800 to 2,400. By careful manipulation the offices descended from Ring to Ring, and the retiring officials arranged matters so that those who succeeded them were of their own peculiar stamp, and, in fact, generally of their own selection. Such a long extension of power in the hands of a few could not fail to result in first, carelessness; next, small peculations, and lastly, downright, bare-faced robbery. When the peculations verged into robberies cannot now be discovered, as books and vouchers of early years are missing, but for at least 8, if not 12, years the county has undoubtedly been robbed. The first time that the suspicions of the tax-payers were aroused was in 1870, when the present Court-house was being remodeled. So large were the expenses of the work in proportion with what was done that a number of citizens demanded to see the vouchers. But the county officers then in power met the grumblers in their own peculiar ways, and the Ring influence was put to work to suppress any investigation. Those who could be controlled were brought under subjection, others were shown carefully-prepared vouchers and papers which made out an appearance of correctness, and so the storm passed over. Two years later a swindle known as the Titman bridge affair was exposed, and in this case the officials were cornered and had to refund $300. The sum was not very large, but the fact that any sum at all could be stolen, and then only be found out by chance, opened the eyes of some of the tax-payers, and they watched the course of events very closely. But do what they would they could not get inside the ring, and repeatedly examine the books and vouchers of the officials. They saw the county expenses increase year by year until, in the Spring of 1877, the Board of Freeholders then in office voted to levy from the tax-payers the sum of $75,000 to pay so-called current expenses of the year. Only a few years before, $25,000 had been amply sufficient for such purposes, but the amount was gradually raised year by year as the conspirators and holder until $75,000, the largest sum ever called for, was arrived at.

But the magnitude of the sum proved the ruin of the robbers. The tax-payers, who in Warren County are principally farmers, grumbled louder and louder, and at length a man was found who declared that, if he was elected to the Board of Freeholders by his fellow-townsmen, he would thoroughly probe the whole matter, and discover where and how the money of the county was used so lavishly. This man was Caleb Swayze, of Hope Village. He was a strong Republican, living in a very stronghold of the Democrats, but as honest and trustworthy, and his position and wealth as a prosperous merchant, his advanced years and his reputation for carrying out any purpose to which he might set himself, carried him into a seat in the County Board of Freeholders. The other men, on whose ticket he was, saw their danger, and prepared for it by doctoring their vouchers and books. Simon A. Cummins was the County Collector, and as such he had charge of the finances of the county. In league with him were Dr. Mattison, the Clerk of the Board of Freeholders; Charles S. Strader, Director of the Board; John N. Givens, Counsellor at Law, and Chairman of the Finance Committee, and eight other Freeholders. They so arranged the books as to hide their thefts, or at least so they thought, but Mr. Swayze was too much of an expert in book-keeping to be easily blinded, and he at once discovered that the accounts were falsified.

Then came out the mode by which the county had been robbed. The Collector is authorized by vote of the board to borrow money during the Summer and Fall in anticipation of the taxes, which cannot be collected until December. In most counties in New-Jersey the money is borrowed from a bank, which is selected as the place of deposit of the county funds, and a proper check is kept upon the Collector as to how much money he borrows and what notes he gives out. But in Warren the Collector has been allowed to borrow money from his particular friends, and thus gives them a chance to get a good interest, free from taxation, on their money. When these notes came to and were passed in the settlement with the Board of Freeholders, and were supposed to be canceled and carefully filed away by their clerk, Dr. Mattison. To take one of those paid notes, sometimes as much as two years old, to erase the word "paid" which was written across the face, and to change the name of the person in whose favor it was drawn to one somewhat similar, was nothing for so expert a penman as Dr. Mattison, and then the doctored note was presented to the Collector and again paid. Another method of fraud was to raise bridge orders by adding or changing a figure, so that $30 became $300, or $1,000 became $2,000.

Such were the disclosures made by Mr. Swayze's examinations of the books and vouchers. Two of the conspirators sought safety in flight, and the remainder staid bravely at their homes and placed all the blame on those who had fled. But Mattison and Dean were captured and lodged in jail here. The former kept dumb, and would not admit his guilt or give information about his companions. Dean, however, broke down at once, and divulged everything to the County Prosecutor. That he had done so, however, was unknown until it was too late for the other conspirators to escape, and so it happened that the Grand Jury indicted 12 of them in September, and all were arrested before they knew their danger. Dr. Mattison's subsequent escape from jail by cutting the bars of his window, his recapture and conviction on four indictments for forgery, and his confession, which gave the Prosecutor all the information needed to convict the others, have already been published. Following Mattison's trial and conviction came the trials of Charles S. Strader, the Director of the Board; Dr. Henry M. Cox, one of the board, and John B. Slaker, a contractor, who was given profitable jobs and was helped by the conspirators to rob the county. All these were convicted, and are either confined in the jail or are out on bail.

The trial of three more of the conspirators began on Wednesday last, and was taken all the time of the court up to this evening. Those under trial are Cummings, the ex-Collector; John N. Givens, late attorney of the board, and Edwin E. Bulsin, a friend of the Collector, who acted as a go-between, and Strader, the ex-Director, was tried again on a new indictment. Prosecutor Harris had charge of the case for the people, being aided by State Attorney-General Stockton and E. Byington, Jr., of Newark. The prisoners were defended by Jahiel G. Shipman, Col. Robeson, and William H. Morrow, all of Belvidere. As the Prosecutor was until lately a law partner of Givens, one of the prisoners, he refrained from taking any part in the argument in summing up. The State showed by the evidence of Mattison and Dean that the four conspirators now on trial met in November, 1877, in the Warren House, and that Cummings occupied one room, and the others, with Dean, were in one adjoining. Bulgin was simply the friend of Cummings, who was to deal between him and the conspirators, and to Bulgin was given an altered note of $5,000, which he was trusted to take to Cummings and get the money upon it. This note was originally given by Edmund Teel, the Collector before Cummings, in favor of David Mixsell. It had been afterward paid by Teel, and filed away among the board papers, and thus it came into the hands of Mattison, who turned it over to Dean. Dean altered the name in the body of the note to Daniel Mitchell, but the work was done so badly that no person could help seeing the marks of the erasure and the blotting of the new writing on the scraped surface of the paper. Mattison, Dean, the note itself, and the books made up the evidence offered by the prosecution.

The defense was that Givens was sick in bed at the time, and could not have been in the conspiracy; that Bulgin was not in town at all on the day said date charged, and that the whole evidence of Mattison and Dean was untrue and unworthy of belief. The sensation of the trial was occasioned by the defense producing the long-sought-for cash-book, which Cummings said he had destroyed. It was at once recognized by Mr. Swayze as the book he was first shown by the Collector, and in which he discovered the frauds. The defense used every effort to impeach the testimony of Mattison and Dean by proving their bad character, and they also tried to prove an alibi for Bulgin, but failed utterly. None of the prisoners were placed on the stand, although they could have testified in their own defense had they been willing to subject themselves to the cross-examination of the State attorney's. They rested their defense at 3 o'clock, when Mr. Byington briefly explained the case of the State, and was followed by Col. Robeson for the prisoners in a long speech, which occupied the time up to 5 o'clock. To-morrow Counselor Shipman is to speak two hours for the defense, and then Attorney-General Stockton will close on behalf of the State.

THE MURDERER HUNTER BURIED.

QUIET SERVICES AT THE HANGED MAN'S HOUSE—CROWDS OF PEOPLE AROUND BUT NO DEMONSTRATION.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 13.—The remains of Benjamin Hunter, the murderer of Armstrong, were quietly buried to-day at Mount Peace Cemetery, a retired ground near Laurel Hill. There had been no public announcement, and curiosity was somewhat baffled as to the time of the funeral. People collected yesterday in front of Hunter's house, in Tenth-street, near Wharton-street, where the hanged man had lived about 30 years, and to which, it was known to-day, the body had been taken after execution. The house remained, however, perfectly quiet, with the upper shutters tightly closed and those below barred. There was no crape on the door and little or no sign of life. By 9 o'clock this morning two clergymen, Rev. Mr. Kunkelman, a Lutheran, and Rev. Mr. Allen, a Presbyterian, who had been Hunter's spiritual advisers during his imprisonment, arrived and quietly entered with a few near relatives of the family. The house was then perfectly quiet outside until, as people began to gather, by 10 o'clock the opposite sidewalks were crowded. There was no demonstration of any sort, however.

Inside, the body of Hunter was laid out in a rosewood coffin, covered with black cloth and heavily mounted with silver. On the lid was a silver plate with the name and age of the dead man, and a large cross of flowers with the words "Our Father." The funeral services began at 9:30 o'clock. About 30 persons were present, and no others were admitted. Both ministers preached. A few minutes after 10 o'clock a hearse and 10 carriages drew up in front of the door. The coffin was carried out and placed in the hearse. Following were John Hunter, brother of the dead man, escorting the widow, both in deep mourning, and next were Hunter's son and eldest daughter, then the twin girls, the youngest children accompanied by a sister of Hunter, an aged woman, who showed deep grief. The carriages were driven quickly away. The crowd, including many women and children, ran after the procession several squares, but gradually fell behind. At the cemetery the coffin was placed in a receiving-vault

STATE LAWS AND PROBLEMS

GOSSIP ABOUT COMMITTEES AND SENATORS.

MEMBERS OF ASSEMBLY AT THEIR HOMES—SPEAKER ALVORD NOT TO BE FOUND—SOME TALK ABOUT THE SENATORIAL CAUCUS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 13.—Scarcely a member of Assembly is to be found in this city to-day, and there has been almost an entire absence of gossip about the Assembly committees. Speaker Alvord disappeared from Stanwix Hall on Saturday evening, and it was given out that he had gone to Syracuse for rest. No one believes the statement, however. A. B. Cornell is here, and is only visible for a few hours each day. The belief among Republicans who know about some things not intended for general information, is that, following the custom of newly-elected Speakers, Mr. Alvord has betaken himself to the private residence of one of his friends here, and that he will remain "in sanctuary" until Wednesday morning. Then he will emerge with his list of committees ready for announcement. In the meantime there is some talk about the coming Senatorial caucus, but the prospect seems to be entirely favorable for the nomination of United States Senator, which will be held on Tuesday. The object in postponing the publication of the committees is plainly understood. By waiting until after the election, the whole body of Republicans will be kept in line, undisturbed by any feeling of dissatisfaction that might be caused by the distribution of the honors. This delay has been practiced on a former similar occasion, and was then found to be a wise precaution. After the Senator is elected, all cause for complaint will wear itself out. Should the committees be announced before the caucus or election, opportunity would be given to the disappointed men to combine for retaliatory purposes, and the leaders are too sagacious foolishly to extend this tempting chance to creatures made up of ordinary flesh and blood.

ONE ECONOMICAL DEPARTMENT.

THE CREDIT DUE TO ATTORNEY-GENERAL SCHOONMAKER—HIS COURSE APPARENTLY DISTASTEFUL TO THE DEMOCRATS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 13.—Gov. Robinson's Message contains one passage that will probably be misunderstood by the majority of its readers; a passage that is really important as showing that in one department of the State Government the Administration of Lucius Robinson has been a great improvement upon that of the same department under Tilden. The Gramercy Park reformer, in his own peculiar way, managed to dispose of offices requiring tact and judgment, as well as character, to inexperienced and incapable men worthy to be ranked with the famous "nincompoops" of the Liberty-street Literary Bureau who were assisting Hewitt to distribute mules and other convincing Democratic arguments. It is worth while just now to direct attention to the manner in which the office of the Attorney-General has been conducted by Augustus Schoonmaker, Jr., and to note how much money has been saved in a year without any neglect of necessary business.

The Governor's Message states that the cost of the department for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30 was about $56,000. That was a very large sum of money, and as the report included nine months of the administration of Attorney-General Schoonmaker, it would appear at first glance as though he had been responsible for making the State law department one of the most expensive of the Government. In reality, the bulk of this expense was a legacy left by that unpopular pet of Tilden, Attorney-General Fairchild. Under Fairchild there was no hesitation to employ "assistant counsel" whenever the indolent head of the department felt indisposed to work himself. Among the items of expense incurred in 1877 that were put in the Supply bill of 1878, and thus found their way into the accounts for the fiscal year referred to, is a charge of $11,000 for the services on the Ellis trial of a New-York law firm; $549 left from Attorney-General Pratt; $3,000 expense for the trial of Phelps, the State Treasurer who defaulted; $100 on the old canal cases; $250 which the State had to pay on account of J. B. Parmenter's determination to have a record of the Ellis trial, and $6,000 in various items, all, however, outside counsel employed by Fairchild. Attorney-General Schoonmaker, when he came into office was permitted to increase the force in his office by appointing an additional Deputy. He has now Deputy Attorneys-General Ruggles and Paige, and two clerks and a messenger. The salary of the Attorney-General is $5,000; the two deputies receive $8,000 between them; the clerks and messenger, $3,000, and about $16,000 or $17,000 annually, exclusive of outside counsel fees. These amounted, in 1878, to $60. The only outside counsel called upon were two, then, except in several cases so arranged for that the expense attending the employment of counsel fell upon the persons interested, and did not become a burden upon the tax-payers. A very small appropriation may be asked for this year, to meet contingencies, but the purpose of the Attorney-General is to get all the work out of the office that it is possible for the force in it to perform.

In addition to transacting all the usual business of the office, a new field has been explored. Mr. Ruggles, the first deputy, is perhaps one of the most indefatigable, old-fashioned workers that ever got into office. An incident will illustrate his conscientious method, and the reason the Fairchild was far from being as vigilant as he ought to have been. The Board of Audit, which was organized in 1876, and is composed of the Secretary of State, the Treasurer, and the Controller, meets at the beginning of each month and hears and pass upon claims that must afterward be approved by the Legislature in order to be honored by the Controller. When, a week after he came into office, Mr. Ruggles was given a day's notice that the Board of Audit was ready to proceed with business, he determined to attend the sitting. With all the papers in his possession that he could find, he presented himself, and by dint of persistence managed to have most of the claims presented delayed until the following month. In the meantime he acquainted himself minutely with the nature and merits of each, and was able to oppose or favor them intelligently. In the course of the year about $350,000 in claims have been rejected through this means, many of which were only discovered to be improper or unworthy solely through patient study. There are still many disputed claims, large in amount, pending before the board, and it is probable that the largest of them will be finally rejected. The importance of killing doubtful claims in the Board of Audit cannot be disputed. If they once pass the board, and reach the Legislature in the Supply bill, it is almost impossible to suppose that the Senate or Assembly can make the careful examination of each item that the Board of Audit can. The efficiency of the board depends altogether upon the care and minuteness with which its scrutiny of claims is conducted, and no examination is adequate that is conducted without the knowledge necessary to discern local imperfections or inaccuracies.

It may appear strange, but I am led to believe that the report is true, that notwithstanding the credit that Attorney-General Schoonmaker has won with men or sense, he has not made himself popular with the Democratic Party. While there has been absolutely none of the gossip about the present Attorney-General that there was about his predecessor, he is set down by politicians as a "dead cock in the pit," as hopelessly out of the race for any office whatever, as one of the least popular men now in office in Albany. The men who speak of him as a possible candidate for Gov. Robinson's place are laughed at as "green," and the prediction is somewhat hazardously made that he can never hope to be elected again to any place whatever.

THE NEW-JERSEY ASSEMBLY.

CANDIDATES FOR OFFICES IN THE SENATE AND ASSEMBLY—THE ORGANIZATION TO BE EFFECTED TO-DAY.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 13.—The fear among Republicans and the hope among Democrats that the serious illness of Senator Leaming, of Cape May, would defer, not prevent, the organization of the Senate by the Republicans, was dispelled by the appearance of the Senator in Trenton this evening. He looks somewhat pale and feels a little weak, but he thinks he will be able to keep on his feet until the organization shall have been safely effected, to-morrow afternoon, by the election of Republican officers.

An exciting canvass is in progress among them, but the only contest is over the Presidency. A resolution passed three or four years ago in the Republican caucus declared that the President of the Senate for one year should hold for three terms. Senator Sewell, who was President in 1876, is entitled to the position by party usage. Senator Hobart's friends admit the propriety of the claim, and ask for the place for the Passaic Senator only because this is the last year of his term. It would be such a graceful thing, they say, if Gen. Sewell, who is just entering on a new term of three years, would only stand by for this year, and claim the honor next year and the year after. The friends of Gen. Sewell do not quite appreciate the entire gracefulness of that course of procedure, and they are making a warm canvass for him. The result of it is that those best informed to-night predict the General's nomination at the caucus to-morrow. It was understood that the Camden Senator would go into caucus with the solid West Jersey delegation, and that Senator Hobart would have the support of the East Jersey Senators. The air this evening is thick with rumors of defections from both sides. Gardner, of Atlantic, and Cramer, of Warren, are said to be disposed toward Hobart, while Francis, of Essex, is claimed to be for Sewell. On the other hand, it is said, however, that Gardner will gracefully yield his personal preferences and stand with the West Jersey Senators in the caucus. Little interest attaches, of course, to the Democratic caucuses. They are mere matters of form. The only fact of interest in connection with them is that Beekman, Independent Democrat, from Monmouth, refuses to go into caucus with the Democrats. The same story was told of Cramer's probable relations to the Republican caucus, but high authority says that the story is unfounded. If Gen. Sewell is elected President, then the whole list of officers for 1876 will resume their seats.

Notices were posted in the hotels to-night announcing a caucus of Republican Assemblymen for 9 o'clock. The call is issued, it is stated, in answer to the wish of a majority of the Republican members. The caucus was called to order in the Assembly Chamber. Ten members were absent. They are said to be friends of Deacon, of Burlington, who is one of the candidates for Speaker, and who wants the caucus deferred until morning. A few of Deacon's friends attended the caucus, and he is making a strong pull for the position. It is the opinion this evening of those best informed that Jackson, of Essex, is reasonably sure of the nomination. He is thought to have had friends enough in the caucus to have given it to him this evening, but out of courtesy to Deacon's friends they adjourned until to-morrow morning without balloting. Ex-Assemblyman Cooper, of Morris, will be Clerk. He will be paid the very handsome and unusual compliment of a unanimous nomination. He was the leader of the Republican phalanx in the Assembly of last year. The Democrats feared his generalship, and for that reason unseated him. John W. Herbert, of Jersey City, was in the field against him, but withdrew when it was evident that he could not win, and is now struggling with ex-Assemblyman Goble for the engrossing clerkship. His chances are being impaired, however, by the fact that Herbert Potts, who is to be the Reading Clerk of the House, is also a Jersey City man. John B. Fell has a clear field for Sergeant-at-arms.

SUBJECTS FOR ITS DISCUSSION.

Notwithstanding the large number of public acts on the statute-book of New-Jersey, and the requirement of its Constitution that all laws shall be general, the session of the Legislature of that State which begins this week promises to be prolific of business. Some of the members desire an early adjournment, but if one-half the bills noticed receive careful consideration the session is likely to be prolonged for about the usual period. The first business will be the repeal of the partisan Democratic legislation of last year, including the Redistricting act, the Students Disfranchising bill, the new wards in Newark, &c. Among bills asked for are the following: To create a State Insurance Commissioner separate from the Secretary of State, who now fills that office; to reduce the State tax from one mill to a half mill, as recommended by the State Controller; to reduce salaries and fees of State officials, Judges of courts, prosecutors, &c.; to pay all official salaries and pay all fees into county treasuries; to establish communication between Jersey City and Communipaw by a bridge across the canal at Washington-street; to authorize a free road between Newark and Jersey City; to abolish all convict labor; to repeal the State Labor Bureau, or to increase its powers; to reduce the number of Freeholders in counties to one from each ward or township; to reduce State and municipal taxes, and limit municipal indebtedness; to establish a College of Metallurgy at Perth Amboy; to supply Amboy with water; to provide for a county representation in the State Council; to establish a State Inebriate Asylum, and a State Deaf and Dumb and Blind Institution; to alter the law concerning investments of assets of insurance companies; for a better supervision of trust institutions; to abolish the office of Auditor in Monmouth County; to increase the rate of interest to 7 per cent.; for a State Board to equalize taxes; to require payment of poll-tax before voting; to equalize taxes in Union County; to carry into effect the Constitutional Act of Finance in Elizabeth; to make mortgages subject to lien claims; to make taxes and assessments a first lien; to prevent robbery of estates by Executors, Trustees, guardians, &c.; to prevent grave-robbing or body-snatching; to authorize counties to make donations to children's homes, orphan asylums, &c.; to repeal the act for registry of births, marriages, deaths, &c.; to set off part of Monroe, Middlesex County, to Milstone, Monmouth County; to protect the shore property owned by the State; to reduce the number of District Courts in cities to one; to exempt Hudson County from the operations of the District Courts law, to increase the terms of constables from one year to three; to reduce jurors' pay from $2 to $1; to prevent the pollution of Passaic River above Belleville; to prevent abandonment of wrecks; to abolish the Board of Assessors, and to authorize the Lehigh Valley Railroad to abandon part of the Morris Canal; to repeal the act authorizing purchase of Morris Canal for water supply for Newark and vicinity; to enable the Philadelphia Methodist Episcopal Conference to become part owner of Pennington Seminary; to annex Chambersburg to Trenton; to repave streets in Newark; to authorize Newark to sell Belleville Hill property; to renew for 30 years the charter of the Elizabeth Insurance Company; to regulate the height of Morris canal bridges; to bridge the Passaic River at Centre-street, Newark; for a general law to govern cities; to reduce the cost of printing the laws; to create a State Printing Bureau; to make labor by prisoners compulsory; to invest the school fund only in Government, State, county, or city bonds; for a new charter for Jersey City; abolishing Board of Finance, Public Works, Corporation Counsel, &c.; for an insurance patrol in large cities; to exempt all church property from taxation; to reopen Bergen City as a township, or to limit its powers of expenditure; to reduce the salary of Prosecutor in Essex County to $5,000; to create new Assembly districts in Essex County; to change the law of libel; to complete the boundary line between Passaic and Bergen; to set off Mount Grove and Asbury Park and vicinity into a distinct township.

Among the reports to be presented to the Legislature none will be looked for with more interest by those who feel concerned in the welfare of the prisons of the day, than the first statement of the Bureau of Statistics of Labor and Industry, created by the Legislature last Winter. There is likely to be much disappointment at the report. It does not answer questions that puzzle the wisest of students and statesmen, and the information afforded by the tables is not as full as could be desired. This is naturally explained by the fact that the bureau is new, its workings not fully understood, the difficulty of getting active agents to assist in the principal cities, and that in many cases the employers and employes showed a decided unwillingness to furnish the information called for. So far as the tables go, they throw much light on the social condition of the working classes. The unpleasant fact is presented that a large percentage—ten per cent—of the yearly average wages earned by families is carned by the wives and children of working men. It also appears that one of the most serious evils the the employes have to meet is the great amount of time lost, through no fault of their own, by the fluctuations of trade. Thus, men will be reputed to earn $12 and $15 a week, but at the end of the year they find their wages for the year have not averaged more than $8 or $10, on account of lost time.

The laws restricting the employment of children appear to be quite generally a dead letter, and largely because parents themselves send their little children to the mills to eke out the scanty earnings of the head of the family. To the question, "Do you know of any children who have acquired a competence from the savings of his daily wages?" the answer is an almost unanimous negative. The employes mostly prefer piece-work to weekly wages. As a partial solution of the question of finding labor for the unemployed, the chief suggests that there are hundreds of thousands of acres of unimproved land in West Jersey which needs to be barely tickled with a hoe to blossom with the most plenteous harvests of small fruits, garden-truck, and the like. Some interesting facts are given showing the remarkable prosperity of several little colonies of families who, with less than $100 capital each, have in five or six years acquired quite comfortable homes and are making a good living on the fertile wastes south of Vineland. This land is held, in tracts of 20,000 acres and upward, by detectionists at the rate of 200 years ago, and Chief Bishop has been corresponding with some of them to induce them to throw the territory open to settlement. It is believed that half a million persons could support themselves by tilling the soil of West Jersey. To enable the bureau to prosecute its work more effectively, it is suggested that the appropriation of $4,500 should be increased, to allow of the employment of additional agents to collect statistics.

AMENDING THE LAWS OF NATIONS.

The Association for the Reform and Codification of the Laws of Nations, which was organized in October, 1873, at the Hotel de Ville, Brussels, for the purpose of discussing questions and suggesting amendments of international law, has issued a brief report of the results of its work. At the second conference, held at Geneva in 1874, committees were appointed on the subject of a uniform law on bills of exchange, collisions at sea, and international arbitration. At a conference held at The Hague in the following year several measures affecting the two questions were considered. An international commission was appointed to settle the fundamental rules regarding bills of exchange. In 1876 that commission, in which the United States was represented, submitted 20 rules, which were adopted. A committee appointed to settle and draft rules for regulating general average losses met at the Hotel de Ville, Antwerp, in 1877, and concurred in what are known as the York and Antwerp rules, and which are now occupying the attention of the shipping and insurance interests in Europe, the United States, and the British colonies. A very general desire has been manifested in England and Scotland to adopt the rules, a large number of ship and steam-ship owners having signified their intention to insert the York and Antwerp rules in all bills of lading and charter-parties after Jan. 1, 1879. At the sixth annual conference of the association, held August, 1878, at Frankfort-on-the-Main, a committee was appointed, in accordance with the recommendation of the Frankfort Chamber of Commerce, to collect information in regard to transferable securities payable to bearer, such as represent State loans, railway shares, municipal loans, &c. The rules which regulate the issue of this class of securities, according to the laws and practice in different countries, are very variable. The next conference will be held early in August next at Guildhall, London.

ANCIENT AFRICAN CITIES.

TUNIS AND CARTHAGE.

TO TUNIS BY STEAMER—THE PALACE OF THE BEY—A DISMAL GRAVE-YARD—CARTHAGE AND ITS CURIOSITIES — VESTIGES OF ANTIQUITY.

From a Special Correspondent.

TUNIS, Monday, Dec. 16, 1878.

I am here at last, but not without difficulty, Algeria being one of those places which are much easier to get into than to get out of. The interests of the public have certainly been admirably consulted in the arrangement of the local communications, the Biskra stage reaching Batna exactly one hour after the departure of the diligence for Constantine, and the Constantine train getting down to Philippeville in excellent time to give the traveler a fine view of his boat steaming leisurely out of the harbor. But despite these considerate arrangements, the inhabitants have been unreasonable enough to complain, and even to draw up a formal petition which may possibly produce some change when the authorities have time to look at it. Of the intermediate port of Bona, little need be said, except that it forms the sixth of the "uniform series" of seaboard towns, described in my letter of Dec. 7. It must be owned, however, that the last two towns of this series are a decided improvement upon the other four. Bona has actually advanced so far as to possess a handsome stone quay, where one may step ashore without fear of clamorous boatmen, whose ignorance of the laws of physical science makes them contemplate thrusting a man into 20 boats at once. At Philippeville again, where no such quay exists, the authorities have hit upon the ingenious plan of deputing an uncompromising old gentleman in a sail-cloth cape to receive the legal boat-hire from every passenger before embarking, thus leaving the boatmen themselves no chance of extorting a sou, which may account for their wearing one and all, the dejected look of men who feel that their life is a failure. From Bona to Tunis is only one day's voyage, although, in this glorious weather, no one would be likely to regret its lasting thrice as long, especially as our saloon party are all old travelers, and very pleasant, sociable fellows. For a wonder, we have on board neither that troublesome "autocrat of the breakfast table," who must always have everything his own way, nor that still more objectionable individual, whose mission is, apparently, to roam over the whole ship, from stem to stern, asking the meaning of everything he sees, and plaguing the Captain and officers, when at their very busiest, with ingeniously trivial questions. I remember one of these pests on the voyage from the Cape Verde Islands to Brazil, who crowned his performances by getting hold of the Captain's sextant and pulling it about, saying that he was "making an observation," whereupon the Captain made another which I had better not repeat.

Tunis, though deprived of its most lucrative trade by the suppression of piracy, has still a considerable traffic, carried on chiefly by the Jews, who form at least one-fifth of its 120,000 inhabitants. The city itself, with the exception of a few handsome streets, near the main railway depot, is merely the "Arab quarter" of Algiers over again; but the approach from the sea forms an unsurpassed picture. In the brightness of the early morning you glide into a deep, smooth, land-locked bay, flanked on one side by the towering peaks of a magnificent range of mountains, and on the other by a succession of low green slopes, in the hollow of which the broken remains of a splendid reservoir are all that is left to show where Carthage once stood. Across the deep blue of the bay, like a bar-sinister drawn athwart some brilliant escutcheon, lies the sandy sheal that separates the open water from the shallow lagoon on which Tunis rests; while the little town of Goletta, on a low promontory midway along the great crescent, throws its dazzling whiteness into the panorama, although a small round-shouldered fort, through whose embrasures a few rusty guns peep timidly, as if in terror lest some one should come and fire them, is now the sole representative of the terrible batteries which Admiral Blake's cannon blew to pieces in 1648. A 25 minutes' run by train along the sandy beach of the lagoon, in a queer little car, with a railed gallery along either side of it, brings you to Tunis itself, which lies along the level shore in one great mass of white, like a drift of new-fallen snow. The Bey's country palace of Bardo, four miles from the town, has a high reputation as one of the local sights; but, in strict justice, one can only say, "There was nothing to see, and I saw it." Any one who has visited a decayed mansion in the Faubourg St. Germain, at Paris, in which a few old family portraits and tapestries still lingered as remnants of its former splendor, can imagine the interior for himself; while the exterior, with its bare white walls and gaping doorways, looks exactly like a railway station smitten with leprosy. The most picturesque sight of all is precisely that which no one ever notices, viz., the great native cemetery outside the town. On the slope of the ridge which overhangs the lower extremity of the bay. On the brightest and clearest morning that bare, bleak hill-side, with its countless graves, would look gloomy enough; but seen beneath the fast-falling shadows of a December night, its desolation becomes absolutely overwhelming. The jagged rocks on one side, shelving steeply away down to the sandy shore; the ancient Roman wall on the other, looming out against the darkening sky in gaunt and ghastly ruin; the wilderness of broken headstones, crumbling tombs, low, white domes showing spectrally through the deepening gloom, with their one narrow entrance yawning black and grim in the centre; the dismal "Salt Lake" glimmering faintly amid the darkness far below; the Plain of Carthage in the distance, with all its fearful memories; the dead, utter silence, broken only by the shriek of some passing nightbird, all combine to form the wildest and most dreary panorama imaginable, in the presence of which the hideous fancies of Eastern mythology, the ghoul, the vampire, the afrit, appear not merely possible, but perfectly natural.

CARTHAGE, Tuesday, Dec. 17, 1878.

The New-York of antiquity, as Carthage may fairly be called, is so essentially a thing of the past that to approach it by railway appears quite a solecism. Rome and Damascus are still living cities, and there is nothing unnatural in entering the one by train, or the other by stage; but it certainly does seem incongruous to rattle up in a well-cushioned steam-car, with a first-class ticket in one's pocket, to the site of a capital whose independent existence ended 2,000 years ago. Nevertheless, the spot is well worth visiting, if only for the sake of the cordial welcome and inexhaustible information given to all comers by good Father Bresson, of the French Mission, whose neat little Chapel of St. Louis, with its low white wall and embowering foliage, marks the spot where the last of the crusading Kings of France perished fruitlessly in 1270. From this central point, once the actual citadel of Carthage, what is left of the famous city may be taken in at a glance. In the garden of the chapel itself, a few uneven blocks of fire-charred stone mark the site of the Temple of Æsculapius, which the last defenders of Carthage fired over their own heads when all was lost. On the summit of the same ridge, one solitary fragment of crumbling masonry represents the Palace of Dido. The Temple of Jupiter, where Hannibal swore his fatal oath of eternal enmity to Rome, shows its half-destroyed foundation through heaps of rubbish, a little to the right; while all around the base of the hill lie, thick as hail, the smooth, round sling-stones that dealt death among the Roman legionaries as they came charging up the slope on a bright Summer morning in 146 B. C. Far out on the plain, the course of Adrian's aqueduct is marked by a line of broken arches, and a little Arab village stands on the spot where Regulus fought his last battle, while a vast hollow on either side of the railway betrays the site of the famous Circus where the "Martyrs of Carthage" died for their faith. This smooth plateau sloping down to the sea, so thickly strewn with ruins that every step crushes some fragment of the ancient city, was once the fashionable quarter of the Punic beau monde, traversed by the Carthaginian Broadway, the Via Cœlestis, leading to the great theatre, whose circular basement is still visible beside the broken remnants of the Gymnasium. On the brow of the hill above still linger a few traces of the fort that defended the harbor, and below it, last and grandest of all, is the splendid reservoir whose mighty arches, overshadowing the deep, still water beneath, have all the effect of a Gothic cathedral built over a Venetian canal.

But it behooves me to close my chronicle and make haste on board, for the wind is already rising, and before we reach Corsica most of my fellow-passengers will probably realize to the full the impromptu version of "Partant pour la Syrie," wherewith I startled our French officers last night:

"Partant pour l'Algérie
Le jeune et simple Danois;
Son billet il a pris,
Et payé cher, ma foi!
'Ecoute donc, O bon Dieu,' Il prie en s'embarquant,
'Fais que le ciel soit bleu,
Et pas un souffle de vent.'

"Les vagues roulent ça et là,
Danois ne sentit mal;
Il va tout droit au bas.
Le visage triste et pâle.
'Qu'une fois j'atteigne la terre,'
Il crie en vomissant,
'Je n'irai plus en mer,
Pas même pour dix mille francs!'"

THE STORM ON THE ATLANTIC.

The officers of the steam-ship Canima, which arrived from Bermuda yesterday, say that the recent gales were very severe at that island, and that the cold weather has been unprecedented, and has caused a great deal of injury to the crops. Several vessels had put into Bermuda in distress just before the Canima sailed, but their names had not been ascertained. The steam-ship London Castle, from Amoy for this port, was passed at Murray's anchorage, having been obliged to stop there for a fresh supply of coal.

The bark Annapolis, which arrivnd from Rouen yesterday, was 142 miles south-east of Sandy Hook on Dec. 5, and was blown off the coast by a north-west gale. On the 7th she was 200 miles east of Barnegat, but she was struck aback in a fierce squall, and every square sail on the vessel was split. She got to within five miles of Montauk Light on the 23d, but was again driven off to the coast by a gale, which lasted for 14 days, and at the expiration of that time she was 460 miles off Sandy Hook. The gale was fearful from the 2d to the 5th of the present month, and the vessel was under bare poles for 65 hours.

The brig Robert Mowe, from Port Spain, was driven 300 miles off the coast; the brig Afghan, from Prince Edward Island, was blown off over 200 miles, and, in fact, nearly every square vessel which arrived yesterday or the day previous was driven back by the recent gales, many of them losing sails, and quite a number having bulwarks washed away, cabins broken in, and other similar damage. Abandoned vessels, the names of which were not ascertained, were sighted by the bark Charles L. Pearson and the ship Paulina, which are timed yesterday. The former left Hong-kong and the latter from Havre. Seamen on the bark Boylesta and the brig Robert Mowe were badly frostbitten. The bark Themis, over 100 days out from London for this port, has again been spoken and supplied with provisions, this time by the Bonny Doon, which arrived from Bordeaux yesterday. The steam-ship Rhein, of the North German Lloyd Line, which arrived from Bremen yesterday, had a remarkably stormy passage, head gales and very heavy fierce squalls, having been met with during the entire voyage. No sail could be carried, and the decks were frequently swept by the heavy waves, which washed over the sides of the vessel, but no damage was sustained.

The schooner B. J. Willard, from Laguayra, had fine weather to Hatteras, which was passed Jan 2. On the following night, 40 miles south-east of Cape Henlopen, Del., she met a very heavy north-west gale, with rain, snow, and sleet, which froze as it fell. Three seamen, Anthony Brown, James Wentosh, and Robert Borett, were badly frostbitten while taking in sail. The schooner blew off for over three days. On the 9th, when 35 miles from Barnegat, another violent storm from the north-west was encountered, which lasted 12 hours, during which the Willard's sails and rigging were badly iced up. Anthony Brown died on the 11th. The schooner Victor Puig, from Rio Janeiro, experienced heavy north-east and north-west gales during her passage, and lost her deck load of logwood and boat, stove galley, skylight, and cabin doors, and had her cabin filled with water. She was 27 days north of Hatteras, and was off Absecom Dec. 15, but was blown off east of the Gulf Stream. The schooner Hattie E. King, from Havana, was 10 days north of Hatteras in a gale, which carried away her boat, foresail, and quarter-sail, stove in the cabin skylight and doors, and filled it with water, besides other damage. A Lloyd's salvage report also states that 12 of the crew of the lost British bark Gunhilda, from Baltimore, for Bordeaux, were saved, leaving only two missing.

THE BROOKLYN ALDERMEN.

The Brooklyn Board of Aldermen met yesterday, President Ray in the chair. A large crowd of politicians attended, in the hope that the Aldermen would complete the list of appointments in their gift, but no action in that direction was taken. Alderman Ray offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Common Council that the Controller advance no more funds for the construction of bridges until the Commissioners of the City of New York shall, through her proper officers, express her willingness to pay her quota toward the completion of the same.

After some debate the resolution was adopted by a vote of 19 to 4. A resolution was also adopted calling on the Legislature to take such steps as would defeat the jou involved in the contract for the new jail, and requesting the passage of a law requiring that all prisoners committed for a greater length of time than 15 days be sent to the Penitentiary. A communication was received from the Women's Christian Temperance Union calling attention to the pernicious sports and tastes as has been presented at Mozart Garden for several Sundays past in the pedestrian exploits of Mme. Anderson." The union claims that the opening of the garden on Sunday, and the admission of people on payment of fees, is a violation of the law. The communication, "which was referred to the Law Committee," ends as follows: "We, as women, enter our protest against this pitiful display of womanhood as alike contrary to the dictates of humanity and God."

PLEADING GUILTY TO MANSLAUGHTER.

John S. Downing, a shoemaker, indicted for murder in the first degree, in having, as alleged, beat en and ill-treated his wife Margaret so brutally as to cause her death, was arraigned before Judge Cowing, in General Sessions, yesterday. Counsel for the prisoner offered a plea of manslaughter in the first degree, and asked that sentence be deferred in order to allow him an opportunity of introducing testimony of good character. Assistant District Attorney Rollins, in accepting the plea, said that he believed, in view of all the circumstances of the case, that the prisoner had pleaded to the full offense of which he was guilty. Judge Cowing remanded Downing until Friday next, in order to examine into the case before pronouncing sentence.

THE NEW-YORK ELEVATED ROAD.

The committee appointed by the Tax-payers' Association of Yorkville to visit the officers of the New-York Elevated Railroad, and request additional and improved accommodation, called at the offices of the company yesterday and were informed that everything possible was being done. The firm having the contract for heating the cars will have about two-thirds the entire number ready for heating to-morrow. When the road is completed there will be 10 terminal stations. It is expected that the ground at Ninety-sixth-street, where the shops will be situated, will be ready for track-laying in 20 working days, and in 10 working days more the shops will be ready to receive cars. An increased number of trains will then be put on the road.

SEVENTH REGIMENT VETERANS.

The Veteran Association of the Seventh Regiment held its quarterly meeting at the regimental armory last evening. Col. W. A. Fond presiding. The question of finances was the subject of discussion.

THE COLORADO CATTLE-GROWERS.

DENVER, Col., Jan. 13.—The ninth annual meeting of the Colorado Cattle-growers' Association will begin here to-morrow. Cattle men from Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Wyoming, and Texas, are arriving in large delegations. It is understood that the association will be so modified and enlarged at this meeting as to include the States named. An unusual interest is felt among live-stock dealers on the result of the meeting.

DR. BUSCH'S BISMARCKIANA

THE BOOK AND ITS CRITICS.

THE STORY OF ITS PRODUCTION—REVISION THAT BISMARCK INSISTED ON—SOME FRESH ANECDOTES FROM THE VOLUME—A SEVERE REVIEW BY DR. FREUZEL.

Berlin Correspondence of the London Telegraph.

One version of the story of the production of Dr. Busch's book is as follows: Dr. Busch, attached to Prince Bismarck's chancellerie during the war in a semi-official, semi-journalistic capacity, collected a vast congeries of interesting table-talk, anecdotal and critical, which he committed to paper from day to day with the utmost care and regularity. Shortly after the conclusion of the campaign his connection with the Chancellor terminated, I believe somewhat abruptly, since which time he has devoted himself to literary pursuits, chiefly in connection with the daily press and popular periodicals. Strongly impressed with the value of the notes he had so laboriously accumulated while attached to the Chancellor's staff in 1870-71, and constantly urged by friends to utilize such precious material for his own benefit and advantage, he resolved, a few months ago, to publish his memoranda in the form of a book, and solicited Prince Bismarck's permission to do so, submitting his manuscript to his Highness' inspection and approval. If I be correctly informed, the manuscript, as originally laid before the Chancellor, contained a large number of anecdotes and dicta concerning exalted personages, (among others the ex-Empress of the French,) to the propriety of publishing which Prince Bismarck imperatively objected, and the intimation is said to have reached Dr. Busch "that, if the proposed book were published at all, it would be without Prince Bismarck's sanction, against his wish, but that if it were published without the previous excision of the passages especially objected to, its sale would be prohibited, and Dr. Busch would probably have cause to regret his enterprise." The items thus laid under interdict were, of course, struck out; and very remarkable utterances they must indeed have been, if we may appraise their piquancy and indiscretion by aid of the actual contents of the book recently given to the world. As more than one lawsuit is likely to grow out of the remarks about eminent men, living and dead, attributed to Prince Bismarck by his Boswell in this astounding chronicle, and presumably considered to be, relatively speaking, admissible by his Highness as pabulum for the general public, (else they would obviously have suffered expurgation at his command,) one cannot but congratulate the stories and sayings exiled from Dr. Busch's original manuscript must have been, in the strictest sense of the word, unfit for publication. Modified and pruned, as it is stated to have been, by a matter enough, and to spare, of offense to Prince Bismarck's contemporaries to cause infinite soreness and heartburnings at home and abroad; for every page is furnished with a sting eminently calculated to make somebody or other writhe with pain and annoyance when he peruses the book.

You have heard most of the anecdotes in this remarkable work; but I fancy you have not noticed one that strikingly illustrates the rough-and-ready modus operandi adopted by Prince Bismarck during his process of remodeling Germany, toward the august potentates who, bred up in the belief that they were predestined, by the grace of God, to rule over their fellow-men, failed to apprehend at the most critical moment of their lives that they and their inborn prerogatives were delivered up to the hands of a man who cared as little about Divine right as he did about the vox populi—a kingmaker and unmaker, who kept his one supreme purpose steadily in view, and was perpetually prepared to send any number of crowns rolling in the dust, or to trample upon the most ancient and hallowed of vested interests, if doing so he could in the least abbreviate the term within which he proposed to achieve his end. During one of the after-dinner causeries in the Rue de Provence, somebody happened to mention the Prince of Augustenburg, who followed the campaign on the well-known "Zweiter Staffel," or staff of idlers, consisting almost exclusively of German Princes, which messed at the Hôtel des Reservoirs, under the Presidency of Duke Ernest von Coburg, and was respectfully but steadily snubbed by the fighting men of the army from the moment it crossed the French frontier till it was broken up after the fall of Paris. His Highness of Schleswig-Holstein gave considerable umbrage at Parisian head-quarters by persistently wearing the Bavarian uniform, and observing somewhat of a "frondeur" attitude, although attached to the royal staff on my own request. On hearing his name, upon the occasion alluded to, Prince Bismarck observed: "He might have got off much better than he did. I did not originally want any more from him than the small Princes had given me in 1866. But he would not give up anything at all, thanks to divine guidance and to the wisdom of lawyers. I remember that during the conversation I had with him in 1864—he was at my house in billiard-room next to my study, and lasted till late in the night—I began by calling him 'Your Highness,' and was altogether extremely civil to him. But when I spoke to him about the Harbor of Kiel, which we required, and he said that would be at least a square (German) mile, which I was obliged to admit, and when he also would not listen to any of our demands respecting military matters, I took on quite another sort of face. I then addressed him by the title of 'Your Serenity,' and finished up by saying to him, quite coolly, in Low German, that, as we had hatched the chicken, we could also very well wring its neck."

Dr. Karl Freuzel, the eminent critic and essayist, lately handled Dr. Busch somewhat severely in his review of "Bismarck and his Merry Men;" nor has he hesitated to express his opinion, with respect to some of the utterances attributed to the Chancellor in that remarkable work, with a downrightness that does him honor. He observes, inter alia, that "the Chancellor's sentences upon his contemporaries are sizable: one can only hope that they are not always one of these days he will himself find more lenient judges. But it certainly makes a strange impression upon one when such a clever man as he can find nothing better to say about a genius like Alexander von Humboldt than that he was a conceited, insupportable chatterer, and a disgusting glutton! Thiers is a wide-awake, amiable man, with intelligent, but without a trace of a diplomatist—too sentimental for the business! His is a higher nature, doubtless, than Favre's. But he is not fit to be a negotiator; no, not to be a horse-chaunter. He allows himself to be 'bluffed' too easily in behalf of his feelings; he lets himself be 'pumped.' Of Henry von Gagern he says that "he is an utterly stupid fellow—a watering-pot full of phrases, with whom it is of no use to talk." Of the Minister, Von Schleinitz, he observes: "An amiable, clever person, but not inclined to steady business or energetic action. He is like an india-rubber ball, whose hops, and hops, and hops, but more weakly every time, and at last comes to a full stop. At first he would have an opinion; then he weakened it by self-contradiction; then, again, an objection to the contradiction occurred to him, until at last nothing at all remained, and nothing was to be done on hand." During the war, the three mots d'ordre constantly in his mouth were 'shoot, hang, and burn.' He praised the Bavarian soldiers because they showed less consideration for North Germans. These and other judgments of his were at the time shared by many others; but it was not necessary that now, under such totally changed circumstances, they should be thus brutally proclaimed by this diary-keeper." Dr. Freuzel, pointing out a number of inaccuracies in Dr. Busch's record of war events, &c., then goes on to say: "The most astounding piece of table-talk pronounced by the Chancellor, one which affords us the deepest insight into his nature, was that which he gave vent to at Ferrières on Wednesday, Sept. 28, 1870. The conversation turned upon the German's sense of duty, as compared to that of the Frenchman; and the Chancellor attributed the former to 'the unshaking tenure of faith possessed by our people.' Then he went on: 'How people can live together in an orderly manner, do their duty, and allow everybody to enjoy what is his, without believing in the question, Is there a God who wills what is good, in a higher Judge, and in a future existence, I do not understand. Were I no longer a Christian, I would not remain for an hour in my post. If I did not reckon on my God, I would certainly not take any account of earthly masters. I should have enough to live upon, and sufficient distinction. Why should I go on unflaggingly, allowing myself to be worried, and working in this world, exposing myself to embarrassments and vexations, if I did not feel myself obliged to do my duty by reason of God? If I did not believe in Divine ordinances, which has destined this German nation to something good and great, I would forthwith give up the diplomatic trade. Orders and titles do not tempt me. I have derived the steadfastness that I have displayed during 10 campaigns, and which is inexplicable in its asperities solely from my determined belief. Take away that belief from me, and

FORTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

SUMMARY.

The Senate adopted a resolution of respect for the late Representative Schleicher, and a committee was appointed to arrange for the funeral. A large number of petitions were presented favoring the passage of the bill granting arrears of pensions, and Mr. Edmunds called attention to the fact that claim agents had sent out circulars requesting persons to procure signatures to such petitions. Mr. Howe reported a bill for a building for the Congressional Library. The bill for the erection of a National Museum building was passed. The Senate then took a recess until 2:55 P. M., and on reassembling proceeded to the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of Mr. Schleicher.

SENATE.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE SCHLEICHER.

Immediately after the reading of the Journal of Friday's proceedings a message was received from the House announcing the death of Mr. Schleicher, and the passage of a resolution by that body providing for the appointment of a committee of eight members of the House and three members of the Senate to arrange for the funeral and accompany the remains to Texas.

Mr. COKE, of Texas, submitted a resolution declaring that the Senate had heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Mr. Schleicher, and agreeing to the resolution of the House providing for the appointment of a committee to arrange for the funeral, &c.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate Messrs. Coke, Bayard, and Hamlin.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate various communications from the Secretary of War, of which transmitted for the consideration of the Committee on Army Reorganization a letter from Col. George W. Getty, commanding the Artillery School, suggesting a substitute for sections 253, 254, and 255 of the bill recently reported for the reorganization of the Army.

PROF. BAIRD'S ANNUAL REPORT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a communication from Prof. S. F. Baird, United States Fish Commissioner, inclosing his annual report for 1877-8. Ordered to be printed.

MANUFACTURED PETITIONS.

A large number of petitions were presented favoring the passage of the bill granting arrears of pensions, all of which were laid on the table, the bill having been reported to the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS, of Vermont, called attention to petitions of this character, read a circular sent out by claim agents requesting persons to procure signatures to the petitions, and said the value of petitions gotten up in this manner was not of the very highest character.

Mr. KERNAN, of New-York, in presenting similar petitions, said he had many letters from soldiers and the widows of those who were soldiers, urging the passage of this bill, and he had no doubt that there was an honest public sentiment in its favor.

A PETITION FROM MR. MULLETT.

Mr. SPENCER, of Alabama, presented a petition of A. B. Mullett, late Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, asking compensation for extra services in connection with the new State, War, and Navy Departments building, the Post Office Department building, and the District Jail. He also introduced a bill to carry out the prayer of the petitioner. Referred to the Committee on Claims.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS.

The following bills were introduced and referred:

By Mr. FERRY, of Michigan—To authorize the President of the United States to restore Edwin R. Fariss to his former rank in the Army. Referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ANTHONY, of Rhode Island—Granting a pension to Mrs. Louisa B. Hoff, widow of the late Rear Admiral B. H. Hoff, of the United States Navy. Referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill regulating the rank and pay of fleet Marine officers in the United States Navy. Referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. It is identical with the bill introduced in the House for the same purpose on the 3d of June last by Mr. Jones, of New-Hampshire.

A BILL FOR A NEW LIBRARY BUILDING.

Mr. HOWE, of Wisconsin, said the Joint Committee on the Library had had referred to it the report made to the Secretary of the Interior relative to the cost of certain buildings near the Capitol for the use of Members of Congress. The committee had agreed upon a bill, and he hoped the Senate would act upon it soon. He therefore reported a bill to provide additional accommodation for the Library of the United States, and it was indefinitely postponed. It proposed to reduce their compensation from $3 to $2 a day.

PENSIONS FOR SOLDIERS IN THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. INGALLS, of Kansas, from the Pension Committee, reported without amendment the House bill relating to soldiers while in the civil service of the United States. Placed on the calendar. It provides for the payment of pensions to any persons who were deprived thereof during any portion of the time from the 3d of March, 1865, to the 6th of June, 1866, by reason of their being in the civil service of the United States.

THE NATIONAL MUSEUM PROJECT.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, called up the Senate bill appropriating $250,000 for the erection of a fire-proof building adjoining the Smithsonian Institution, for a national museum. In explanation of the bill Mr. MORRILL spoke of the constant increase of money and articles of value and interest made by foreign Governments to the United States after the close of the Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia. They were now stored in the old armory building near the Smithsonian Institution, but a proper building should be erected for their display. The results of over 200 exploring expeditions were now scattered in this city in various localities. The contributions from Siam alone were worth more than $100,000.

The bill was read a third time and passed.

REPRESENTATIVE SCHLEICHER'S FUNERAL.

A message was received from the House announcing that the funeral of the late Representative Schleicher would take place in the hall of the House at 3 o'clock this afternoon, and inviting the Senate to be present. The invitation was accepted, and the Senate, as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, took a recess until 2:55 P. M. Upon reassembling at that hour, the Senate proceeded in a body to the hall of the House to attend the funeral, and upon returning to the chamber, at 3:40, adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The House of Representatives transacted no business.

THE BERRIAN WILL CONTEST.

The trial of the contest in the matter of the will of the late Daniel Berrian, formerly business partner of the late William M. Tweed, was continued yesterday before Surrogate Calvin. William M. Pratt, a physician, testified that he attended the testator for the four days preceding his death, and that the patient was then suffering from chronic alcoholism; that his mind was seriously impaired thereby, and that it induced him to believe that there were snakes in his room, and to make other delirious manifestations.

David Miller, an elderly man, testified that he had been acquainted with Mr. Berrian for many years, and was associated with him in certain Colorado mining enterprises; that on June 6, 1877, the day the will was executed, he saw Berrian in the morning, and he was then deeply under the influence of liquor; Berrian had made an engagement to go to Colorado that evening with witness and another partner, and they were to rendezvous at the Grand Central Depot; Mr. Berrian met them there, but was very much intoxicated at the time, and had but $2 with him, although he was going on a trip of about 2,300 miles, to Central City; Berrian had half a dozen bottles of rum with him, and kept intoxicated all the way out to Colorado; in Kansas City witness found Berrian in a barber's shop cutting the tails off his coat; at the hotel table he called for everything on the bill of fare, and then would eat nothing; on the way back from Colorado Berrian bought two railway tickets with money loaned him, blackened his face with burned cork, and committed other very strange acts.

The main point made by the cross-examination of the witness was the admission that Berrian had frequently drank half a dozen glasses of liquor a day with Berrian. The main ground of contest of the will by the testator's children is the fact that he left a bequest of $30,000 to Mrs. Josephine Steele, of Staten Island, and her children, at whose house he had made a visit only the day before he made his will. The trial will be continued to-day.

SUING HARKINS & FISKE FOR RENT.

The suit brought by the Executors of the Gilsey estate against Messrs. Fiske & Harkins for an alleged balance of $1,500 due for two weeks' rent of the Fifth-Avenue Theatre, was tried yesterday before Justice Campbell, in the Sixth District Civil Court. Joseph Hardcastle testified that the managers had paid $12,250 for rent from Sept. 25 to Dec. 26, but claimed that $1,500 was still due. He knew that the terms of the lease between the plaintiffs and defendants provided for an annual rental of $90,000, payable in 38 installments, with a deposit of $2,500 upon the completion of the lease. The witness could not swear that the defendants had not paid money to the plaintiffs without his knowledge. W. H. Newcombe, attorney for the Gilsey Executors, testified that he had demanded of Receiver Bedford, Daniel Harkins, and Stephen Fiske the payment of the $1,500, and did not receive it, and Henry Gilsey swore to similar facts, and also swore that the $2,500 deposit had been exhausted for rent. Stephen Fiske the defendant swore that nothing was due when he left the theatre, on Dec. 26 last, for rent, under the terms of the lease, and he objected to being charged with the items mentioned by other parties, who occupied the theatre when he had nothing to do with it. In reality there was a balance of some $2,000 due him for overpaid rent, the $2,500 deposited on the execution of the lease having been applied to the payment of the first month's demand in advance.

The case was then adjourned to Wednesday, when the papers in the court, strove to impress it with the idea that the "theatre was a white elephant," the defendant's counsel pleading that "it is a very white elephant indeed." The court then took the papers and reserved its decision.

CANVASSING FOR CHARITY.

THE GENERAL COMMITTEE'S FORCE TO GO TO WORK THIS MORNING.

A final meeting of the General Committee having charge of the work of canvassing the City on behalf of the charitable institutions was held yesterday afternoon at No. 44 East Fourteenth-street. Rev. J. C. Woodruff, of the St. Barnabas Home, presided, and 53 institutions were represented. The reports submitted were to the effect that 76 wagons, 83 men, and 100 boys would constitute the force which would begin the work of canvassing this morning. It will be the duty of the boys to go in advance of the wagons and leave at each store and residence printed circulars announcing the approach of the collectors. The wagons, men, and boys will rendezvous at Nos. 132 and 134 South Fifth-avenue at 9 o'clock, and the canvass will be begun both up town and down town simultaneously. The City has been divided into districts, to each of which a wagon will be assigned. In order to guard the public against imposition, and to assure them that the parties making the collections are authorized to do so, each wagon will display a large placard, upon which will be printed the words, "General Committee to Canvass for City Charities." The collectors of general supplies will be provided with certificates of authority, bearing the printed letter heading of the General Committee, and signed by Rev. C. T. Woodruff, Chairman General Committee; Rev. Willard Parsons, Chairman Executive Committee, and Charles A. Bunting, Secretary. As a further protection and guarantee, persons authorized to make collections of money will be provided with a special certificate signed by themselves and bearing the seal of the committee. They will be required to give receipts for money collected by them. Persons trusting money to the custody of such collectors are requested to compare these receipts with the certificate of authorization, to see whether the signatures correspond.

All articles of a miscellaneous character collected to-day will be taken to the depot, Nos. 132 and 134 South Fifth-avenue, and the money will be turned over to F. A. Palmer, President of the Broadway Bank, who has been appointed Treasurer of the fund. When the canvass is completed, the Apportionment Committee, which has already been appointed, will meet at the depot for the purpose of apportioning the supplies and money collected among the different institutions; and when their work has been accomplished, a Committee of Distribution will see that each parcel reaches its proper destination. All sorts of supplies are solicited, including clothing for both sexes, furniture, carpets, stoves, groceries, provisions, meats, groceries, wood, coal, and money. The portions of the City to be traversed to-day will be definitely fixed upon this morning. It is hoped that the whole City from the Battery to the Harlem River will be thoroughly and completely canvassed by to-morrow night. It is proposed, however, to continue the work until the whole of Manhattan Island has been thoroughly canvassed. A up-town depot will probably be provided for storing the supplies collected in the upper part of the City. Following are the committees having charge of the work:

Executive Committee—Rev. Willard Parsons, of Howard Mission: James Lynch, Home for the Aged; Henry King, West Side Relief Association: P. C. Dooley, St. Vincent de Paul: C. A. Bunting Christian Home for the Unemployed: Rev. C. T. Woodruff, St. Barnabas Home, Chairman General Committee: Rev. Willard Parsons, Chairman Executive Committee: Charles A. Bunting, Secretary.

Committee on Ways and Means—Smith Ely, Jr., Mayor; William F. Barnard, Five Points House of Industry; William Rockefeller, Randall's Island Industrial Home; F. A. Palmer, Treasurer, President Broadway Bank.

Committee on Apportionment—William E. Dodge, Jr., No. 232 Madison-avenue; James M. Brown, No. 59 Wall-street; Rev. T. M. Peters, Sheltering Arms; Townsend Cox, Commissioner of Charities; Very Rev. William Quinn, No. 263 Mulberry-street; Rev. Edward McGlynn, St. Stephen's Church; Rev. John Dooly, Carmel Chapel, No. 51 Bowery; George M. Miller, No. 79 Wall-street; Adolph Hallgarten, President Mount Sinai Hospital; Charles L. Brace, Secretary Children's Aid Society.

Committee on Distribution—F. A. Taber, No. 158 Broadway; Rev. R. Heber Newton, Bread and Beef House; H. M. McLaren, Hospital for Incurables: H. F. Patton, James Manchester, Mrs. A. J. Brown, City Missions; Mrs. S. A. Skinner, Children's Fold; Sister Amelia, St. Luke's Home for Old Men and Aged Couples; Miss J. F. Lowe, Howard Mission; Mrs. Laidlow, Eighth Ward Mission.

All the charitable institutions of the City, without regard to sect or kind, are interested in the movement, with the exception of the largely-endowed institutions.

THE LATE LIEUT. THOMAS S. WALLACE

HIS DEATH FROM EXPOSURE IN MONTANA—LIEUT. AVERY DESCRIBES THE PAINFUL SEARCH FOR HIS REMAINS.

From the Detroit (Mich.) Post, Jan. 11.

The telegraph recently announced the death, near Fort Missoula, Montana, of Lieut. Wallace, United States Army. How he was killed is not generally known at the East, and we therefore publish these extracts from two private letters just received by Hon. John Avery, of Greenville, from his son, Lieut. Avery, who was Lieut. Wallace's companion:

"On the morning of Dec. 8 Lieut. Wallace and myself took horses, rifles, and dogs and started up the mountains across the river after deer. We followed up a cañon about five miles and then separated, he striking out across the mountains to the left and I to the right. It was a long ride, but I reached the post about dark, and found that Lieut. Wallace had not come in. I thought nothing of it, thinking perhaps he had found a deer and was after it, and would come up all night in a little while. I waited for him o'clock and still he was absent, and I commenced to get uneasy about him, and reported his absence to the commanding officer, and asked him to send me out after him. The officer thought Lieut. Wallace was all right, but told me if he did not come in during the night to take a man from my company and start after him at daybreak. He did not come in; and the next morning at daylight I was in my saddle, and with my man started for the hills. I took his trail from where we separated and followed it over hills and through cañons and gulches all day; and at 5 o'clock in the afternoon followed down one of the mountains to the Bitter Root River bottoms, and then lost the trail. Coming home that night I met Capt. Penrose and party, and reported to him what I had done. He said he would try and take up the trail where I left off and follow it until they found him. The next day, about 12 o'clock, Lieut. Wallace's dog came into the post half starved. The whole garrison was greatly excited, as this looked very bad for poor Wallace. I was again ordered out, and told to take provisions to stay out three or four days—to take the dog and follow him wherever he went. This time I had two men, and we were off at 1 o'clock. I followed the dog until dark, and then went into camp on the side of a mountain about 25 miles from the post. The next morning, at daylight, we started again, but the dog would not lead, he would only follow us; so we started for the Loo Loo Pass, where Chief Joseph came through (two years ago,) having been told to go there if we could do nothing with the dog. In changing our course for the pass we went within about four miles of the post. I reported to the commanding officer where I was and where I was going, and learned from him that the Lieutenant's horse had come to the post early that morning, saddled and bridled, and I was instructed to go through the Loo Loo Pass to Clear Water, a distance of 75 miles right over the main range—a most difficult undertaking at this season of the year. We had nearly a week's provisions; besides, during the day we shot four mountain grouse, three prairie chickens, and a duck. That night we went into camp at the mouth of the pass, and at 11 o'clock a courier came from the post with orders for me to turn back, as Lieut. Wallace was evidently in the mountains. I came back, and was very much chagrined down the river to examine some tracks thought to be Wallace's. I reported that there was no doubt in my mind that the tracks found were his. The same night his horse came down on the bank of the river opposite where I had tracked him and a half mile below. We do not yet know how he met his death. But probably he tried to cross the river, was thrown from his horse, swam ashore, and died from exhaustion and cold."

In a letter a week later Lieut. Avery says: "The post has been very quiet since the sad death of Lieut. Wallace. It has been decided as near as can be, that he tried to cross the river at a ford, thinking it was the Bitter Root. Where he attempted to cross the river was about 100 yards wide, deep, and very rapid. He was probably thrown from his horse while in the water, carried by the current down to the rapids, 100 or 150 yards below, and then got a foothold and waded ashore; but, being cold, wet, and half drowned, he could not endure much more. He walked about a quarter of a mile, and, completely exhausted, fell, and died where he fell. We afterward traced him from the river, and also found where his horse came out some distance above. It was a brave and promising young officer, and his loss is keenly felt by all."

THE FOREIGN FREIGHT QUESTION.

The Committee on Foreign Freight created by the joint committees of trunk lines and Western railroads, to endeavor to equalize through rates from the West to Europe, by way of all the sea-board cities, invited the representatives of the various steam-ship lines terminating at this port to meet them yesterday and discuss the proposed plan, but none responded. The steam-ship men regard the project as impracticable under the present system. They say that no guarantee exists that the railroads will not again adopt their old policy of cutting rates, and that the fluctuations in ocean freight rates are too great and too constant to admit of any such scheme being successful.

M'KEE RANKIN'S POVERTY.

From the Philadelphia Record, Jan. 13.

Arthur McKee Rankin, the actor, who appeared in "The Danites" at the Arch-Street Theatre last week, was before Judge Fell on Saturday in a suit brought by Patrick H. Delaney and Samuel P. Badd about payment for a house on North Eleventh-street which McKee Rankin bought from Elwyn Roberts in 1876. The claim was for several thousand dollars. Rankin was charged with secreting his property, and as to this he said: "I simply have none to secrete, except a pair of pantaloons, two flannel shirts, and a pair of old boots that I wear on the stage. The title of my play was purchased by my wife (Kittie Blanchard) from Joaquin Miller." Counsel for the plaintiffs said they would like to view the play, as it was a very valuable one. To this Rankin replied that they were welcome to it if they could play it, for that would be all the use they could make of it. Judge Fell discharged the actor, saying that it had not been shown that he had secreted any property, and a copyright of a play was not such property as came under the act of Assembly relating to the concealment of goods from creditors. Rankin has beaten the lawyers quite often. Last year in Baltimore they attached the receipts of the theatre, but the wily actor was ahead of them. He showed that he had sold his rights to all the receipts of the week. There is more law for Rankin in this city, however. On Saturday night he was served with a summons in a suit by John Keats, who holds a first mortgage on the Eleventh-street house, and he wants his money.

The Signal Service Bureau report indicates for to-day, in this region, falling barometer, warmer south-west winds, cloudy weather, and occasional light rain or snow, followed by colder north-west winds, with rising barometer and clearing weather.

Speaker Alvord and his friends are, doubtless, shrewd political managers, but their resolution to withhold information about the make-up of the Assembly Committees until the election of United States Senator has been disposed of, seems like an excess of caution. To ordinary apprehension, the connection between the two subjects is rather remote, and even though the hand of one or more of Mr. Conkling's managers may be discernible in the choice of committees, it is difficult to see how the numerous aspiring statesmen whom Mr. Alvord's selection will leave disappointed could take their revenge by making trouble over the Senatorship. There is but one candidate in the field for that position, and whatever opposition to Mr. Conkling's re-election may exist in the ranks of the party, there is evidently no other Republican whose claims are by any considerable number of persons believed to be, on the whole, superior to his. The Legislative caucus can merely give expression to the party assent that Mr. Conkling should be his own successor, and no amount of dissatisfaction with the real or supposed interference of his lieutenants in the make-up of committees can be of any practical importance without having some centre around which to erystallize.

Representative Schleicher, of Texas, who was buried from the Capitol yesterday, is the sixth member of the present House who has died since the first session began. Considering that this represents the mortality in a body of nearly 300 members, there is, perhaps, nothing unusual therein. But, in every case, so far as we know, these six deaths resulted almost directly from disease contracted in Washington. That six men out of three hundred men who have reached the prime of life should die within eighteen months, is really a noticeable fact, and it is made more noticeable by the ceremonial observed by Congress in each case. Bad air in the Capitol, late hours, mental excitement, and violent changes of temperature, are undoubtedly at the bottom of this mortality. There is no need to seek any further for the seeds of disease. Many Congressmen change their whole manner of life when they reach Washington. They work in one of the worst-contrived public buildings on the Continent, and to many of them absolute rest and recuperative quiet are unknown.

Mr. Hewitt is again in the field as a military reformer. His bill aims at sweeping reductions in the number of officers and at a general process of consolidation in Army organization. It is proposed to tack on this measure to the regular appropriation bill, so as to insure its consideration. Such a device would be as obviously repugnant to sound methods of legislation as it would be detrimental to the interests of the Army. The service is certainly not popularized by the incessant attempts of the Democrats to tinker it. The Burnside bill, now before the Senate, is a portentous document, covering 294 pages and containing 724 sections—the 721st of which is occupied with the Articles of War. This elaborate product of the labors of the joint committee ought to be enough in the way of military legislation to engage the attention of a short session, and not even the approaching termination of Mr. Hewitt's legislative career can justify his attempt to increase the existing confusion of mind in Congress about the organization of our little Army.

The Senate yesterday passed a bill which must receive the hearty approval of all who are interested in the creditable conduct of the Government with reference to art and science. It appropriates a quarter of a million dollars for the erection of a fire-proof building adjoining the Smithsonian Institute, for the accommodation of a national museum. The Government is already in possession of numerous objects, some of great value and interest, which it is entirely unable to display in a manner to make them useful. Among these are many given by various foreign Governments at the close of the Centennial Exhibition. In addition, are the objects gathered by over 200 exploring expeditions, many of which are entirely unique. The maintenance of a national museum, at moderate and reasonable cost, is as legitimate an enterprise for the Treasury as the maintenance of the Congressional Library, which is everywhere conceded to be of incalculable value. It is to be hoped that the bill will become a law.

In Freehold, N. J., they are trying the experiment of bringing before the courts two respectable citizens accused of offering bribes at the November elections. We do not know how efficient Jersey justice may be found in this connection, or how well it is directed in the present instance; but it is a notorious fact that no crime of like importance is practiced with such impunity as bribery of electors in nearly every State of the Union. In most States, the law kindly protects the offenders by making those who offer and those who receive bribes equally liable to punishment, the inevitable effect of which provision is that there is no competent witness to the offense, each party being allowed to refuse testimony on the ground that it might criminate himself. It is no credit to American good sense that a violation of law so essentially dangerous to our institutions should so long have remained beyond the reach of punishment. If New-Jersey can set the example of bringing bribe-givers to justice, it will add one more to her previous laurels as a law-abiding State.

The City will be canvassed to-day on behalf of its charitable institutions. The contributions of the charitably disposed will be received by 76 wagons, 33 men, and 100 boys, all bearing proper certificates of authority from the committee which has the enterprise in charge. Articles of clothing, furniture, carpets, tools, provisions, wood, coal, and money, will be received, and duly apportioned and distributed to needy institutions by gentlemen in whom the public may place the strictest confidence. It is to be hoped that the response to this charitable appeal will be as generous as the occasion is urgent. Various causes have contributed to curtail the ability of several deserving institutions to meet the heavy calls made on them during this Winter, and the novelty of to-day's experiment ought to be accepted as a fresh reason for making it a conspicuous success.

NOTABLE EXAMPLES.

After all, Southern Democrats are not better, purer, or more scrupulous than the carpet-baggers on whom they heaped virtuous indignation. From Georgia, one of the first of the reconstructed States "redeemed" from Republican rule, and from South Carolina, one of the last, the same damning testimony comes. And in both cases it proceeds from Democratic witnesses, whose partisan orthodoxy is unquestioned, and whose allegations are sustained by specific statements of fact.

Senator Hill is the Georgia accuser. The fact that a quarrel exists between Mr. Hill and Gov. Colquitt has been so colored in the press dispatches as to convey the impression that the latter is an injured man. To correct this impression, probably, and to enlist the honest portion of his party in his support, the Senator has issued an address setting forth the basis of his original accusation, exposing the attempt of the party managers to explain it away, and in sweeping terms arraigning the managers as in league with corruptionists. It seems that a J. W. Murphy, a clerk in the State Treasurer's office, received from the President of the Atlanta Rolling Mill Company $8,000 "for his influence in procuring from the Governor the indorsement by the State of the bonds of the North-eastern Railroad Company, in which indorsement the rolling mill had a large interest." This statement is not denied. The controversy which is going on relates to the use which Murphy made of the money, and to the suspicion that the Governor received a share of it. The Governor's conduct has contributed more than aught else to the doubt affecting his own integrity. Mr. Hill imagined that his view of the matter would be concurred in by the Governor, and that exposure and punishment would quickly follow. To his great amazement, Mr. Hill discovers that the Governor defends Murphy's taking of the money, calls it "a legal fee," and admits "that he knew the clerk was interested in the indorsement before he made it." To shield himself, he obtained the appointment of a committee of the General Assembly, and a majority of the members have reached the conclusion that "nothing wrong has been done." In other words, a committee of the Georgia Legislature declares that there is nothing wrong in the payment of money to procure from the Governor approval of a measure which an honest official would approve or reject on its merits. Perhaps a fellow-feeling had something to do with this whitewashing of the Governor and the clerk, Murphy. If money is necessary to procure the Governor's signature, Murphy and his fees are likely to be useful when members' votes are in question.

Indeed, it is evident that what Mr. Hill calls "Murphyism in Georgia" has taken rapid strides. He likens it to "Tweedism in its beginning," and from the organized defense of the Treasurer's clerk infers that he is a recognized go-between, with whom corrupt officials and jobbing legislators cannot afford to quarrel. "I see in a report to the General Assembly," says Mr. Hill, "that State-house officials are actually parties to contracts with the State, and executive officers of the State are also lessees of the State." The Senator argues that the Democratic Party of the State must repudiate all who are implicated in these transactions, as partners or apologists, or sink under the weight of popular indignation. Unfortunately for himself, he has advocated the most abominable sacrifice to self-respect, if required to secure party unity. In the late canvass, no man more shamelessly inculcated the doctrine that party is everything, and personal conviction nothing, than Mr. Hill. He has a chance now of seeing whither his teaching leads. He has set himself up as a purifier of the Democracy, and from Colquitt to Murphy—from the Governor to the Treasurer's clerk, including a committee of the Legislature—the party turns upon him and threatens his overthrow. Before the fight is ended, he will be better able to understand the value of Independent movements as means of overcoming the tyranny and insolence of the forces marshaled around the Democratic machine.

While Georgia is disgraced by its Democratic managers, South Carolina is on the road to repudiation and ruin under the guidance of the same party. It was supposed that the sufferings of South Carolina, under Republican administration, had stimulated the whites to make the effort which resulted in the inauguration of Hampton. The pity of the nation was invoked by people who declared that Republican rascals had destroyed the credit of the State, and consigned its citizens to a poverty from which nothing but Democratic ascendency could rescue them. The success of Hampton was said to be essential to the restoration of credit and prosperity. It was not a question of politics, we were told, but of material salvation. Well, South Carolina has had one term of Hampton as Governor, with every thing pertaining to the taxes, the expenditures, and the credit in Democratic hands. And what is the result? The Charleston News—the chief Democratic newspaper in the State—answers thus emphatically: "A South Carolinian who wants to borrow money now finds it more difficult to get it than when the Radicals were in power." "The whole of the interest on the debt remains unpaid," the News adds, "and South Carolina is in bad odor with those who were her best friends." Again it says: "The State had the opportunity of establishing public and private credit without superiors in the United States. This chance has been thrown away." The State was not so badly off under Moses as under Hampton. Instead of the progress which was possible, had Chamberlain been sustained, we witness the destruction of at least one source of prosperity under Democratic rule. The Democrats, not content with a refusal to provide for the debt, mock the creditors who seek the help of the law with the declaration that the State will defy the courts rather than pay a dollar. The absolute power for which the party contended, under a pretended anxiety for the honor and welfare of the State, has been so exercised as to cover the State with infamy and to render more remote its industrial development.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The people of the State of California have called a convention to revise their Constitution. That body is now engaged in discussing two or three propositions which it is sought to embody in the fundamental law. Naturally, the Chinese problem is among the most prominent of these. The committee of the convention to which was referred this general subject could not agree upon any one plan to be reported to the convention. Three separate schemes were brought back to the convention, and at last accounts the delegates were discussing these, with no indication as to which would eventually be adopted. The first plan merely contemplates the exercise of the power of the State to apply police regulations to the Chinese. The amendment to the Constitution, as reported from a portion of the committee, provides that persons who shall become vagrants, paupers, mendicants, or invalids infected with contagious diseases, shall be dealt with by law, as provided by acts of the Legislature. The theory of this part of the committee was that the State has no power to control or prohibit Chinese immigration. Whatever is to be done to hinder immigration must be done under the police power of the State after the immigrants have become part of the people.

The second plan reported to the convention is embraced in a clause proposed to be added to the Constitution in these remarkable words: "All further immigration to this State of Chinese, and all other persons ineligible to become citizens of the United States under the Naturalization laws thereof, is hereby prohibited." This proposition is simply absurd. The State of California has no more right to prohibit, or even regulate, immigration from any part of the world than it has to declare war, make treaties, or cede territory. The third plan is embraced in four sections of the proposed Constitution, which provide these things: Foreigners who cannot become citizens shall not have the right to sue or be sued in the State courts, shall not fish in State waters, shall not own real estate, shall not be employed on the public works, and shall be excluded from settlement within any limits which may be fixed upon by State, county, or municipal authorities. Moreover, public officers employing Chinese shall be liable to impeachment and removal, and private citizens who shall employ them shall be deprived of the right of suffrage. This, of course, is simply a denial of the right to labor. Practically, it is a denial of the right to live.

Upon these three propositions an elaborate speech was made by a delegate to the Convention—Gen. J. F. Miller. This speech is really the first attempt, so far as we know, of any Californian to present the subject of Chinese immigration in a dispassionate and statesmanlike manner. Heretofore, those who have discussed this vexed question from the point of view occupied by most Californians have contented themselves with passionate declamation. Kearney, the melodramatic demagogue of the Pacific States, has opened his windy harangues with, "The Chinese must go," and he has been imitated in various keys and in smoother phrase by those who speak with equal unreason. But Gen. Miller, in his calm and dignified presentment of the case, appeals to the judgment and good sense of his fellow-citizens. Here we are compelled to become cognizant of certain facts. In the first place, we must conclude that the presence of the Chinese in California is objectionable to a majority of the citizens of that State. We need not now pause to inquire into the reasonableness of their objections. It is enough to know that they do most seriously and emphatically object. Heretofore, propositions the most absurd and impracticable have been suggested by those who seek to explain the Chinese. In one or two instances, as in the law relating to alleged importations of lewd women, the State of California has attempted to erect a legislative barrier against the importation of Chinese by sea. These devices have been of no avail. The highest courts in the Republic have decided that no State has power to regulate foreign intercourse; and foreign intercourse includes foreign immigration.

It being admitted that the Chinese are objectionable to the people of any State, the next question is, How shall they be eliminated from the population? The speaker whose argument we are considering does not propose that the immigrants shall be taken from shipboard, when the authority of the power which exercises jurisdiction over foreign commerce is yet extended over them. But, what is loosely called the police power of the State is to take charge of them when they have mingled with the population. The State has reserved to itself the right to turn away from its territory paupers, vagabonds, and fugitives from justice. It is contended that under this right persons inimical to the prosperity and welfare of a State may be excluded from the territory of such State. And it is proposed that persons against whom legislation under the proposed amended Constitution is leveled shall be formally transported beyond the jurisdiction of the State. In other words, the amended Constitution of California having once placed its ban upon "aliens who cannot become citizens under the Constitution of the United States," the Legislature may make laws providing for their banishment. Whether the laws of the United States would not come into conflict with statutes providing for the transportation under State authority of Chinese to other States of the Union, or to foreign countries, is a question hereafter to be met. The Californians say that this is the best thing they can do. It does not settle the Chinese question, but it deals with it as only the people of a State can deal with it. Gen. Miller, whose speech we have just referred to, reported to the Constitutional Convention a memorial to Congress, which was adopted. This memorial briefly states some of the reasons why the people of California object to Chinese immigration, and concludes by asking that Congress shall enact such legislation as will effectually prevent the further immigration of Chinese coolies or laborers into American ports of the Pacific coast. And this, after all, is the only and final remedy for evils of which the people of California complain.

BISMARCK AND FREEDOM.

Whatever may be thought of Prince Bismarck's past services to the German Empire, he is at present the evil genius of his country, multiplying and intensifying the evils from which it suffers by his misdirected efforts to suppress them. A policy of blood and iron may work marvels when directed with energy against a foreign foe, but when turned by a Government against its own subjects it cannot fail to destroy the peace and happiness of the nation, and produce a recoil dangerous to the power that wields it. To consolidate into one strong Empire a congeries of associated States which were separately feeble, and had no bond of union capable of imparting strength to the federation, to build it up into a formidable power, to punish its enemies and reward its friends, and make it an arbiter among nations with mutual interests, required qualities such as Germany found in the great Chancellor. In diplomacy and the direction of the foreign policy of his country, he has made a broad and indelible mark upon his time. But an entirely different order of statesmanship is called for when the task in hand is to develop the internal interests of the nation and contribute to the prosperity and content of its people. This is a work for which Prince Bismarck has no aptitude. Instead of trying to lighten burdens, he adds to them, and when he finds opposition to his plans and purposes, he undertakes to crush it with the same merciless energy that he would display toward a foreign enemy.

The measure which he has just proposed to the Federal Council, as a supplement to the law for the suppression of Socialism, is manifestly intended to smother all opposition by destroying freedom of discussion in the Parliament of the Empire. Political associations whose existence may be construed as threatening to subvert the Government, whether really Socialistic or not—that is to say, all such as are to be reckoned hostile to the Administration—are dispersed; the organs of unwelcome opinion are suppressed; books whose sentiments are offensive are prohibited; and men who incur the displeasure of the powers that be are exiled from their homes or fined and shut up in prison, suffering untold hardships and rank injustice. There was yet one place in which the voice of opposition could be heard, and even Socialism could give utterance to its demands and its complaints. Its representatives, clothed with the privileges of legislators, could make themselves listened to in the Reichstag, and their words might be sent broadcast, under the guise of reports of official proceedings. Even opponents less violent and reckless than they might use "unbecoming expressions" and venture opinions of the Chancellor's policy that would be distasteful to him. He proposes to carry his plan of stern repression into the Reichstag itself and stifle free discussion in the very body which the people have chosen for the purpose of giving utterance to their wishes. The cumulative penalties of reproof, exaction of apology, temporary exclusion from the Reichstag, disqualification for future election, and final subjection to the operation of law through the judicial tribunals, are calculated gradually to eliminate from the representative body all persons obnoxious to Prince Bismarck, and to subject them to fines and imprisonment for daring to persist in opposition to him. His enemies can neither speak their minds for themselves nor choose others to present their grievances and make their demands in the parliament. Universal suffrage is made an empty delusion, and the liberty of the citizen is reduced to the liberty to acquiesce without a murmur in whatever an arbitrary Government chooses to prescribe.

Perhaps this policy is safe among a people as intelligent, as courageous, and as determined as the Germans; but, if it prove so, history will cease its proverbial repetition of itself, and strike out a novel experience. Crimes such as those of Hoedel and Nobiling are detested the world over; conspiracies for the overthrow of Governments not outrageously tyrannical excite nothing but condemnation; the theories and demands of Socialists are not calculated to beget sympathy or win countenance among intelligent people; but there is a very general belief in liberty of speech and liberty of action within the limits of public security, and Bismarck's policy can win respect from none but despots. But, perhaps, he has not a "decent regard for the opinions of mankind," and cares only for a policy that shall effect his purpose. The only justification he seeks is success. But will he get it? His repressive policy is calculated, at every turn of the relentless screw, to extend the area of dissatisfaction, to intensify discontent, to make more bitter and reckless the spirit of hostility. More minds are driven to the desperate mood of Hoedel and Nobiling; those who regard conspiracy as justifiable are multiplied, as conspiracy becomes the only available mode of action; and thousands who have no faith in the pernicious doctrines of Socialists become associated with them in the common cause of liberty.

SCIENCE AND PRIVATE LIFE.

It has been and is the boast of our English-speaking race that every man's house is his castle, and the feeling was never so widespread as now that we can do at home very much as we like, and especially that we can say who shall come to see us there. Yet every house has its windows and doors to open and to shut by a necessity not dependent upon the owner's choice, and quite independent of his caprice. The sunshine and air must come in, or else chills and malaria will be sure to come, and in one form or another print and persons will come in, bringing with them more or less of the spirit of the age. The pressure from outside is backed by desire from within, and more and more the modern man is moved to live in fellowship with his neighbors, his nation, and his race. In its peculiar way, the new social and scientific ideas are as imperative as the laws of the Old Empire and Church, which they have to a great extent supplanted; and we encounter the memorable paradox on every side, that as we become more free or more secure against personal injury by the defenses of law, we become more dependent upon others alike for the safeguards of law and the comforts, and even the necessaries of living.

The statement of this social dependence, with its attendant freedom, is becoming more and more a scientific one, and it is a question of deepening interest what effect the rising science is having and to have upon our private life in its convictions, affections, and uses. There is no denying the fact, that a new and powerful inquisitor is looking into every house and scrutinizing the ways of every family, and arraigning before its tribunal every offense against its inexorable laws. To a certain extent, this inquisitor has always existed in civilized society, yet it is becoming more and more pronounced with the articulation of our new liberty, and, perhaps, it is safe to say that a new era of subjection to this law began about a hundred years ago, when kingcraft was set aside in our America, and oxygen gas, with the whole method of chemical analysis in its train, was made known in Europe. Franklin and Priestly are names that stand as well as any other for the new empire of scientific law that is now so proudly and yet so humbly looking into us and after us. We are quite ready to praise these leaders and the science that came with them and after them, yet there is a great deal in the movement that we do not always like. Both in our personal condition and in our home life we often rebel against the incessant scrutiny. We do not fancy the notion of having all our tastes and habits subjected to rigid law. We wish to work, to lounge, to eat and drink, and dress and breathe and play just as we choose, and we rebel against the code of mechanism, physiology, and psychology that is becoming every day more pushing and insolent. Men, in their rough strength, insist upon eating and drinking at will in spite of the doctor; and women, in their delicacy and their peculiar instinct of privacy, often shrink from the very idea that physiology has anything to do with them, and they prefer their own pretty tempers and sweet tastes to the thermometer, barometer, and the rules of hygiene. Perhaps a considerable part of this generation is dying in defiance of the new science, and the malaria which came near taking from England the heir to the throne is decimating our own census of sovereigns, and sometimes sweeping whole families away by its fatal breath. Edward Von Hartmann, the pessimist, says that the earth is becoming a great cloaca in the accumulation of its own filth. So science shouts its Dies Iræ as well as faith, and if we do not look out the earth will rot before it will freeze or burn to death.

Yet there is as little need of resistance to the new code as of despair at the evils disclosed by the new prophets. We are giving in more and more to the claims of legitimate science, however little we may like the dogmatism that so often goes with its teachings. We are more and more willing to ask and to learn what is in the air and sunshine, in the water and the bread, in the milk and the meat, in the blood and the brain, in the stomach and the nerves. We are ready to have our houses drained and ventilated, although often in spite of careless architects and ignorant or tricky builders; and there is probably more of vital skill and knowledge now required in the construction of a modest house for a frugal family than was possessed by the builders of the Pantheon and of Strasbourg Cathedral, or of the palaces of the great Kings. How people contrived to live in old times in such smoke and filth it is not easy to say, nor is it certain that they did live the natural term of life, except in cases where fresh air and abounding water made up, out-of-doors, for the perils of in-doors. The suffering is not wholly over, and in many a home called comfortable there is danger of suffocation from furnaces and stoves with heats that interchange watches with deadly chills.

Perhaps the educated classes have made more advances in physiology and hygiene than in any other respect, and the physician has been of late rising in power over private life. He is the grand inquisitor whom the best families now welcome as the father confessor to whom they will not lie if they can, and cannot lie if they will. He sees into the vitals, not merely by the look of the tongue and the beat of the pulse, but by the light-movement of the eye, the color of the skin, and the play of the nerves and muscles. Great changes of diet, exercise, recreation, dress, sleep, and the whole economy of living are made under his direction, while his sparing use of drugs, and his great and growing knowledge of the power of the Materia Medica are enabling him to reach the stomach, heart, nerves, and brain in a way and with a success unknown in the old days of frequent bleeding and large boluses. Moreover, the best physicians are no strangers to the study of psychology or the interior laws of conscious life, and of the need of keeping the body sound by the sound mind in all its affections, faculties, activities, and associations. Such a man as the late Dr. Edward H. Clarke, of Boston, was a noble specimen of this class of physicians; and his patients and his professional brethren are agreed as to the extent and worth of his attainments, as shown in his practice and in his books. The profession in this city is enriching its knowledge and ability in the same direction, and the pulpit finds powerful helpers among physicians in favor of right rules of living, while our preachers are not offended at having its dues given to the body as well as to the soul, even at the risk of having their own imprudences and mistakes frankly pointed out.

So the new law gains upon us and the end is not yet. There is a considerable fear that life will lose its ideality and sentiment under this inexorable code, and that all enthusiasm will be sacrificed to rigid analysis and impersonal calculation. There need be little fear of the result if science keeps to its own observation of facts and their relations, and leaves each class of facts to its own proper sphere and due action and association. The two great forces that control private life and give it due elevation, motive and joy, we mean love and religion, are not set aside by science, but only cleared of incumbrances and misinterpretations. A good physiologist will not fail to see scrofula wherever it shows itself, and he will not think a waist which is laced into the dimensions of a pipe-stem as fine or as promising as that which needs the ample girdle of the Venus of Milo; but when he loves wisely he need not and does not cease to love quite fondly, and to say as many soft things, and to make as kind and true a husband and father, as if he were fool enough to mistake the hectic hue of consumption for the glow of health, and mate with disease in the guise of seeming beauty. So, too, with religion. The true science leaves unassailed the great mystery of God, and clears the supreme wisdom and love of many clouds that shut out their blessing from the heart and home.

The task of walking 2,700 quarter-miles in as many quarter-hours, which Mrs. Anderson is reported as having concluded at 11 o'clock last night, may be looked upon as one of the most arduous feats of pedestrianism on record. But it is very doubtful if the spread of this particular form of pedestrianism is by any means desirable, or even interesting. Her performance lacked the element of personal competition, which was supposed to exist between O'Leary and Campana, and the only excitement that attached to it was the great danger in which the Englishwoman was constantly living. Nature sets a limit to the amount of violent or repeated exercise that any man or woman can undergo, by inflicting on them a sense of fatigue, by warning them in many ways that the reservoir of nervous energy is exhausted, and that it must be filled again by rest and due restoratives before they can venture to draw upon it with safety once more. Here, then, was a woman, who, in the course of her task, was constantly receiving these warnings and disregarding them. It was the chance of Mrs. Anderson succumbing to the terrible pressure she put upon her system that drew so many persons to Mozart Hall, in Brooklyn, during the last fortnight and more. They went to see a woman who for the last four weeks has walked ninety-six quarter miles every day, and during the whole of that time had never been resting or sleeping for more than ten minutes together, and who might at any moment fall dead before them. She has survived, but the long walk has left its traces, and a recuperative process of considerable magnitude will have to take place before she is in sound health again. While acknowledging the conspicuous pluck and wonderful powers of endurance shown by this person, we must, in the interest of healthy athletics, if nothing more, hope that we have seen the last of such feats.

A little less than 300 years ago yesterday would have been the first of the new year. The arrangement which makes New Year's Day come a week after Christmas Day dates from 1582. Up to that time the Julian Calendar, by which dates were regulated throughout Christendom, assumed the solar year to contain 365 days 6 hours; the Gregorian Calendar made the year consist of 365 days 5 hours 49 minutes, an estimate that differs only a few seconds from the true value, and this error is compensated for by the institution of leap year. Notwithstanding the almost perfection of the calendar introduced by Julius Cæsar 46 B. C., it involved an annual error of 11 minutes, a difference which, after the lapse of 1,628 years, had grown to the portentous one of ten days. If this had been allowed to go on, the time would have come when the months would no longer have coincided with the seasons. December would have fallen in Autumn, the month of May have been most dismal instead of merry, June have retrograded into midwinter, and Christmas have been celebrated in the dog days. After consultation with the leading astronomers and mathematicians of his age, Pope Gregory XII. brought out a new calendar, which is the one now in use in all countries except Russia. This change was made Oct. 12, 1582; but England clung with such fervor to her Protestant principles that she continued the use of the old style until 1752. The last Protestant country to abandon the Julian calendar was Sweden. The Eastern or Greek Church still refuses to adopt the new style, although we believe steps have been taken looking toward a change in this respect. Owing to the year 1800 not being considered as a leap year, the difference between the styles is now 12 days, so that yesterday was the beginning of the new year in Russia.

The demand for canned fish-balls—cod-fish, of course—which a Boston firm began to put up some nine months ago, has increased beyond all expectations. The house cannot supply the steadily-growing request with its present facilities, and is preparing to enlarge them. For several years it tried to discover a method by which minced fish, or fish-balls, could be canned so as to retain their freshness and the peculiar flavor so agreeable to a New-Englander's palate. They finally succeeded in producing an article composed of Vermont or New-York butter, the very best fish, and Nova Scotia potatoes, which would go round the world and retain all its original virtues. The fish is killed by a blow on the neck, hung up until drained of every drop of blood, and then the napes are carefully scraped and cleaned. The fish-balls are packed solid in tin cans and hermetically sealed, after which, put up in cases of 10 dozen each, they are ready for market. The first sale was made in this City last May, and the demand has augmented ever since. In the last four months 25,000 bushels of potatoes and several hundred quintals of fish have been used. A case of the goods exhibited at Paris gained a prize. They are shipped to all the leading cities in the West; have also gone to South America. Great Britain, France, and lately orders have been received from Turkey, Egypt, India, and China. They seem to be relished everywhere, and in a year or two, no doubt, they will be found on the tables of Bagdad, Teheran, Peking, and Petropaulovski.

The superior lightness, convenience, and finish of American implements and tools for the coarser trades and callings are an immediate and strong recommendation in their favor wherever foreigners can be induced to give them a trial. The French, the Swiss, and the Germans make fine tools for dentists and jewelers, but no Yankee farm-hand could be persuaded to use their clumsy and ill-made hoes or scythes. The English scythe and snath of to-day are as cumbrous and unwieldy as those our stalwart grandfathers swung 50 years ago. An American firm of scythe-manufacturers sent 25 dozen scythes to a Sheffield house in 1876, and these were so well received that 100 dozen more were ordered last year. These scythes weighed a little over two pounds each, were well carved, and polished on the under surfaces. English scythes weigh nearly five pounds, are broad, straight, and rough, just as the hammer leaves them, slipping over the stubble much less easily than the American article. The experience of this firm may be instanced as a case where protection does not protect. Their scythes are made of the best English steel and Norway iron. For the former they pay 14½ cents a pound, which includes a duty of 3 cents a pound. Norway iron costs $76 a long ton, and at 1 cent a pound, the duty amounts to $22 40 a ton. Free of duty, then, the steel would cost but 11½ cents and the iron but $53 60, and at these prices competition with English scythe-makers in their own field would, of course, be easier. The movement to extend our foreign trade has set manufacturers to studying foreign markets attentively, and tool-makers, among others, are trying to ascertain what kind of shovels, rakes, plows, axes, and saws will find most favor in Mexico, South America, or Australia. Native tastes and habits will have to be submitted to their masters as fast as their use of a clumsy and ill-made tool makes a better one seem inferior. Our manufacturers will, perhaps, be compelled for a time to turn out crude and primitive implements, in order to get them into the hands of Brazilians and New-Zealanders. But they may reasonably expect to hold against all comers any field where their carpenters' and joiners' tools have once been brought into use.

The late decision of the Missouri Court of Appeals, that a divorce case cannot be referred to a Referee, has caused no little uneasiness among many divorced couples there. A large proportion of those who got their divorces through a Referee, having married again, find themselves, according to the decision, living in two states at once—the State of Missouri and the state of adultery—which is as unexpected as unpleasant. It is said that dozens of such pairs intend in consequence to move where the laws will justify their present condition. The diversity of divorce laws in different States has been a source of interminable trouble to the innumerable persons who have appealed to them for connubial relief. Not a few of these have been unable to travel any distance without incurring the penalty of illegitimate union in some of the States they pass through. The subject of divorce is delicate and complicated. Many estimable people are opposed to it under any circumstances; other people, equally estimable, regard it, under certain restrictions and modifications, as a great good. But there can hardly be any difference of opinion as to the need of uniformity in divorce laws. If we must have divorce, the law should be the same in every State. For a couple to be legally married in Indiana and not be married at all in New-York; to have their children legitimate in Illinois and illegitimate in Indiana, without any other change than that of residence, is a sarcasm on law and government too palpable to be insisted on.

When great inventions are made, one never knows exactly for what purposes they may be adapted. The field of usefulness is always being extended far beyond the imagination of the discoverer. Here is a curious application of the microphone, which is suggested by the Rajah of Baroda. Native ladies of high position would rather die of consumption than allow a Doctor to examine their chests in the ordinary manner. It is proposed then, by Sir T. Madava Row, that the auscultatory sounds be transmitted from the chest of some Indian lady to the ear of the medical man, by means of a microphone, the doctor being stationed say from 200 yards to a mile from the prudish patient. All the particular disturbing noises might be in this way distinctly heard and noted, and the augmentation of the sound so much increased, that the bruit de scie might appear like the ripping of a buzz-saw. The Rajah is even more practical in his demands on the microphone. In the Travancore, so this Indian gentleman writes to Nature, there are professional men who are consulted by the natives when wells are to be sunk. Applying their ears to the ground of a quiet night, these experts are believed to hear the rush of the waters in the lower strata. If then these water-seekers, whose ears by practice are so sensitive, can find water, the Rajah believes that the microphone will be most serviceable in selecting appropriate places for sinking wells.

GENERAL NOTES.

Gen. Joe Lane, of Oregon, celebrated his seventy-seventh birthday Dec. 13.

The late Congressman Schleicher, of Texas, was a very large man, weighing nearly 350 pounds.

Thus far $3,186 58 has been contributed for the benefit of the family of the late John Wilson Barron, the murdered Cashier. It is a small amount for such heroism.

The Chaplain of the Maine House of Representatives offered up a petition the other day that the members might be brought to stop speaking when they got through.

The wife of ex-Gov. Hiland Hall, of Vermont, died at North Beanington on Wednesday. The sixtieth anniversary of their wedding was celebrated a few weeks ago.

A bullet which John D. Richmond, of the Fourteenth Michigan Infantry, received in his foot Oct. 7, 1863, was taken out in two pieces on Friday last. He was glad to get rid of it.

Two fellows have been arrested in Hingham, Mass., charged with mutilating the statue of the late Gov. John A. Andrew, in the cemetery in that town, by breaking off some of the fingers.

The friends and pupils of Mr. Karl Formes, in San Francisco, celebrated by a concert on the evening of the 6th inst. the fortieth anniversary of his first appearance on the lyric stage.

The Quebec Mercury mentions the arrival of Louis Riel in Manitoba in good health and says: "His intentions have not been ascertained, but it is rumored that he has visited the other side of the line."

Mr. James R. Mitchell, Chairman of the Delaware Democratic State Committee, died from the effects of a fall at Milford on Friday night. He had been a member of the Legislature and Clerk of the Senate of the State.

A lady 89 years old was out coasting with her grand-daughters and the rest of the girls in Burlington, Iowa, one evening last week. She said she "didn't use to do it in Old Virginia" when she was young, but it was grand sport.

The Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution remarks: "The pet cows of Augusta in one night destroyed the flower-yard of Mrs. De Laigle. It had required the constant labor of four years to complete the garden, but the cows never thought of this."

The New-Haven Journal commends Hon. Stephen W. Kellogg for withdrawing from the Senatorial contest in Connecticut, and says that he will lose no friends by his course, in spite of the fact that he was a most efficient Representative and would make an equally efficient Senator.

CRITICS OF RESUMPTION ANSWERED

A LETTER FROM SECRETARY SHERMAN IN ANSWER TO A COMPLIMENTARY RESOLUTION.

Chicago, Jan. 13.—Secretary Sherman has sent the following letter to the Secretary of the Honest-Money League in response to the resolution passed at the meeting of the League on Jan. 2:

Washington, Jan. 8, 1879.

Thomas M. Nichol, Esq., Secretary Honest-Money League, Chicago:

Dear Sir: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 4th inst., inclosing a copy of the kindly resolution adopted at the meeting of the Honest-Money League on the 2d inst., for which I return my grateful thanks.

Resumption—so long struggled for and so eminently beneficial to all interests and all classes—is now secure. There are but two points incident to resumption about which I notice complaint: First, the non-payment of interest on the public debt in gold coin at cities other than New-York; second, criticisms of the distribution of the silver dollar by this department. To maintain specie payments the coin must be kept at some central convenient depository, always accessible. The law fixes New-York as this place. It is not unreasonable,

RECORD OF AMUSEMENTS.

"IL TROVATORE" AT BOOTH'S.

Mr. Strakosch's second week of the opera was opened last night with Verdi's popular "Il Trovatore," with Miss Kellogg, Miss Cary, and Signor Pantaleoni in the cast. The combined attraction of these artists' names filled the house, and the audience were rewarded with a spirited performance, in which the singers exerted themselves faithfully, though it cannot be said that the opera was given in the highest artistic manner. Miss Kellogg is entitled to much praise for her rendering of Leonora. She was evidently suffering from a cold, and a less conscientious artist would have availed herself of the excuse to save herself the severe exertion she was forced to make. Notwithstanding this fact, she gave a noble and powerful performance, which was creditable to her, and was received with the enthusiasm she fairly commanded. Miss Cary's Azucena is well known and justly regarded as one of the best of her parts. Her beautiful voice finds every opportunity in the music of this character, and she knows so well how to sing it that it is thoroughly satisfactory to listen to her. She looks, however, too pretty for Azucena, and if she could bring herself to forget that she was Miss Cary while on the stage, and be Azucena, her performance would be perfect. The tenor, Signor Rosnati, whose first appearance was looked for with interest, did not sing, a card being published which stated that he was "suffering from a serious cold." Mr. Graff assumed the part of Manrico at short notice, and may therefore be excused for any inequalities in the style of his performance. He seemed to satisfy the audience, and his "Di quella pira," with the C in alt, and vigorous action drew out the genuine applause that artists like to hear and which is unmistakable. Signor Pantaleoni as the Count di Luna was a disappointment. He did not sing with the spirit and in the artistic way he has heretofore done. He was evidently suffering from a cold and his voice was not under control, nor did he sing with the finish and style to be expected of him. As to the rest of the performance, but little can be said in its praise. The orchestra was exasperating, and Mr. Behrens, calmly waving his baton, seemed to be unconscious that they played out of tune, and just enough behind in time to annoy the singer and the listener. The orchestra is composed of excellent material, and only needs a firm and vigorous leader to be good enough for all purposes, but its work last night, as heretofore this season, was slovenly. The chorus was with the orchestra—out of tune—and between the two there was considerable suffering when it became necessary to listen to them. Notwithstanding these drawbacks, however, the company are to be credited with a more than usually good performance in parts of the opera, and, taking the good and bad together, the audience doubtless enjoyed the entertainment. To-night "Traviata" will be given, when Mlle. Giulia Mario will make her first appearance as Violetta, with Signor Lazarini and Signor Pantaleoni in the cast.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

Although "recent" comedies are sometimes of short duration, there are others which come within the description "modern," which are of incalculable advantage to managers of essentially comedy theatres. In this way it becomes a matter of serious import to be able to rely on the plays which Mr. Robertson has given to the stage. There was a recognition of this kind last night at Wallack's. "Ours" was the piece performed, and the attendance at the theatre was even beyond the æsthetical exactions of first night entertainments. This state of things was, no doubt, in part a tribute to the work of the dramatist, and it certainly must have had some reference to the favor with which Mr. Lester Wallack's appearance is always greeted. The result, at all events, was a splendid house, and applause which had a warmth beyond conventionality. Mr. Wallack's Hugh Chalcots was nonchalant, pleasant and entertaining, and Mr. Coghlan's Angus McAllister was favorably received. Mr. Coghlan, it appears, has played this part at the Prince of Wales' Theatre, London, but it must be confessed that he appears to better advantage when he is more heavily weighted. Mr. John Gilbert renewed old claims to public favor, and Mr. Charles Rockwell gave an excellent interpretation of the part of Prince Perovsky. Mme. Pomsi, Miss Stella Boniface, and Miss Effie Germon filled their respective rôles with more than common ability. The general setting of the play was especially fine.

BROADWAY THEATRE.

Emile Augier's latest dramatic work, "Les Fourchambault," which are remarkable from a social point of view, seem to lack vitality, as they certainly lack action and variety. This criticism holds in New-York at least, if not in Paris. The play awakens no sympathy in an American heart until the misfortunes of Marie Lotellier begin—that is to say at the close of the fourth act. The fifth act is stirring and original, and the scene between the two brothers is well calculated to rouse enthusiasm. Aside, however, from the peculiar nature of "Les Fourchambault," its wholly national character, and its slow movement, there is much in it that is repugnant to the sympathies. What could be more detestable than the picture of a young girl like Marie placed under the fostering care of the Fourchambault family, yet even then so dangerously situated that a young Fourchambault can attempt to seduce her. Then, again, the apparent sanction which the old man gives to his son's vile conduct, by making Leopold promise not to offer inducements of marriage to the girl, is particularly revolting. Yet, in the original, to those acquainted with French manners and morals, the force of M. Augier's arguments is convincing, and there is nothing wanting in his comedy to make it a complete tableau of social impurities.

M. Daleiel has taken very few liberties with his author, wisely adhering throughout most of the play to the original text; what he has supplied, however, tends to improve its acting qualities. Thus, he has changed the climaxes of the third and fourth acts so as to heighten the theatrical interest, and he has cut down portions of long dialogues to reasonable limits. Altogether, he has done his work modestly and well, and he is to be praised for the faithfulness and lucidity of his translation. Of the acting it is more difficult to speak, for, while it rose occasionally above conventionality, it was not, as a whole, worthy of such a work. The efforts of Mr. Joseph Wheelock and of Miss Alice Lingard were especially deserving of praise. Miss Lingard played with more spirit and feeling than during her recent engagement at the Lyceum Theatre. Her chief defect is in the voice, which, despite much strength and sweetness, is used with so much emphasis that many of her most simple utterances seem labored and affected. It would be possible, we think, to train such a voice for delicate and varied usage. As it is, one does not like to hear a brilliant passage heavily accented in each syllable. Miss Lingard is earnest, graceful, and intelligent, with much latent power and an unusually fine stage presence. Her Marie Lotellier is necessarily, however, but partially satisfactory. The acting of Mr. Joseph Wheelock as Bernard was vigorous and impassioned, and in the last great scene thoroughly fine, while minor subjects of interest were fairly and self-conscious, and Mr. Lingard as Fourchambault was not sufficiently characteristic. Mr. Barr's Leopold was at times a little better than mediocre.

ICE IN THE RIVERS.

CRUSHED AND SUNK BY FLOATING ICE—A GORGE AT RICHMOND—INUNDATION IN TENNESSEE.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Jan. 13.—The ice broke at Ripley soon after 8 o'clock this morning. The barge Ætna was crushed and sunk. No other damage has been reported. The gorge below Maysville broke early, and the ice is running at the rate of five miles an hour. At Augusta the ice is running slowly and the river is rising.

There was an alarm from the river at 2 P. M., when the ice started, but it soon stopped, until 4 P. M., when it again broke loose, and has been running strongly ever since. A large number of empty and loaded coal barges have already been carried away, but their number cannot be accurately stated. About 9 o'clock to-night the new steamer Guiding Star, which had taken refuge below Newport bridge, behind one of the piers on the Ohio side, was torn loose and swept down by the ice. Passing under the Covington bridge, one of her chimneys was knocked overboard, and she lost the other at the Southern Railroad bridge. She has gone down the stream with the ice, and nothing has been heard from her. The ice now passing is said to be from the gorge at Four Mile.

Dispatches to the Gazette report the breaking up of a gorge in the Kanawha at 11 A. M. After running an hour the ice stopped, but broke loose again at 10 A. M., and moved with tremendous force. Several steamers and wharf-boats, harbored in the mouth of the Elk, were thrust against the Keystone bridge and knocked it down. The steamer Liberty No. 4 was so badly damaged that she sank in 24 feet of water. The ice continued running until 5 o'clock P. M., when it again gorged. At Portsmouth the ice from above Huntington has been passing since 5 o'clock P. M. The steamer El Dorado was left on the shore at Portsmouth by a sudden fall in the river. The boat was not injured.

A Frankfort, Ky., dispatch reports that there are 11 feet of water in the Kentucky River, with a prospect of an ice break-up to-night, as a heavy rise is expected from above that point.

A Lawrenceburg, Ind., dispatch says the gorge in the Ohio at Modoc broke at 9 o'clock to-night, and the river is rising rapidly.

Eight loaded coal-barges were swept away from Willow Run Distillery Harbor, West Covington. One was sunk at the Southern Railroad bridge. The others passed on down the river.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 13.—The river at this point has been slowly rising all day, and is now about 14 feet above the ordinary level. Fears of a serious inundation are still entertained. There is no change in the status of the ice-gorge. Five schooners and two brigs bound for Richmond are reported driven ashore at Hog Island, in the lower James River. Their names are not given.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 13.—Since Sunday night the three principal rivers in East Tennessee have been gorged with floating ice, and nearly all of the lowlands of East Tennessee are overflowed. The river here, at noon to-day, was about on a stand, being 30 feet above low-water mark. Railroad officials now apprehend no trouble with bridges. All trains are running on time.

A dispatch to the American from Somerset, Ky., reports that the river has risen 55 feet altogether, and that it is now falling three inches an hour. Seventeen coal barges and one ferry-boat are sunk above Smith's Shoals, and two large ferry-boats at Point Isabel. All the bottom lands are under water, and a large amount of property has been destroyed.

RONDOUT, N. Y., Jan. 13.—Teams crossed the Hudson River on the ice this morning for the first time this season. The ferry-boat has ceased running. Passengers by the Hudson River Railroad were met at Rhinecliff by sleighs.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 13.—The ice is breaking up in the river.

BURGLARY IN THE EIGHTH WARD.

A WAREHOUSE ENTERED BY BURGLARS—THEY ARE SURPRISED, AND ABANDON THEIR PLUNDER.

The store of S. P. Hyman, dealer in laces and silk goods, at No. 77 Greene-street, was entered last night by burglars. The building No. 75 Greene-street has been unoccupied for some time, and it is supposed that during yesterday afternoon the burglars secreted themselves in this building. During the night they ascended to the scuttle, which they forced open, and traversed the roofs until they reached the scuttle of No. 77, and descended to the store of Mr. Hyman, where they selected from the most valuable portion of the stock goods valued at between $4,000 and $5,000, which they packed in four bundles. These they carried to the roof of No. 80 Wooster-street, the building immediately in the rear of the store they had robbed. They forced open the scuttle of this building, but the noise made by them attracted the attention of the watchman in the building. He called out, "Who's there?" and this, frozen the burglars, who were already inside the building, and they slid down the hoist rope to the basement, and, gaining the rear of the premises, escaped by scaling the fences in the rear. The watchman, on discovering that the burglars were using the hoist-rope as a means of escape, cut the rope and it fell into the basement, but the thieves had already reached the ground and escaped. Then the watchman gave an alarm, and a large force of Police, headed by Capt. McDonnell, of the Eighth Precinct, was promptly on hand. The entire square was surrounded and a search was instituted for the burglars, but they had made good their escape. The goods which they had removed from Mr. Hyman's store were found on the roof of No. 80 Wooster-street, where they had been abandoned by the burglars.

THE READING ROAD'S BUSINESS.

RESULTS OF THE LAST YEAR'S WORK—MR. GOWEN RE-ELECTED PRESIDENT.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 13.—The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company was held this afternoon. Franklin B. Gowen, President, read the annual report, which showed that the railroad receipts during the year were $11,539,592 80; total canal receipts, $1,010,337 39; receipts from steam colliers, $686,190 61; making the total receipts, $13,236,121; total expenses of railroad, $6,979,242 13; profits of steam colliers, $232,425 58; loss of Schuylkill and Susquehanna Canals, $278,609 30; loss in operations of Coal and Iron Company, $752,049 14. After the payment of interest, the cash deficit charged to profit and loss account is $824,950 94. The report alludes to the failure of renewing the contracts between the coal companies, and enumerates among the injuries to the company by the existence of the combination the increase in the cost of mining, the decrease in traffic, accidents from mining owing to the frequent suspensions, the idleness of miners leading to dissatisfaction, and the failure to realize increased prices commensurate with the restricted production. The consumption of the surplus coal on the market is mentioned as the principal benefit of the combination. The January interest was paid, and the deficit overcome by issuing scrip to employes for three months' wages due them, which was accepted, and virtually constitutes a loan to the company. The company has not intend to enter into any arrangement for a new coal compact without receiving practical assurances that it will be decidedly to its interest to do so, and that the proper safeguards shall surround such a movement.

Resolutions accepting the annual report, and thanking the President and Board of Managers for their fidelity, were adopted. The following were unanimously elected to serve the ensuing year: President, Franklin B. Gowen; Managers, H. Pratt McKean, A. E. Borie, J. B. Lippincott, John Ashhurst, Henry Lewis, I. V. Williamson; Treasurer, Samuel Bradford; Secretary, David J. Brown.

PREPARING FOR AN EXECUTION.

ST. ANDREWS, New-Brunswick, Jan. 13.—Mrs. Ward has been aware since Jan. 6 that her sentence would be commuted to imprisonment, but she did not know for what time. The Sheriff did not feel at liberty to announce it publicly before to-day. Mrs. Ward received the intelligence with thankfulness. On hearing, Saturday evening, the terms of commutation she burst into tears, saying she was innocent and had never done anything to cause her to be sent to the Penitentiary. Sheriff Paul and Rev. Father Doyle told Dowd this afternoon that no reprieve would be granted him. He received the intelligence calmly, and said that he was resigned to his fate. At an interview this evening Dowd said that Mrs. Ward was innocent of any knowledge of the death of Ward: "I have no other confession to make," he said, "than the one already made, and I have given my clergy liberty to publish any confession made to them by me. My only wish is that the sympathy of the Governor-General may be elicited to pardon Mrs. Ward. I never had any improper intimacy with her." The Sheriff expects to have a number of men of the Volunteer Company on duty to-morrow. After the execution, the body is to be delivered to representatives of the Roman Catholic Church. The body will be taken to the church at 10 A. M. A requiem high mass will be sung, and at the conclusion of the service the funeral procession will proceed to the cemetery, where the remains will be interred.

THE LOUISIANA SENATORSHIP.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 13.—A legislative ballot is to be taken to-morrow for a United States Senator to succeed Mr. Eustis. A caucus was called for to-night, but only 16 members attended, and nothing was done.

The Democratic caucus balloted unsuccessfully. The fifth and last ballot stood: Kenner, 25; Eustis, 23; Jonas, 18; Herron, 10; the balance scattering. The caucus has adjourned until to-morrow night.

THE CROPS OF LAST YEAR.

A SEASON OF ABUNDANCE.

THE OFFICIAL AGRICULTURAL REPORT FOR DECEMBER—ENORMOUS YIELDS OF CORN, OATS, AND BARLEY—THE POTATO AND FRUIT CROPS BADLY DAMAGED.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—The report of the Department of Agriculture for December, just issued, says:

The corn season closed with a marked improvement in the condition of the crop. The condition returned Oct. 1 was 96.1—not quite so high as October, 1877. The acreage as found by the June returns shows no material change, being, in round numbers, 51,000,000 acres in 1878, and 50,300,000 for 1877. Compared with 1877, the South Atlantic States show a falling off in production and the Gulf States a slight increase. The States of Kentucky, Illinois, Missouri, and Kansas, four of the largest producing States, decline considerably, while all the other States north of the Ohio River and in the North-west make a decided increase, thus making the aggregate crop for 1878 larger than that of 1877 by some 30,000,000 bushels. This result is the more remarkable as it is the fourth of an unbroken series of large crops.

The oats crop is somewhat in excess of the very large crop of 1877, constituting it the largest crop ever raised in this country. The rate of increase, however, is less than that of the acreage, showing that the average yield per acre on the whole is somewhat less than last year. The Atlantic slope, north of the Chesapeake, showed a decline, especially in the large oats-producing region of the Middle States. The Southern coast States, from North Carolina to Texas, uniformly increase their product, but the Southern inland States, as a whole, fell off. The West, North-west, and Pacific States showed a marked increase. The Territories also indicate an enlarged product. The quality of the grain in most of the States is inferior, only Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, Illinois, Missouri, and Kansas reporting a full average. The minimum quality appears in the neighborhood of Chesapeake Bay, though portions of the North-west also note a marked deficiency of weight and other merchantable qualities.

There is no material change in the barley crop for the year 1878, compared with that of 1877, except the great product of California, which will be double that of its predecessor. The large producing States of New-York, Wisconsin, and Illinois, each show a decrease in the number of acres sowed, and a slight decrease in yield per acre, while Michigan, Minnesota, and Kansas show an increase in both acres and yield. The State of California, which is the largest producing State, increased her acreage from 450,000 acres to 650,000 acres, and almost doubled her yield per acre. The total product for the year 1878 will be, in round numbers, 42,000,000 bushels, while in 1877 the crop was 34,500,000 bushels.

The rye crop turns out about one-sixth larger yield than in 1877. The Atlantic slope, north of the Potomac River, shows an increase of nearly 1,000,000 bushels. The small crop of the Southern States shows a tendency to decline, though West Virginia and Tennessee report increased yields. The other sections of the country report increased yields. The total yield amounted to nearly 16,000,000 bushels. The quality of the crop is below the average in New-England, except Connecticut, and above the average in all the Middle States except Delaware. The crop of the South, on the whole, is inferior, while in all the States of the West, North-west, and Pacific slope the quality is superior, except in Illinois and Nebraska. The crop shows very little change from last year. In many parts of the country there were complaints of injury from the extreme heat and drought.

The returns of December of the potato crop show no change from the estimates made in November, and there is a large decline in the product when compared with 1877. The acreage planted was, within a small percentage, the same as last year, the difference being less than 1 per cent. The New-England and Middle States fell off in production nearly one-third; the South Atlantic States increased their small yield of 1877; the States north of the Ohio River declined about one-quarter; the States west of the Mississippi River show a decided increase in production. The leading cause immediately in the rear of the store they had robbed. They forced open the scuttle of this building, but the noise made by them attracted the attention of the watchman in the building. He called out, "Who's there?" and this, frozen the burglars, who were already inside the building, and they slid down the hoist rope to the basement, and, gaining the rear of the premises, escaped by scaling the fences in the rear. A GREAT PEDESTRIAN FEAT

MME. ANDERSON COMPLETES HER TASK.

THE PLUCKY ENGLISHWOMAN BEFORE AN ENTHUSIASTIC BROOKLYN AUDIENCE—MOZART GARDEN CROWDED TO EXCESS—THE CLOSING SCENES IN THE HALL.

In Mozart Garden, Brooklyn, at 11 o'clock last night, Mme. Anderson, the English pedestrian, successfully completed her task of walking 2,700 quarter miles in 2,700 consecutive quarter hours, which was begun at 8 o'clock P. M. on Dec. 16. The crowd that witnessed the finish was one of the most dense and enthusiastic ever seen in Brooklyn. The little hall is calculated to hold about 1,000 persons comfortably, but double that number and perhaps more were packed into it like sardines last night, and wedged so closely together that any movement save of the head and arms was impossible. Many women were seen to faint in the dense crowd, but as they could not be carried out, it is not known what became of them. This crowd was gathered in spite of the fact that the price of admission had been doubled, and was $1 for standing-room and $2 for reserved seats. At 9 o'clock the Police peremptorily forbade the sale of any more tickets, and after that the crowd that gathered in the streets outside the building and patiently awaited the result was twice as large as that inside. Half the crowd in the garden was composed of women, who stood through hours of the terrible crushing without complaint, satisfied if they could now and then catch a glimpse of the woman whom they have come to regard as one of the most wonderful of their sex. The paying crowd was largely augmented by deadhead Brooklyn City officials who swarmed within the hall, many having the assurance to bring friends with them, for whom they also forced a free passage through the doors. The air inside became stifling, and the ventilators in the roof were opened. To these many small boys from the outside found their way, and the open spaces were fringed with their heads. The outsiders also swarmed to the windows, and several forced their way through them although repeatedly beaten back by the Police. Half the track was given up to spectators who flattened themselves against the wall as the Madame hurried by in the limited space left her.

The wagers on this performance have been many and heavy, those laid during the last few days having been for very considerable sums, and fears were entertained, during the closing hours of the walk, by her friends that foul play might be attempted to prevent the Madame from accomplishing her task. That it was necessary for her to maintain a walk of every quarter with her for the past two days. Yesterday afternoon this anxiety was redoubled by the senseless canard published in a Brooklyn paper, to the effect that the bouquets presented with chloroform had been presented to the Madame. She herself testified that this story was utterly without foundation; nevertheless, she was not allowed to handle any of the numerous bouquets and baskets of flowers presented to her last evening, but they were taken in charge by those walking with her. Her escort was also increased, and from 7 o'clock until the finish one man walked in front of her, one behind, and one beside her at every lap, while others stationed every few yards kept the track clear.

During the entire evening Mme. Anderson was sustained by the most intense and hardly-to-be-suppressed excitement. At times she walked at a tremendous pace, almost running around the track, with pale face and clinched teeth. At the close of the last quarter she sprang from the track to the platform, made her way through the dense crowd, which fell back to give her room, and mounting the elevated perch of the scorers seated herself in a chair, and amid the tumultuous cheers and yells with which she was greeted, announced that she wished to sing a farewell song. Amid the silence that followed she sang, but with considerable effort, three verses of a song entitled, "Nil Desperandum." The bell ringing just as she finished, she hurried down and into the dressing-room amid tremendous applause. As, three minutes later, the bell again rang, calling her to the track for the last time, she appeared on the little drawing before its sound had ceased, and started off at a terrific pace, determined to beat 2:40, the best recorded time made by one of her male friends some days since. Mme. Anderson's South Atlantic sporting man, who trod the tan-bark ahead of her, was obliged to run to keep out of her way, and close behind her walked her faithful trainer waving the English and American flags. The band tried to play "Don't Get Weary" but its loudest discords were drowned by the deafening cheers and yells that were kept up during the next three minutes. The women yelled with the men, and the excitement became hysterical. The air was white with the fluttering of handkerchiefs, and the scene presented has seldom been equaled in Brooklyn. As the bell was rung for the last time announcing that but one more lap remained to be walked the plucky woman increased her speed with a tremendous effort, and came flying down over the home stretch with a face absolutely ghastly, eyes fixed, and teeth clinched. The pace was a run rather than a walk, and as she finished she was lifted into a chair on the platform in the last stages of exhaustion. The frenzied cheering was hushed for a moment as the scorer announced that the quarter was the fastest of the entire walk, and had been made in 2:37¾, and then it was renewed, louder, if possible, than before.

While the Madame's business manager excused himself to his patrons from expressing the gratitude and pleasure he felt, he asked his friend, Corp. Tanner, to do the kindly thing by expressing his sentiments for him, and while Mr. Tanner responded to the appeal with a brief speech, in which he said that the Madame had done the women of Brooklyn an inestimable service by showing them of what a woman is capable, one of the hour stiped a glass of port wine and gradually recovered from her excitement and exhaustion. As Mr. Tanner concluded she rose, and, holding up her hand to command silence, addressed the dense throng who gazed with upturned faces before her. She thanked them heartily for their patronage, kindness to and consideration of herself, and told them that they had aided her to the most signal triumph of her life. From childhood her ambition had been to become famous by accomplishing something that no one else could do, and that never until now had that ambition appeared likely of realization. Now that she had been told by nurses a singer, an actress, a clown in a circus, and a proprietress of concert halls, in which ventures she met with such failures as to reduce her to beggary, she had succeeded to become both a professional walker, and was advised to come to America and win a name before attempting any extraordinary feat in the old country. She had taken this trip, and the result was known. She begged American women to walk more and use the horse cars less, and, above all, she begged ultra-religious women who had refused to witness her performance at any time because she walked on Sundays to be consistent, and not compel horse-car drivers to run on Sundays to carry them to church when they could just as well walk. She said that she meant to follow her present business for one year longer, at the end of which time she hoped to have made her last appearance in public and to settle down quietly to a more domestic life. Bidding her many friends good-bye, she left the platform and disappeared for the last time, beneath the folds of the British ensign, into the little doorway leading to her private room. She soon afterward entered a carriage, was driven to a Turkish bath establishment, where she was bathed and put to bed, to be awakened every hour, then every two hours, and finally allowed to sleep as long as she chose.

During the entire 28 days' walk, the fastest quarter of a mile prior to the last was the sixth, made at 9:15 P. M., Dec. 16, in 2:46. The slowest was the one thousand two hundred and eighty-second, made at 4:15 A. M., Dec. 30. The fastest mile was the seventeenth, made Dec. 17, at 12:45 P. M., in 10:17. The slowest mile was the six hundred and fifty-sixth, made at 3:56 o'clock yesterday morning in 32:6¾. The fastest lap was the last of the walk. The total receipts at the door during the walk were about $32,000, of which Mme. Anderson receives one third. Of this she must give a third to the English manager who brought her to this country, which leaves about $7,000 as her own personal share of the month's earnings. Mme. Anderson's next engagement is in Pittsburg, from whence she will visit Chicago.

KNIGHT ACCEPTS THE POOL CHALLENGE.

Samuel Knight, the pool expert, said last evening that he would certainly accept the challenge issued by Albert Lambert, of Harlem, and published in THE TIMES of Sunday. He has already gone into practice for the coming contest. The challenge stipulated that the match should be the best 21 in 40 games, 15-ball pool, according to the rules which governed the late O'Connor American championship tournament. Knight says that he will send in his acceptance on Friday or Saturday next, although a wider limit of time was allowed by the challenger. In billiard circles Knight is generally the favorite in the betting. Lambert is said to play an excellent game, and the match gives promise of some brilliant as well as close play.

THE PATRIARCH'S BALL.

The Patriarch's ball at Delmonico's last night was a very enjoyable affair. Among the guests were Mrs. Pierre Lorillard, in a superb mauve, draped artistically with magnificent lace. Mrs. Carroll wore a blue satin, with panels of crimson, and sashes of the latter, hair powdered; ornaments, diamonds. Miss Smith, of New-Orleans, wore a tulle over white silk. Mrs. Suydam was attired in blue and crimson, with crimson plumes; Miss Webb wore a white tulle, adorned with garlands of red roses, (natural.) Miss Mesier wore a white moire Française, very long train, corsage square, lace sleeves to the elbow, and red velvet around her neck. THE COMPROMISE WITH HULL.

Mr. James, of the firm of Field & James, has returned to this City from his hunt after John W. Hull, the septuagenarian bond-thief. Mr. James recovered $25,000 of the $30,000 of bonds stolen by Hull, but he was obliged to pay the detectives and others who aided him in his search $5,000. Hull went from here to Philadelphia, where he is supposed to have converted one of the bonds into cash. There he bought a ticket for Toronto, but at Suspension Bridge he altered his course and went to Buffalo, and then to Detroit. After a short stay he proceeded to Toronto, where he bought £200 of English money, his intention being to start for Europe from Halifax. He stopped en route at Montreal, and put up at the Windsor Hotel, where he was recognized by a dry goods drummer, who informed the hotel clerk, and the latter called in the detectives. Hull made no attempt at concealment, but boasted of his real estate, and even showed the stolen bonds to several persons. He refused at first to refund, but on being threatened with extradition on a charge of forgery committed on a large libuor-importing house in this City in 1866, as already stated in THE TIMES, he gave in. A letter was found upon him addressed to a confederate in this City, in which he expressed his annoyance at the newspaper reports concerning him, but said that he would be safe at sea on the following day.

ACCIDENTALLY SHOOTING HERSELF.

Mrs. Josephine Colton accidentally shot herself in the left breast with a single-barreled pistol, in her apartments, at No. 286 West Houston-street, last evening. Mrs. Colton is the wife of one of the oldest compositors in the Herald office. About a month ago, while cleaning house, she found the weapon, an old-fashioned, self-cocking pistol, in her husband's trunk, where it had been kept since the draft riots of 1863. Mrs. Colton took the pistol to a gunsmith and had it cleaned and put in order. While at the gunsmith's she fired the pistol several times, and then had it loaded and took it home. Last evening, while awaiting the return of her husband, she took the pistol from a closet, and it accidentally discharged, the bullet lodging in her left breast and causing a very serious wound. Dr. Dennison subsequently extracted the ball, and it is expected that Mrs. Colton will recover. She said that she knew the pistol was loaded, but was not aware that there was a cap on it.

GATHERING THE ICE HARVEST.

ALBANY, Jan. 13.—A body of men, estimated to number over 1,000, came from the opposite side of the river to-day and interfered with laborers who were cutting ice for Parker Hall, inducing them to stop work. They then went on down and did the same thing with the men working for John Mullon & Sons. Mr. Mullon remonstrated, saying he would pay the men working for him as much as any one else paid. Finally the Police were sent for and three of the leaders—James Collins, James Lynch, and Morris Dee—were arrested and committed. The strikers wanted $1 50 a day instead of $1.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Jan. 13.—The ice harvest commenced at all points on the Hudson to-day between this city and Albany, and nearly 4,000 men and boys are engaged in the work. The ice is from 10 to 12 inches thick, and of an excellent quality. The weather is clear and cold.

HOW THE PLAY AFFECTED A WESTERNER.

From the St. Louis Times-Journal.

We don't know that we particularly fancy the kind of a man Inogmar is represented as having been. And yet how the women folks do enjoy seeing Parthenia lead the big spooney ruffian by the nose through two hours and a half of romance and sentimentality! It does them a world of good, because it discovers to them a power that few of them ever imagined they possessed—that subtle, heavenly influence which womankind alone exercises. Every woman goes away from the play-house imagining that she too is a Parthenia—and so she may become if she will only dispose her soul to conquer her Ingomar with love instead of broom-sticks, and kindness instead of sad-irons. And as for the eerily Ingomar, contemptuously as we may view his manlih sentimentality, we cannot help having a great deal of sympathy with him; for, if we were Ingomar, and if Mary Anderson were to roll her great, juicy eyes around on us and hold out her plump, white arms, and tell us about the "two souls," &c., we would be ten thousand times worse than the most irrevocable demon if we did not forget our ferocity and crouch like a quail on toast at her No. 3 sandals.

W. H. VANDERBILT AND TIMOTHY SHAY.

Yesterday afternoon two sleighs, one driven by Mr. William H. Vanderbilt and the other by Timothy Shay, of Eighty-fourth-street and Second-avenue, got into collision while speeding along Jerome-avenue, in the neighborhood of One Hundred and Sixty-second-street. Mrs. Herman, of No. 1,068 Second-avenue, who was riding with Mr. Shay, was thrown out on the frozen snow, and her shoulder was slightly injured.

Theological students reason that if there be counterfeit money, there must be genuine; so, if there be infidels, there must also be Christians. If this be true of money and religion, will not the same rule apply to "put up" medicines? Do not the cheap and worthless nostrums prove that there are genuine and meritorious "put up" medicines? The great popularity of DR. PIERCE'S GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY has resulted in the manufacture of many shoddy alterative and tonic remedies, but one after another these have disappeared, the proprietors having found that, no matter how loud they advertise, success depends upon merit. In South America, as well as in this country, the DISCOVERY is the standard remedy for all scrofulous and eruptive diseases. It acts promptly on the stomach, liver, and blood, toning up, regulating, and purifying the system. It speedily allays all bronchial irritation, and cures the most stubborn cough or cold in half the time required by any other remedy.—Advertisement.

BROOKLYN HEIGHTS ELATED

A CEREMONY IN THE ENGLISH STYLE—THE CHANCEL LITERALLY BANKED WITH FLOWERS—THE CEREMONY AND RECEPTION—SOME OF THE PRESENTS.

A wedding which called together the best society of three cities, New-York, Brooklyn, and Albany, both at the ceremony and the reception, took place at 12 o'clock yesterday, at St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn. Fashionable society had been in such a fever of expectation respecting this affair for the last three or four weeks that the little pasteboard cards of admission to the ceremony were all bespoken before they were printed, and four days ago the last one had been given out. The groom, Mr. Erastus Corning, Jr., is the son of State Engineer and Surveyor Erastus Corning, of Albany, and the grandson of Hon. Erastus Corning, who has served his State in the halls of Congress. The family has for three generations occupied a commanding position in the old Knickerbocker circle, of which Albany is still the centre. The bride, Miss Grace Fitz Randolph Schenck, is one of the three daughters of Rev. Noah Hunt Schenck, D. D., whose residence, No. 144 Columbia Heights, Brooklyn, was the scene of a reception, after the ceremony, which will be long remembered for the number of notable persons who were present.

The ceremony was set down for 12 o'clock, and commenced punctually to the minute, that is, if the entrance of the bridal party can be considered as a part of it. Already the galleries were terraces of faces surmounted with the latest bonnets from Paris, and the middle and wing pews, saving the seats reserved for invited guests, were packed with the select of three cities. While the organist, Mr. George William Warren, of this City, organist of St. Thomas' Church, assisted by his son, was extemporizing an organ prelude and executing the "Solennelle" of Gounod, one of Batiste's offertories, and a minuet of Haydn, the company had time to remark upon the extraordinary beauty of the floral decorations, which consisted in the main of immense bouquets and baskets of cut flowers, ranging in value, according to florists' figures, from $25 to $250. There were few palms and ferns. Indeed, the latter were not necessary, as the altar is one that yields itself readily to floral decoration. It is situated within an elevated alcove, railed off from the body of the interior, beautifully carpeted, and furnished with an altar-table hung with white satin ornamented with tassels. The font at the right bore one huge bouquet, which overflowed its carved stone rim and crept down toward the floor in clinging vines of ivy and smilax. On the left was a similar bouquet. The centres of both were formed of gigantic exotic lilies, whose waxen-white leaves just opened disclosed the yellow heart of the blossom, and rested lovingly upon deep-green leaves larger than one's palm. The altar-table formed the starting-point of the centre-piece, which was constructed of many dozens of bouquets and baskets artlessly terraced in such a manner as to bank the altar shoulder high with the rarest products of the conservatory, lilies and roses predominating. The flowers were mostly contributed by the friends and relatives of the bride. No further decorations were required, as the holiday evergreens were still bright and fresh, and festooned columns, cornices, and altar, leaving no available space for the popular pale-green smilax.

The front pews were occupied by invited guests. There were Mr. and Mrs. Erastus Corning, the parents of the groom, the latter in a plain black silk dress; Senator-elect George H. Pendleton, of Ohio, and his wife; ex-Gov. Horatio Seymour and wife; Mr. and Mrs. R. Fulton Cutting, brother-in-law and sister of the bride; Mayor Edward Cooper, of New-York, and wife; Mr. and Mrs. Drier, Mr. John Cropper, Mr. and Mrs. Bradish Johnson, Mr. Wilbroht Johnson, Mrs. and Miss Goodhue, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. Pendleton Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. D'Oremieulx, Mr. Charles Dana, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Child, Mr. and Mrs. Israel Corse, Judge Barrett and wife, Mr. Bowers and wife, ex-Mayor Darcy and wife, of Worcester, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. George D. Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus W. Field, Mr. and Mrs. Bronson, Murray, Rev. Dr. Howland, Mr. Halsey Haight, Mr. Cadwalader Evans, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Stargee, Mr. and Mrs. Henry E. Pierrepont, Mr. Henry E. Pierrepont, Jr., Hon. J. T. Stranahan and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Townsend, Gen. Marvin and wife, of Albany; Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Tibbitts, Mrs. Amasa Parker, Mr. and Mrs. Bayard Cutting, Hon. B. D. Silliman and wife, Judge Gilbert and wife, Mr. Carson Brevoort, Mr. Seth Low, Mr. A. A. Low, Mr. John W. Hamersley, New-York; Mr. Charles Suydam, Mr. Benjamin H. Field, Health Officer Vanderpoel and wife, Gen. Tracy and daughter, Lieut.-Gov. Dorsheimer, Mr. and Mrs. John Van Nostrand, and many others.

The number of invited guests was not large, strictly speaking, although the cards of admission amounted to more than 1,000. The space allotted to the former was, consequently, not crowded, and the elegant toilets of the ladies were displayed to excellent advantage. The ushers, in simple morning dress, performed their duties with grace and tact, and then joined the bridal party as it advanced down the aisle. St. Ann's bells were just ringing out "Come to the bower," when the party arrived in carriages and were set down at the canopied main entrance on Clinton-street. Four of the ushers, W. E. Verplanck, F. K. Pendleton, of Cincinnati, and W. C. Sanger and W. E. Wyatt, of Brooklyn, received the party at the entrance, formed two by two in the order of procession, and preceded them down the aisle. Next came the bride, leaning upon the arm of her father. Her costume consisted of an elegant robe of white satin and damask silk, trimmed with drifts of lace and orange blossoms. The robe was in the princess style, cut on train. A simple veil of fleecy white tulle fell almost to her feet. A magnificent set of diamonds and pearls, the gift of the groom, which will be described hereafter, lighted up this simple and elegant costume. All eyes were directed to the pretty blonde face, lighted with hazel eyes, and set in an abundance of fair hair, as the bride came down the aisle, crowned with the superb diamond tiara that formed a part of the bridal gift. The mother of the bride followed, leaning upon the arm of Mr. S. D. Schenck. The eight bridesmaids followed, two by two, each carrying a bouquet of blushing jaquemiot roses, and each wearing a tulle scarf as the symbol of their office. They were Miss Ida Z. Schenck, sister of the bride; Miss Pendleton, of Cincinnati, daughter of the Senator-elect; Miss Dandridge, of Cincinnati; Miss Turnbull, of Baltimore; Miss Thompson, Miss Morgan, Miss Corlies, and Miss Sanger, of Brooklyn. They were all dressed alike, in habits of white India muslin, bountifully trimmed with fleecy falls of Valenciennes lace. A white felt bonnet and a bow of white satin at the throat completed a costume very simple and unpretentious, but very elegant. Two ushers, Mr. E. Mortimer and Mr. N. Pendleton Seneck, finished the cort ge.

As the bride paused at the altar, the groom, accompanied by his best man, Mr. Horatio Seymour, Jr., who had just entered at the Livingston-street door, emerged from the wing and joined the party. The organ, which had been playing a sonorous movement from "Lohengrin," now softened and mellowed its note, and fell into the low, broken, wandering melody of the romance from "Mignon," which was continued while the party were kneeling at the altar. The bride and groom had joined hands on meeting at the altar. All rose, and the ceremony was commenced according to the English Episcopal ritual, by the venerable Bishop Doane, of Albany, the bride responding in a clear, calm voice that was audible in the organ-loft, and the groom, a pleasant-faced young man, with blonde beard, answering the usual questions with admirable self-possession. At the words, "Who giveth this woman," &c., Rev. Dr. Schenck advanced from the side of his wife, took the hand of the bride, and placed it in that of the groom. The legal portion of the ceremony having been finished by Bishop Doane, the sonorous tones of Bishop Littlejohn, of the Diocese of Long Island, took the more strictly sacramental portion, and finished with the familiar blessing and benediction at the end of the Book of Common Prayer. As the last words of the benediction died away, the organ abandoned its minor recital, and the party filed down the aisle with the old familiar notes of Mendelssohn's march filling the air and the bells of St. Ann ringing. The audience lingered long, but the bouquets at the altar disappeared almost immediately, and the star of gas-jets above the altar table went suddenly out.

In the meantime, the bridal party and the invited guests had gone to the house of the bride's father, where the wedding reception was in progress until 5 o'clock. The parlors were profusely decorated, the place de résistance being a bank of flowers on the mantel, brought from Mr. Corning's garden in Albany and arranged by his gardener. Fine bouquets were also contributed to the decorations by Mr. Seth Low, Mrs. Charles E. Bill, Mrs. F. W. Corlies, Mrs. E. R. H. Lyman, Mme. Da Silva, and others. But the centre of attraction was the suite of rooms on the second story, where the bridal presents were on exhibition, and where the select 100 particular friends of the family had illustrated their liberality. First in elegance ranked a magnificent set of diamonds and pearls, the gift of the groom, composed of a tiara of large brilliants and pearls, bracelets, a pin holding a circle of diamonds, a solitaire ring, a pair of solitaire ear-rings, and a massive necklace, studded as if with drops of frozen moonlight, as some sentimentalist describes pearls, and sustaining a splendid pendant of diamonds. The parents of the groom presented their card, from which depended the key of an elegantly-furnished residence in Elk-street, Albany, where the newly-married pair will take up their abode after the bridal tour. One of the most unique of the presents was a solid gold set 200 years old, embodying the rarest handiwork of Persian artists in metal, and consisting of a salver and six pieces. It bore the card of Mrs. Benjamin Tibbits. Mrs. Corning, the grandmother of the groom, presented a magnificent piano; Mr. R. Fulton Cutting, the brother-in-law of the bride, two splendid placques. A large porcelain vase, resting upon a carved ebony pedestal, bore the card of George W. Childs, of Philadelphia. A silver and porcelain coffee set was the present of Mrs. Elizabeth Prest. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Messenger presented a unique vase, resting upon a pedestal of ebony, trimmed with brass. Mrs. Fitzsimmons, of Albany, was represented by a full set of solid silver dinner and breakfast cutlery. Mrs. Bishop Doane, of Albany, contributed an antique bell. Two genuine Turkish rugs represented the father and mother of the groom, and he himself had added to the collection a camel's hair shawl. There was also a very unique Indian screen, embroidered with fine gold wire, worth a fortune, presented by Mr. Bayard Cutting. But decidedly the work of art among them all was the marriage certificate, which was the gift of Bishop Doane. It was on vellum, after the antique fashion, with letters illuminated after the style of mediæval missals, illuminated addigs at the top. It bore the signatures of Bishops Doane and Littlejohn.

After a short tour the groom and bride will take possession of their home at No. 22 Elk-street, Albany.

ANNUAL MEETING AND ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The Seawanhaka Yacht Club held its annual meeting at Delmonico's last evening, Commodore S. J. Colgate in the chair. The Secretary's report showed that the club was free from debt, and recommended a revival of the social reunions of the club which were so enjoyable last Winter. In conclusion the report said that, "with the resumption of specie payments, it was to be hoped that there would be a corresponding resumption of yachting." The report of the Treasurer showed a balance on hand of $1,249 59. Rear-Commodore Cromwell reported for the Law Committee a bill to be presented for passage by Congress, making an amendment to act 4,214 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, allowing pleasure yachts to omit the name of the port from which they sail from the hulls, and permitting them to sail from port to port without taking out clearance papers from the Custom-house. A memorial was also adopted requesting that owners of yachts should not be compelled to take out licenses annually, as at present, but that when a license was obtained it should not require renewal unless a change in the ownership should occur. Officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows:

Commodore—Samuel J. Colgate.
Vice-Commodore—Oliver Cromwell.
Rear-Commodore—Walter L. Suydam.
Treasurer—W. B. Simonds.
Secretary—Charles H. Grundy.
Chaplains—William Irvin, D. D., and George E. Vandewater, D. D.
Surgeon—Benjamin F. Dawson.
Treasurer—A. Cary Smith.
Regatta Committee—M. Roosevelt Schuyler, James H. Elliott, C. Wyllys Betts, H. De F. Weeks, and Louis P. Bayard.
Law Committee—John A. Weeks Girard, Beekman, and James M. Varnum.
House Committee—William Foulke, F. O. De Luze, and Thomas Young.

Rear-Commodore Suydam and Secretary Grundy were appointed a committee to draft suitable resolutions on the death of Mr. Frederick P. Foster.

ONE OF BONNER'S TRANSACTIONS.

Another of the numerous suits which have grown out of the swindling transactions of John Bonner, in the rehypothecation of securities pledged with him for loans, was yesterday decided in the Supreme Court, by Judge Van Vorst. The plaintiffs were W. R. Gould & Co., and the defendants the Central Trust Company and Thomas S. Marlor. On Oct. 15, 1877, W. R. Gould & Co. borrowed $50,000 from John Bonner & Co., leaving with the latter as collateral 800 shares of Chicago and Alton Railroad stock. A short time afterward Bonner & Co. borrowed $100,000 from the Central Trust Company, and pledged as security 500 of the shares hypothecated by Gould & Co., $3,000 worth of Wabash Railroad bonds, hypothecated for a loan by Thomas S. Marlor, and 500 shares of stock of the Bankers' and Brokers' Association, which were really owned by Bonner & Co. Subsequently the latter rehypothecated the second block of 500 shares of Chicago and Alton stock, belonging to W. R. Gould & Co., to the Union Bank. After the flight of Bonner, and the discovery of his rehypothecations, Gould & Co. redeemed the 500 shares from the Union Bank by the payment of $29,000. On Jan. 4, 1878, the Central Trust Company sold out the 500 shares of Chicago and Alton Railroad stock, realizing $38,000, and the shares of Bankers' and Brokers' Association stock, which enabled it to repay itself the $100,000 it loaned to Bonner & Co. on the securities, and left a surplus of $989 59 to go to the original owners of the rehypothecated collateral. The trust company, however, claimed that the Wabash Railroad bonds belonging to Thomas S. Marlor, Gould & Co. then brought suit in the Supreme Court against the trust company and Mr. Marlor, to compel the sale of the latter's bonds to increase the surplus, of which the plaintiffs expected to get a share. It was upon this issue that Judge Van Vorst, in the Special Term of the Supreme Court, yesterday rendered a decision for the plaintiffs, sustaining their claim was reasonable and just, and supported by the fact that loss should fall ratably upon all persons interested in the transactions. Judge Van Vorst's opinion is succinctly stated in the following extract from his decision: "It is in accordance with natural justice which requires every one to exercise his right in a way not to occasion loss to others which might be avoided without inconvenience to himself. The complete interest of one owner should not be spared at the expense of the other."

A BREWERY DESTROYED BY FIRE.

The town of Harrison, situated on the Hudson County bank of the Passaic River, was yesterday the scene of another disastrous fire, somewhat similar to the one which occurred there several months ago. Shortly after midnight, as a District Telegraph boy was on his way to Hauck's brewery with a message for the clerk, who sleeps in the office, he noticed that the roof of the building was on fire. He ran to the door of the office, and being unable to rouse the clerk kicked in the panel and dragged the clerk out of bed. The two gave the alarm, but the flames had spread rapidly, and the local fire department was unable to stay their progress, and it was not until the Newark Department arrived that any efficient work was done. It was then too late to save the buildings, and though the firemen worked well and handled their hose to the last, by daylight there was nothing left but the walls. The brewery consisted of three substantial brick buildings, one of which was used as a saloon and for office purposes, while the other two were occupied as the brewery proper. The stock, 11,000 bushels of malt, and machinery, were destroyed, as were also 400 tons of ice. Mr. Hauck estimates his loss at $70,000, while his insurance is only amount to $35,000. The origin of the fire is unknown. The insurances on the property were all in New-York companies, the names of which Mr. Hauck could not give, as the policies were locked up in the safe, which had not been recovered from the débris last evening.

THE NATIONAL MILITIA CONVENTION.

The Executive Committee of the proposed National Militia, and representatives of the several regiments of this City, met at No. 208 Broadway yesterday afternoon, Adjt.-Gen. Stryker, of New-Jersey, presiding. The regiments represented were the Fifth, Twelfth, Twenty-second, Twenty-third, Eighth, Seventy-first, Sixty-ninth, and Eleventh, and the First, Second, and Eleventh Brigades. The Secretary reported that delegates would be present from 15 States, including the following not heretofore published: Louisiana, among whom will be Gen. Beauregard; Vermont, Illinois, and Florida. The Secretary suggested that some arrangements should be made for the entertainment of the visiting delegates, such as a drill of some one of the crack companies of a regiment. Gen. Rodenbough said that he had been authorized by the Ordnance Department of the United States to extend an invitation to the convention to visit Sandy Hook, and that Major-Gen. Hancock had authorized him to extend the hospitalities of Governor's Island to the convention, and the use of the Government steamer Henry Smith for the purpose of conveying its members to the island and to Sandy Hook, where some of the experiments of the Ordnance Department could be witnessed. The invitations were accepted, and the following Committee of Arrangements was appointed: Gen. G. W. Wingate, Lieut.-Col. Louis Fitzgerald, and Gen. T. F. Rodenbough. The convention will meet at the Seventh Regiment Armory at 10 A. M., on Thursday morning.

JUSTICE PINCKNEY STILL ON TRIAL.

Contrary to the promise made by them on Saturday, the counsel for Justice Walter S. Pinckney did not examine any witnesses yesterday who were able to contradict any of the specific allegations of the prosecution. Twenty or more witnesses testified as to the deportment of the Justice on the bench on occasions when they were in his court. Assemblyman S. N. Simonson, in answer to the questions of Assistant Corporation Counsel Miller, testified that he once saw the Justice drunk in his [the witness'] office, at No. 304 West Fifty-second-street; among people whom Mr. Simonson heard discussing the reputation of Justice Pinckney the latter was known as a man who got drunk very often. Mr. Wilson MacDonald, the sculptor, said that he was present in Justice Pinckney's court during the trial of several cases, and that what he saw led him to form the opinion that the Justice was a fair, upright, temperate judicial officer. About 18 other witnesses testified in a similar strain. James H. Matthias, a lawyer, said he had visited the St. Cloud Hotel frequently, perfectly familiar with the smell and taste of Santa Cruz rum. He was positive that it was not the practice of Justice Pinckney to drink that beverage from the glass on his bench. James R. Davis will be called at 2:30 P. M. to-day to testify in behalf of the defense.

THE IRVING HALL DEMOCRACY.

A meeting of representatives of the Irving Hall Democracy, the County Democracy, and the City Democracy was held last evening in Mr. John B. Haskin's office. Messrs. Maurice J. Powers, Nelson J. Waterbury, John Fox, John B. Haskin, George W. McLean, Robert B. Nooney, Emanuel B. Hart, Seth C. Douglas, and Frank A. Ransom were present. The meeting resolved to have a new enrollment, and to allow each Assembly District to manage its own affairs. Messrs. Nooney, Waterbury, and Hart were appointed a committee to prepare a plan for the enrollment, and to report the same to the meeting to be held on Thursday next.

MISCELLANEOUS CITY NEWS

THE YOUNG GOVERNESS FOUND.

HER STRANGE STORIES OF MISADVENTURES—SHE IS SENT TO AN INSANE ASYLUM.

Miss Leonora Ebra, the young governess whose mysterious disappearance from the residence of her employer, Mr. C. L. Bernheim, No. 662 Lexington-avenue, has already been published in THE TIMES, was yesterday found at the Roosevelt Hospital, suffering from dementia. She was registered on the hospital books as Miss Schmidt, and her whereabouts was disclosed to the Police by the Superior of the Sisters of the Holy Communion, at whose home, at Sixth-avenue and Twentieth-street, Miss Ebra applied for refuge after leaving her employer's house. Her application for admission to the Home of the Sisters of the Holy Communion was made on the plea of sickness. As Miss Ebra had on a previous occasion been an inmate of the Home for several weeks when suffering from hysteria, she was admitted. At the Home she was known as Leonora Schmidt. While there her strange actions attracted the attention of the Sisters, and her incoherent, rambling statements relative to her adventures aroused the suspicion that she was deranged. During Friday night she was very closely watched, and on Saturday it was decided by the Sisters to send her to the Roosevelt Hospital for examination and treatment. She was admitted to the hospital on Saturday afternoon and was placed in charge of Dr. Woodbridge, the house surgeon.

The peculiar symptoms of her case rather puzzled the doctors. She was not violent and acted like a sane person in most respects, but her incoherent and rambling stories of remarkable misadventures of which she had been made the victim, satisfied the physicians that her mind was unsettled. She was subject to hallucinations of the most peculiar character, and told Dr. Woodbridge that about six months ago, while on her way from San Francisco to this City, she had been drugged, robbed, and outraged on the train, and that she arrived in this City penniless. Dr. Woodbridge subsequently learned that at the time of this adventure, as detailed by the girl, she was an inmate of the Home of the Sisters of the Holy Communion. She claimed to have been born in San Francisco, of very wealthy parents, who died years ago, and that she left there on account of being pursued by enemies who sought her life. She told different stories of her imaginary adventures to different persons, and finally, after careful examination of the patient, and after watching her conduct very closely, the doctors at the hospital became convinced of her insanity. Yesterday Miss Ebra was removed to the State Insane Asylum at Middletown, N. Y. Mrs. Bernheim, having been apprised of Miss Ebra's whereabouts, called at the hospital with her husband, and expressed sympathy for the young woman's unfortunate condition.

THE MARINE SOCIETY.

ANNUAL MEETING AND DINNER OF AN OLD AND WORTHY CHARITY.

There was a full attendance at the one hundred and ninth annual meeting of the Marine Society yesterday afternoon. The Treasurer's report showed receipts during the year of $14,833 and disbursements and investments of an equal amount, leaving a balance of cash on hand of $728 74. The society's investments aggregate $57,578 54 and two houses—a brown-stone residence in Fiftieth-street, New-York, and a store tenement property in Classon-avenue, Brooklyn. There are $44,800 on bond and mortgage, $5,000 on a call loan, and $3,000 in the United States Trust Company. During the year Messrs. Everett P. Wheeler, William H. Sward, Robert L. Kennedy, Marshall O. Roberts, and E. M. Arenibald, the British Consul, have been elected honorary members, and six active members have been added to the roll. The deaths have been George W. Blunt, Robert L. Taylor, C. W. Bartlett, George Chase, Charles Collins, and Thomas Hughes. Three pensioners have been added to the list, and one has died. The yearly pensions given to widows of deceased sea faring men have been reduced to $60. There are now 61 pensioners on the list. The venerable President Thompson in his address spoke of the necessity of increasing the efficiency of the society. He said in the example, from which he died on Oct. 26. At the stated-house Willse said it was John McKenna who had shot him, whereupon Frank, who had been arrested on his previous charge, was released and John was arrested. Subsequently, in making his statement he said it was Frank who had shot him; and when the case came before the Grand Jury an indictment for murder was found against both brothers, and both were arraigned.

When the prisoners were placed at the bar yesterday their counsel demanded separate trials for each, and Mr. Rollins selected Frank for trial first. The statement of the impossibility of making fortunes in the service. Capts. Trask, Tinker, and Lance were appointed a committee to consider this suggestion and recommend such changes in the by-laws as may be necessary. Capt. Thompson's report, which was ordered to be spread upon the minutes. Subsequently, a resolution thanking him for his services and praying that when he receives his "final sailing orders" he may be directed to "an eternal Sailors' Snug Harbor in the skies" was adopted with cheers. The following officers were elected to serve during the coming year: President, Ambrose Snow; First Vice-President, Edward O. Tinker; Second Vice-President, Robert Mackie; Treasurer, William A. Ellis; Secretary, Joseph Perkins; Attorney, William Allen Butler. The entire body then proceeded down stairs, where they enjoyed their annual dinner. Speeches and songs prolonged the entertainment until after 7 o'clock.

CLAIMING BODIES FOR DISSECTION.

The United States Medical College of this City applied to the Commissioners of Charities and Correction recently to obtain for purposes of dissection the bodies of persons who die in the charitable institutions, and are without friends or relatives. The Commissioners refused to grant the application, and the Faculty of the college then sought a mandamus from Judge Barrett, in the Supreme Court. It was claimed by the Faculty that, by chapter 123 of the Laws of 1854, the Commissioners are directed to furnish subjects for dissection to any incorporated medical college. The Commissioners, in their answer, declared that no proof was given them of the legal incorporation of the United States Medical College; that the law of 1854 was merely permissive in its character, and that it did not require, in so direct, unclaimed bodies to be delivered to "professors or teachers in medical colleges," and that a college, in its corporate capacity, has not the right to claim subjects for dissection. Judge Barrett, yesterday, delivered the following decision, upholding the Commissioners by denying the mandamus asked for against them. "There is nothing mandatory in the act. It is permissive merely, and the board may exercise its sound judgment as to the professors or teachers to whom subjects ought to be furnished. It is lawful to furnish such subjects, lawful to receive them. But the act goes no further. Were it otherwise it would only be necessary to file a certificate under this very general act to entitle any five or more persons to remains for the purposes of dissection. This, clearly, was never contemplated, any more than the anomaly of a writ which would command the board to divide the subjects into as many parts as there are colleges or schools in the County, and give an equal share to each. As the right, to say the least, is doubtful, the mandamus should not be granted."

A WOMAN'S QUEER CONVICTION.

Ellen Carberry was recently arrested, with a woman named Bennett, and was accused of petit larceny, in the Court of Special Sessions, the alleged offense consisting of the theft of a small piece of cloth from a dry-goods store. Her companion pleaded guilty to the theft, and declared that Ellen was not aware of its commission until after the arrest. Michael Donovan, from whom the cloth was stolen, could give no evidence against Ellen more conclusive than that he saw her in the company of the woman Bennett before and after the larceny was committed, yet Police Justices Murray, Duffy, and Morgan convicted both women, and sentenced each to imprisonment in the Penitentiary for eight months. Ellen Carberry obtained counsel, who procured a writ of certiorari upon which her case was brought to the notice of Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, on Saturday. Judge Barrett expressed surprise at the action of the Police magistrates, but said he had no jurisdiction, and the case must go to the General Term. He issued a writ of habeas corpus, however, and on that the woman was taken before him yesterday, and released on nominal bail of $50, to await the determination of her case by the General Term.

ARTICLE XIV. SUSTAINED.

The communication of the Republican Central Committee regarding the repeal of Article 14 of the Constitution of the District Republican Associations was discussed at a meeting of the Sixteenth Assembly District Republican Association last evening. Mr. Michael Cregan explained that the influential members of the party hold that, as Mayor Cooper was elected as much by Republican as by Democratic votes, his appointees would not be regarded as disqualified. His motion to refer the communication to the Executive Committee was carried unanimously.

The Thirteenth Assembly District Association also met last evening, and, on motion of Col. Spencer, the proposition to repeal Article 14 was unanimously rejected.

IN THE HANDS OF THE SHERIFF.

The Sheriff has seized the property of Rodgers & Orr Brothers, extensive retail dry goods dealers, on Eighth-avenue between Nineteenth and Twentieth streets, judgments having been entered against the firm by over 20 creditors, amounting to $110,620 73. A fire occurred in their store on Nov. 27, and they claimed the full amount of the insurance, $107,500, but the insurance companies fixed the loss at $16,000, and the matter is still pending. Meanwhile the creditors have taken out the judgments, the principal ones being the following: H. B. Claflin & Co., $255,118 30; John Mills, $17,084 31; Thomas Mills, $5,021 48; W. Schroeder & Co., $4,268 60; Bates, Reed & Cooley, $2,851 13; Moore, Tingue & Co., $2,814 01; James G. Johnson, $2,572 75; Leslie, Kenzer & Co., $2,976; E. S. Jaffray & Co., $2,806 09; Jacob L. Seizas, $1,075 12; Wenzway & Davison, $2,701 68.

FORCED PEDESTRIANISM.

ADVENTURES OF A MAN OF SIXTY-SIX WHO WALKED FROM OMAHA TO NEW-YORK.

There arrived at Castle Garden yesterday a man, 66 years of age, who claims, in an affidavit, that he has walked all the way from Omaha, barefooted, with but $8 in his pocket. His name is Paul Ostrich, and he is a native of Temeswar, Hungary. He has a handsome, intelligent countenance, with snow-white hair and beard, and gives an impression of truthfulness. He speaks English but poorly. He says that he was a farmer in the old country, and permitted himself to be deceived by emigration agents, who told him that all he would have to do would be to come here to make a fortune. He landed in this country from the steamship State of Pennsylvania on March 16, 1877, with $500, the savings of a lifetime. He traveled all over the country in search of an opening, but found none until finally he reached Washington Territory, where he hired a small piece of ground and set to work. The drought destroyed his crops and he was ruined. He made his way to San Francisco, where the German society gave him $8 and a passage to Omaha. The railroad officers at San Francisco also furnished him with tickets to those in Omaha, asking them to pass him on, but the latter paid no attention to them. Being thus deprived of all resources, he set out on his long tramp. He left San Francisco on Sept. 10, and Omaha on Sept. 16, and reached New-York on Christmas Day. He was, therefore, a little over three months en route. His habit was to walk every day from sunrise to sunset. At night he slept in open fields, if no shelter happened to be handy. His food consisted of bread, pork, and apples. The last he picked up as he went along. He was entertained but on two occasions by German families to whom he was able to make known his wants. His $8 lasted him until within three days of his arrival. The only unusual incident that happened him was the stoning of a woman who had picked up some of the bag of apples he was carrying. When they found out the nature of their prize they pelted him with the apples. He had been recommended to call upon Dr. E. J. Villaruf, of No. 259 West Thirty-second-street. He did so and the Doctor introduced him to a minister whose name he forgets, who supplied him with food and clothing. His feet were so sore that he could not wear shoes and a pair of cloth slippers was given him. Dr. Villaruf took him to the German Consul, who advised him to apply to the Commissioners of Emigration. The latter will provide him with a passage to the old country.

A SIXTH WARD TRAGEDY.

FRANK M'KENNA ON TRIAL FOR THE SHOOTING OF W. B. WILLSE.

Judge Cowing, in General Sessions, yesterday entered on the trial of his first murder case. It was that of John and Frank McKenna, proprietors of a liquor saloon at No. 118 Mulberry-street, indicted for the murder of a youth named William B. Willse, who lived at No. 6 Marion-street. The courtroom was packed to overflowing with denizens of the notorious Sixth Ward, the assemblage embracing many of the roughest characters in that unsavory locality. Jail-birds, gamblers, politicians, and liquor-dealers jostled each other in the effort to obtain good positions for hearing, and appeared to take a deep interest in the proceedings. Assistant District Attorney Rollins conducted the prosecution. The facts of the case are briefly as follows: On the evening of Oct. 21 William B. Willse and his brother, Isaac, were passing in front of the saloon of the McKennas, with whom they were on bad terms. Frank McKenna was standing at the door in his shirt-sleeves, and, as the brothers Willse passed, William pushed his brother against him. McKenna pushed him back, whereupon William, who was intoxicated, struck McKenna, and a general row ensued. A crowd soon collected, and in the course of the struggle John McKenna, as alleged, rushed from the store to the rescue of his brother. He carried a pistol, which, as charged, he handed to Frank, who fired it at William Willse, inflicting a wound in the temple, from which he died on Oct. 26. At the stated-house Willse said it was John McKenna who had shot him, whereupon Frank, who had been arrested on his previous charge, was released and John was arrested. Subsequently, in making his statement he said it was Frank who had shot him; and when the case came before the Grand Jury an indictment for murder was found against both brothers, and both were arraigned.

When the prisoners were placed at the bar yesterday their counsel demanded separate trials for each, and Mr. Rollins selected Frank for trial first. Trask, Tinker, and Lance were appointed a committee to consider this suggestion and recommend such changes in the by-laws as may be necessary. Capt. WESTERN UNION ENJOINED.

In the suit of Clinton G. Colgate against the Western Union Telegraph Company, an action sustaining the Simpson patent right for gutta-percha insulators, Judge Blatchford yesterday granted an injunction enjoining the company from using the invention, except on the identical wires and cables now in use, and prohibiting them from selling, transferring, leasing, letting, or parting with them in any manner. Judge Blatchford has appointed United States Commissioner Gutman to take proofs in the case. The order of the court empowers the Commissioner to take the testimony and to report back to the court what sum of money the company shall pay to the plaintiff for their infringement of his rights under the patent; whether or not the license fee of one cent per message offered to be accepted by the defendant is a reasonable license fee for the use of the invention, and, if not, what other sum or rate, either greater or less, would be a reasonable license fee. He is empowered to take proof as to whether any other substance can be substituted for gutta-percha insulators now in use, and included under Simpson's patent with equally good results, what the expense of such substitution would be, if any is practicable, and what time would be occupied in making the change on the defendant's lines.

THE TAMMANY INJUNCTION POSTPONED.

It was expected that a hearing would be had yesterday morning before Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, in the matter of the order issued by that magistrate directing the Tammany Society to show cause why the injunction should not be made permanent, which now temporarily prevents the initiation into the society of 147 persons, who were chosen members at the meeting held on Dec. 31, in a manner which Mr. Hubert O. Thompson and several other members claim was irregular and illegal. The court-room was consequently crowded with Tammany and Anti-Tammany politicians. The Tammany Society was represented by John D. Townsend, ex-Judge James C. Spencer, and E. F. Vanderveer. Mr. Hubert O. Thompson was represented by Thomas Allison. As soon as the case was called Mr. Townsend asked for an adjournment of the hearing for two weeks. He and his colleagues, he said, wanted time to prepare their case. They had determined to make a motion to strike out as irrelevant certain portions of the affidavits upon which the preliminary injunction had been granted, and they considered that such a motion should be made and heard in advance of the hearing on the injunction. After listening to some speech-making from both sides, Judge Barrett appointed Monday next for the hearing of a motion to strike out the allegations in certain parts of the affidavits, and Monday, Jan. 27, for the hearing of motion to continue the preliminary injunction.

CARVER AND BOGARDUS MATCHED.

The conditions of a shooting-match between Dr. Carver and Capt. Bogardus were determined on by the champions yesterday, at the Astor House. The stakes are to be not less than $10,000 a side, and as much more as may be agreed upon before the date of the match. Each contestant will be obliged to break 20,000 glass balls within six days, or 144 hours. Capt Bogardus will use a shot-gun, firing from both barrels at balls sprung from two Bogardus traps, at 15 yards' rise. The Doctor has the choice of either a shot-gun or a rifle, the selection to be announced before the discharge of the first shot. If he selects a shot-gun he will be governed by the rules that are to apply to the firing of his adversary. If his choice is a rifle, the balls are to be thrown into the air either by hand or from a trap, at the option of the marksman. The match is to be shot some time between Sept. 1 and Dec. 31, and is to be open to all those desiring to compete who will deposit stakes equal in amount to those of the champions.

THE FAILURE OF AN OLD HOUSE.

Cornelius Van Horn, trading under the style of Cornelius Van Horn & Co., dealer in carriage hardware, at No. 31 Chambers-street, made an assignment yesterday to Frederick W. Rebhann. The house was one of the oldest in the trade, and was regarded as a wealthy one, but the business has gradually decayed, and the assignment is the result of depreciation in values and shrinkage in stock. Mr. Van Horn said yesterday that he was unable to give the liabilities, but they would not amount to $100,000. The assets consist of stock and outstanding debts. Preferences are given to the following seven creditors: Manufacturers' Bank, G. Peabody Wetmore, Johanna Van Horn, Nassau Bank, Merchants' Exchange National Bank, Frederick S. Van Horn, and Jane V. D. Wells.

IMPORTANT PUBLIC BILLS.

WORK THAT THE HOUSE IS EXPECTED TO DO TO-DAY.

THE WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE READY TO REPORT SEVERAL IMPORTANT MEASURES—HOW JUDGE KELLEY DESIRES TO AMEND THE CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT BILL—THE PAYMENT OF CUSTOMS DUTIES IN GREENBACKS—A POOR CHANCE FOR THE SUGAR BILL.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—To-morrow has been set apart by the House of Representatives for the consideration of bills to be reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, and that committee has prepared several public bills of an important character, upon which an earnest effort will be made to obtain a vote. In addition to the bill readjusting the duties on sugars, the committee will report the bill to authorize the issue of certificates of deposit in aid of the refunding of the public debt, and the bill to make United States notes receivable for duties on imports, both of which were introduced by Mr. Wood.

The bill to authorize the issue of certificates of deposit directs the Secretary of the Treasury to issue, in exchange for lawful money of the United States, certificates of deposit of the denomination of $10, bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, and convertible at any time, with accrued interest, into 4 per cent. bonds, described in the refunding act; the money so received to be applied only to the payment of the 5-20 bonds. According to the terms of the bill the certificates provided for can only be exchanged for 4 per cent. bonds, the lowest denomination of which is $50. If the holder of certificates in sums less than $50 desired to convert his certificates into lawful money he would be unable to do so at the Treasury, and would be forced to send his certificates to the brokers' board or dispose of them to capitalists at a discount. Judge Kelley has the permission of the Committee on Ways and Means to propose an amendment in the House, intended to remedy this defect, which amendment will be presented before the previous question is moved on the bill. This amendment provides that the certificates may be converted into lawful money, with accrued interest, upon the demand of the holder, after six months from the date of issue, and may be convertible at any time, with accrued interest, into 4 per cent. bonds. The effect of Judge Kelley's amendment will be to enable the poor man, who may want to use his savings before he can accumulate $50 to convert his certificates upon demand, with interest, into lawful money. The purpose of the amendment, in addition to making the certificates convertible at the will of the holder into lawful money, is to prevent them from depreciating below their face value.

The bill to make United States notes receivable for duties on imports simply provides that such notes shall be received for Customs duties on and after the passage of the bill. Although, as a matter of business convenience, United States notes, by the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, are now received for Customs duties, the law expressly states that all duties on imports shall be paid in gold or silver coin only. In his last annual report the Secretary of the Treasury recommended the passage of a bill authorizing the payment of duties on imports in United States notes, so long as such notes are maintained at par with gold. Such a proviso was offered to the pending bill to-day by Messrs. Garfield and Burchard, but the committee rejected it. Permission was given, however, to offer the amendment in the House before the previous question is moved on the bill, as was done in the case of Judge Kelley's proposed amendment to the Three Per Cent. Certificate bill. The parliamentary effect of this permission is to place the amendment before the House as a part of the measure to be voted upon.

No other amendments will be permitted to be offered to the two bills above described, and additional amendments can only be offered by voting down the previous question. This motion will be made by Mr. Wood upon reporting the bills, and the debate, should the previous question be sustained, will thus be limited to one hour on each bill. The indications are that Judge Kelley's amendment to the Three Per Cent. Certificate bill will be adopted, but Mr. Garfield's amendment to the Customs bill is not so favorably regarded, and is likely to be rejected.

The bill to readjust the duties on sugar will have to go to the Committee of the Whole House, where it may be amended and discussed without limitation. Messrs. Wood, Garfield, Kelley, and Banks have given notice of a purpose to oppose the bill, and the near approach of the end of the session makes its chances for passage extremely doubtful.

In addition to the bills above referred to, the committee also agreed to report to-morrow the bill relating to the tax upon deposits in savings banks. This bill provides that whenever and after any bank has ceased to do business by reason of insolvency or bankruptcy, no tax shall be assessed against, or collected from, said bank under the laws of the United States which shall diminish the assets thereof necessary for the full payment of all its depositors, and such tax shall be abated from such national banks as shall be found by the Controller of the Currrency to be insolvent, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, when the facts shall so appear to him, is authorized to remit so much of said tax against State and savings banks as shall be found to affect the claims of said depositors. The bill also amends section 3,408, Revised Statutes, to read as follows: "The deposits in associations or companies known as provident institutions, savings banks, savings funds, or savings institutions, recognized as such by the laws of their respective States, shall be exempt from tax on so much of their deposits as they have invested in securities of the United States, and on $2,000 of each deposit made in the name of any one person, firm, or corporation."

The committee also agreed to report a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange 6 per cent. bonds for 4 per cent. bonds, and to allow persons surrendering 6 per cent. bonds three months' interest upon the same from the date of such surrender and exchange. The passage of this bill would materially interfere with the profits of the banks in the sale of refunding bonds.

CONGRESSIONAL TOPICS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—An effort was made in the House to-day to take up the Geneva Award bill, but it was defeated by a vote of 112 to 105, and the House took up the bill to pension soldiers of the Mexican and certain Indian wars. The Geneva Award bill has now lost its standing as a special order, and must take its place upon the calendar with measures advanced to the same stage of progress. It may, however, be taken up by a majority vote when the public calendar is in order, or it may be again fixed as a special order by a similar vote. The chances for the passage of this bill by the House are not favorable, and even should it pass the House it is not likely that it will be acted upon by the Senate during the present session.

It seems that the railroad now being constructed through the Territory of Arizona under the auspices of the Central Pacific Company, and known as the Southern Pacific Railroad, is without authority of law. Attention was called to this matter to-day in the Senate, and a resolution was adopted directing the Secretary of the Interior to inquire into the facts and report the same to the Senate.

AN OSWEGO BANK CLOSED.

ALBANY, Jan. 14.—The Oswego City Savings Bank has been closed by an injunction issued on application of the Attorney-General by Judge Landon, and returnable before him at Schnectady on the 21st inst. Superintendent Lamb, in calling the attention of the Attorney-General to this bank, says he finds an apparent deficit in the bank's assets amounting to $17,346 55, and a deficit of annual income amounting to $5,698 56. In the assets are counted at a valuation of $10,000 bonds of the town of Newfane, which have been in default of interest for nearly five years. Bonds of the towns of Sodus and Wolcott are also counted in the assets at $21,240, or 90 per cent. of their face value. Both towns have voted not to levy a tax to meet the interest due Jan. 1, 1879.

BISMARCK'S DISCIPLINE BILL.

MORE OPPOSITION TO THE MEASURE ABROAD THAN IN GERMANY—CONSTITUTIONAL ASPECTS OF THE QUESTION—A BELIEF THAT THE BILL WILL BE PASSED.

LONDON, Jan. 14.—A Berlin dispatch to the Times says: "The Parliamentary Punishment bill continues to be the chief topic of conversation in all political circles. The opinion of the foreign press is eagerly quoted in comparison with articles in the journals here, which seems to yield the curious result that abroad there is more opposition to the Chancellor's scheme than in Germany itself. There is certainly great opposition here to the bill, though to the English mind it is somewhat suprising to find so much unconcern reigning, in view of the fate which seems to threaten the freedom of speech and the liberty of the press. The Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung and Post defend the Chancellor's scheme. The Kreuz Zeitung, though admitting the necessity of some restraint on Parliamentary speech, thinks, with the Liberals, that the bill, in its present form, is inadmissible, for the reason that it changes several articles of the Constitution, which cannot be done without a special resolution by the Reichstag to that effect. In Parliamentary circles the question is being discussed whether the bill, in view of certain articles of the imperial Constitution, might not be rejected a limine. That might, doubtless, be done if a majority of the House would only resolve to do it, but many persons here believe that Prince Bismarck, despite the present opposition, will ultimately succeed in carrying the measure with but few changes."

BERLIN, Jan. 14.—The North German Gazette denies that Germany has complained at Vienna of the tone of the comments of the Austrian press on the Reichstag Discipline bill.

It is semi-officially announced that the Parliamentary Discipline bill was brought forward by the direct command of the Emperor William.

ENGLISH TRADE AND LABOR.

NOTICES OF A REDUCTION OF WAGES WITHDRAWN—DISORGANIZATION OF MIDLAND RAILWAY TRAFFIC—BUSINESS FAILURES.

BARNSLEY, Jan. 14.—The owners of the Thorncriffe Collieries, who are among the leading members of the Masters' Association, have withdrawn their notices of a reduction of wages. The men have not yet answered the inquiry of the masters concerning arbitration.

LONDON, Jan. 14.—There is much contradiction concerning the traffic of the Midland Railway. It is certainly more disorganized than has been stated by the company, but the strike is collapsing.

The Midland Railway conductors in the Manchester district have resumed work on the company's terms.

Crighton Brothers, merchants, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, have failed. Their liabilities are £97,500.

McKay & Kirkwood, extensive wholesale stationers, printers, and publishers, of Glasgow, have failed. Their liabilities are large.

At an interview to-day between the Midland Railway signalmen and the Directors of that road, at Derby, the latter nominally adhered to the reduction of wages, but consented to grant a reclassification of the status of the men which will prevent its taking effect in many instances. It is almost certain that a strike by these men will thus be avoided.

The delegates of the Sheffield colliers to-day represented to the Finance Committee of the Coal-owners' Association that the men were generally averse to arbitration, but might be persuaded to agree thereto if time were allowed. The committee consented to issue a circular asking the coal-owners to extend the notices of reduction for a fortnight.

The number of persons expelled from the Empire under the same law amounts to 62. Monday's official Gazette contains a list of the various societies forbidden throughout the Empire.

A Berlin dispatch to the Times states that several places in Prussia are still infected with the rinderpest.

LOGAN'S CHANCES FOR SENATOR.

FEARS OF THE DEVELOPMENT OF A HAYES AND ANTI-HAYES CONTEST IN ILLINOIS.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 14.—Collector William Henry Smith, of Chicago, arrived here this morning as the friend of Farwell, and immediately a rumor was current that the Federal patronage in the State, was to be redistributed in Farwell's interests. Smith is a friend of the President, and it was supposed he could make promises that would be fulfilled. The rumor, however, is probably without foundation, as Smith is well known as a civil service reformer. The Logan men are indignant because the Administration, through Smith, has apparently taken sides against him, and is endeavoring to compass his defeat. The fact that Logan is opposed to the Administration, and that Smith represents it, makes it seem as if the struggle might assume a Hayes and anti-Hayes aspect that will help Logan. The indications now are that nothing short of a bolt can defeat Logan. In the preliminary caucuses held to-day to appoint committees to decide upon the time for the caucus, the Logan men had everything their own way. It has been agreed on all sides that the caucus shall be held next Friday evening. There is talk of a bolt, but, so far, it is only talk.

The district is densely populated. It is said that there are 58 men in the pit. The explosion was very violent, and it is feared that none of the men escaped. The bottom of the shaft is temporarily impassable.

POTTER'S FARCE RESUMED.

A DAY OF UNSATISFACTORY TESTIMONY.

MR. BURCH, ONE OF THE LOUISIANA ELECTORS, TESTIFIES THAT HE KNOWS NOTHING ABOUT THE ALLEGED FORGERIES—THOMAS KELLY SAYS THAT ONE OF THE GOVERNOR'S CLERKS WROTE JOFFRION'S NAME—HIS CAUTIOUS REPLIES TO GEN. BUTLER'S QUESTIONS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—The Potter committee was in session the greater part of to-day, but nothing new or important was developed. Gen. Butler was in attendance for the first time this Winter, and, as usual, took a prominent part in the proceedings. Only two witnesses were examined—J. Henri Burch, of Louisiana, Elector at Large on the Hayes and Wheeler ticket, and Thomas G. Kelly, who was messenger for Gov. Kellogg, and who, it is charged, forged the signatures of Levisee and Joffrion to the second set of returns. Kelly had, on Saturday, refused to answer whether or not he had written the names of these two Electors on the returns, and asked until to-day to consult counsel. When asked to-day he answered that he did not commit the forgery. Gov. Cox asked him who did, when he again refused to answer until he could be assured that by answering he would not criminate himself. A long discussion as to whether his presence at the time the signatures were forged could be held to have made him an accessory to the forgery, resulted in a decision that it could not, and that he must answer. The witness then answered that B. P. Blanchard, a clerk in the Governor's office, wrote the signature of Joffrion. He detailed the history of the transaction. When asked where Blanchard was, he said he was dead. Numerous questions were put to him touching Joffrion's signature, but he adhered to the original story. Finally, Gen. Butler took the witness in hand and confronted him with his letters to the Chairman of the committee, and questioned him closely about the circumstances surrounding the signing of the returns, and at times the retorts of the witness were quite pointed. When he said he could write, Gen. Butler picked up a pen and said, "write the name of Joffrion," which the witness declined to do. He consented, however, to write his own name in three different ways. The witness maintained himself well under Butler's cross-examination, but it must be said that his testimony did not leave a favorable impression, and it was evident he knew more about the writing of the signatures than he was willing to tell. Burch's testimony was not important. He swore he signed his own name.

After the testimony was closed, Mr. Hiscock asked what the committee proposed to do about the resolution to investigate the cipher telegrams. Mr. Potter said he would present the resolution to the House next Monday, but that it could not pass then, as Gen. Butler proposed to object, and would debate the proposition. Gen. Butler inquired: "Yes, Sir, or no, Sir, I shall. I object to spending the people's money for any such purpose." The committee then adjourned until Thursday morning, when it is probable that St. Martin will be called to the stand.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE COMMITTEE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—The Potter committee to-day examined J. Henri Burch, one of the Louisiana Presidential Electors for the State at large. He testified that, some time after he had signed the first certificate, he was called to sign another, owing to some alleged informality; when he went into an up-stairs room for that purpose, he found there Mr. Clark, the private secretary of Gov. Kellogg: the paper was lying on the desk, and he signed his name in the proper place; he remained there only a sufficient time to sign his name; he thought one or two names had been previously signed; he did not remember seeing anybody in the room except Mr. Clark, or anybody coming up or going down stairs.

By the Chairman—Did you hear what was the matter with the first set of certificates? A.—Only that there was informality.

Q.—When did you hear that some of the signatures of the second set were not genuine? A.—I think I heard so from Mr. Levisee, one of the Electors, but I had also heard through the press or from conversation that there were forged signatures; I had no talk with Mr. Levisee about it; I do not know anything except about the execution of the second set; it is quite true that I did not forge signatures; I did not do it myself, nor do I know who did it.

Thomas G. Kelly, the witness examined on Saturday, was recalled. The Chairman stated that on that day the witness was asked the direct question by Mr. Cox whether he forged the name of either Joffrion or Levisee, or both, to the second set of certificates, and the witness declined to answer until he could consult counsel. The Chairman now asked whether the witness was prepared to answer.

Witness answered that he was prepared, and that he did not forge the signatures.

Q.—Did you form your opinion personally on the subject? A.—I have no means of proving the knowledge I possess.

The Chairman called attention to several of the sentences the witness used in his letter to him in June last, among them the following: "I will show you the man who forged the signatures;" and asked: "On what ground did you make that statement?" A.—I believed at the time that I had the knowledge to do it. But I cannot do so now. It is a matter of impossibility.

The Chairman—You say in your letter to me that you wished me to keep this secret, because you feared the persons in Louisiana would not hesitate to murder you.

The witness said he had no such fear, but thought the remark would impress the Chairman with the propriety of keeping the contents of the letter secret.

Q.—Did you form your opinion that the names of Joffrion and Levisee were forged because they were not in New-Orleans at the time? A.—I have other reasons.

Q.—What are the other reasons? A.—I cannot answer; and that would place me in the same position I was in on Saturday.

Mr. Hinton moved that the witness be required to answer.

A discussion ensued, in which Mr. Butler said the witness had asserted that he could not answer the question, being fearful of the consequences to himself. Mr. Butler asked, "if you have sworn you did not commit the forgery, how can you suppose that a knowledge that somebody else did it can harm you?" A.—The fact that I have been in this case involves me; I had nothing to do with it in person.

By Mr. Hiscock—Did you counsel or advise such forgery? A.—No.

Q.—Did you aid or abet or assist in the forgery? A.—I cannot answer the question at present.

The witness was required, by the following vote, to answer the question: Yeas—Messrs. Morrison, Hunton, Stenger, Blackburn, Springer, Butler, Cox. Nays—Messrs. Hiscock, Reed, and the Chairman.

After further proceedings, the witness was asked what other reasons he had for knowing that the names of Joffrion and Levisee were forged, other than the fact that they were not in New-Orleans at the time.

The witness answered that he could not state positively as to the name of Levisee, but could do so to the name of Joffrion.

Q.—Who forged his name? A.—It was done by D. P. Blanchard, a clerk in the Governor's office; no one but the witness and Blanchard were present at the time.

The committee then took a recess till 1:30 o'clock.

The committee did not reassemble until 2:30 o'clock. The examination of Mr. Kelly was continued. In reply to an inquiry by Mr. Cox as to how he came to write his letter to the Chairman of the committee, the witness said that at the time Hayes was elected the Republicans of Louisiana thought he had not treated them as he should have done, considering the circumstances under which he was elected, and witness therefore thought he would return the compliment; for this reason he wrote the letter; he disclaimed personal pique in the matter, or disappointment because he was not successful in obtaining office.

Q.—Did anybody approach you as to the character of the evidence you should give before this committee? A.—I was approached once by a gentleman named Maddox. He was introduced to me by Col. George W. Carter, and said he came in the interest of the committee or from the committee; he came to the place where I was stopping and had a conversation with me, the purport of which was that he was employed by high authority from this committee to ascertain what my testimony would be; he offered, as an inducement for me to testify, that no questions should be asked to injure me or any of my friends; the object of the committee, was, he said, to make political capital for Tilden against Thurman; as a further inducement for me to testify, I was told that I could go off a considerable distance, even to San Francisco, and could then be summoned back, profiting by the mileage to witnesses.

The witness was then examined at considerable length by Gen. Butler. He said, among other things, that Blanchard, who committed the forgery of names to the certificate, is dead.

Q.—You say that Blanchard not only had an opportunity to forge the signature alone, without being seen, but he called you to witness it, asking, "How is that for high?" What answer have you to make to that? A.—That's what he did.

Q.—Was there any particular intimacy between you and Blanchard? A.—I was in a different position from other messengers. I could write when the force of the office was short.

Q.—Have the kindness to write the name of Joffrion? A.—I decline to do so.

Q.—Write your own name.

The witness did so, saying, "That is my signature now."

Q.—Give me your signature as it used to be.

The witness did so; and in further reply to questions, he said he had one signature for letters to friends, and another for business.

Q.—Why did you make a difference in signatures? A.—The matter concerns myself, and I made a difference in my signature because I chose.

Q.—Why? A.—Because it suited my pleasure.

The witness, being examined by the Chairman, said he did not tell Maddox what testimony he was going to give; but he informed Jerome Johnson, who is employed in the Treasury Department, and Kennedy, who is employed by the Senate, what his conversation with Maddox was. The witness further said that when he saw the forging of the name to the Electoral certificate, he did not think it a matter of importance to be talked about.

Gen. Butler next referred the witness to a sentence in his letter to Mr. Potter, in which he said: "If I could see the Electoral certificates, I could show the forgery of the name of Joffrion as well as that of Levisee. I have made marks on them to prove this beyond doubt, and to show you the men who did it." Gen. Butler exhibited to him the certificates, and asked him to point out the marks of which he spoke in his letter. The witness replied that the difference was in the handwriting and make-up. These were the marks.

The Chairman wished to say with respect to one statement of the witness that he was sitting at New-York at the time the alleged communication from this committee was made, and that he never authorized Mr. Maddox, Col. Carter, or anybody else to speak to the witness in regard to his evidence or otherwise.

The committee adjourned until Thursday morning.

The counsel of Secretary Sherman—Judge Shellabarger—said privately this afternoon that the examination of St. Martin would depend upon future developments in the committee.

THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEES.

SPEAKER ALVORD STILL IN ALBANY—MR. SLOAN'S POSITION—THE COMMITTEES TO BE ANNOUNCED AT ONCE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 14.—Allusion has been made to the fact that Mr. A. B. Cornell, Insurance Superintendent John F. Smyth, and other favored persons have made daily visits to the Delavan House, which has proved to be Speaker Alvord's retreat, since Saturday, and that they have spent a good deal of time in Mr. Alvord's room. The work of making up the committees has been pushed forward there. Mr. George B. Sloan has not made any demand upon Mr. Alvord for any committee whatever. On Friday last he visited the Speaker and had a long talk with him on the subject of making up the committees, and he then took the opportunity to tell him frankly that in arranging the committees he was not to feel that he was at all embarrassed by Mr. Sloan, as the latter did not feel that he ought to stand in the way of the preferment of any friend whom Mr. Alvord had decided to appoint as the leader of any prominent committee. Mr. Sloan assured me of this fact to-day, and also, in the course of the conversation, alluded to the reports current before the election of Speaker about his ambition to be a candidate for Governor in the Fall. He said the last report was absurd, and that the notion was as far from his mind as the other one that he had pretended to be averse to a nomination to the Assembly, when he was really anxious to be elected. He felt in regard to his nomination that a responsibility lay upon him, and that it would not do for him to refuse and perhaps place the re-election of a Republican United States Senator in doubt. He had previously written a letter declining to accept a nomination, but when urged by a committee of his fellow-citizens who had waited upon him to induce him to change his mind, he had and yielded, just as any Republican would have been expected to yield under the circumstances.

To-night, Mr. Alvord's friends declare that the committees will be announced to-morrow, and they say that the report that they were to be held over until Tuesday was entirely without foundation in fact. The time of the officers of the Assembly who held over from last year will expire to-day, and it will be necessary to have their successors ready for duty. Some changes are to be made in the clerkships, and several men who have held positions for a number of years are spoken of as likely to be superseded. I sent my card in to Speaker Alvord's room to-night, soon after the arrival of the train from New-York which brought up Mr. Husted, Gen. Sharpe, and others. The room was filled with people, Mr. J. F. Smyth, Mr. A. B. Cornell, Clerk Johnson, Mr. Husted, Senator Rockwell, and others, being with Mr. Alvord. The colored man who assisted me to find the out-of-the-way room, wanted to know, particularly if I desired to see Mr. Alvord, and then disappeared. He came back after a moment's absence with the message that Mr. Alvord had gone home. The presence of the Speaker in the Delavan, had, it was thought, been kept a profound secret, and the discovery of his hiding-place caused some astonishment and amusement among his friends. The trains arriving to-day brought members of the two houses in parties of two and three, and the hotels begin to assume a lively aspect.

SENATOR MERRIMON'S SACRIFICE.

HARMONY RESTORED BY HIS WITHDRAWAL FROM THE SENATORIAL CONTEST IN NORTH CAROLINA.

RALEIGH, N. C., Jan. 14.—The contest for United States Senator to succeed A. S. Merrimon on the 4th of March next, which has been going on with great bitterness for six months between the partisans of Gov. Vance and Senator Merrimon, came to an unexpected end last night. A Democratic caucus was held, and a letter from Merrimon was read, stating that his friends had ascertained that he could not be elected, and, having no desire to disturb the quiet of the Democratic Party by further contest, he announced his withdrawal from the race. Merrimon's friends account for this action upon the ground that Merrimon did not intend, in any event, to seek an election outside of the caucus, and, being a party man, he could not proceed further without damage to his political friends. It is understood that the supporters of Merrimon in the Legislature will not be transferred to any other candidate to defeat Gov. Vance. Men who expected Vance and Merrimon to wage war upon each other until they destroyed themselves, and that some third man would be elected to preserve harmony, are sorely disappointed that the struggle has ended. Merrimon was the strongest candidate in the State as against Vance, but none of the other candidates opposed to Vance would support Merrimon, and having thus defeated Merrimon, the friends of the latter are determined that Vance shall be elected, so far as they are concerned.

It is said freely upon the streets that Merrimon expects to be rewarded for restoring harmony in the party by thus sacrificing himself, with the nomination for Governor in 1880, and probably the election as the successor of Senator Ransom in 1882. It is also said that Merrimon had ascertained that if he was defeated in caucus the Republican members would not support him, as they did in 1872, when he bolted the caucus nomination and defeated Gov. Vance with the unanimous Republican vote. The Democrats will meet in caucus to nominate a candidate for Senator to-morrow night. There is no doubt that Gov. Vance will be nominated on the first ballot. The Republicans will nominate a candidate and give him a full vote.

ANALYZING THE EVIDENCE.

ARGUMENTS FOR AND AGAINST MRS. COBB.

CONCLUSION OF THE TESTIMONY—GIST OF WHAT THE STATE'S ATTORNEY SAID IN TWO AND A HALF HOURS—MR. THRESHER'S APPEAL FOR HIS CLIENT.

NORWICH, Conn., Jan. 14.—The trial of Kate M. Cobb for poisoning her husband, which has occupied the Superior Court for two weeks, draws near its end. The evidence is now all in, and the case has been summed up by the assistant counsel on either side. To-morrow the final arguments will be made by State's Attorney Waller, and by Mr. Wait for Mrs. Cobb. In Connecticut the defense has the last word to the jury. The Judge's charge is not expected to be a long one, and the jury will have the question submitted to them before nightfall.

All of this forenoon's session was taken up with the introduction of testimony in rebuttal. Mr. Congdon, who was a member of the Coroner's jury last June, was recalled to testify concerning Mrs. Cobb's statements and demeanor on that occasion. He said that Mrs. Waterman then testified to receiving the tea which was left after Mr. Cobb's illness in February only a few days later, whereas her statement in this trial was that she only had it four months afterward. Both Mrs. Cobb and Mrs. Waterman were asked at that time if Bishop ever brought tea to the house, and they said no. Now the defense claims that Bishop brought just enough tea for one drawing, and that it was this which made Mr. Cobb ill late in February. It is one of the theories of the defense that Mrs. Cobb was not in a physical nor mental condition which would qualify her to testify rationally at that inquest, which was held about three weeks after Cobb's death. The witness was therefore questioned as to her health and bearing at that time. She said that Mr. Waller had consulted a physician, and the physician went to the house for Mrs. Cobb; when, during the proceedings, Mrs. Cobb seemed to faint, the physician was asked if it were wise to continue to examine her, and he replied that she was fit to testify. The witness said that she appeared to have an idea of what was going on and to be as intelligent in her answers then as she had been last week in this trial. When she pretended to faint her cheeks flushed and the color remained in her lips.

Dr. Perkins was called and corroborated the latter part of this testimony, and also stated that the Winchester's elixir of hypophosphites and calisaya bark, which was taken by Cobb, would not have caused the nausea, which the defense attributes to it.

The State had three or four children who had gone to the same school as Della Cobb in attendance, to testify that they had seen Bishop give her a note for her mother, which note Mrs. Cobb says she never received. Each objection was made when the first child was put upon the stand, and this testimony, which was much counted on by the State, was ruled out.

The father and mother of Mr. Cobb and Mrs. Fuller, a sister, who strongly resembles him in face and figure, were then recalled, and all of them swore that they never heard Mr. Cobb call his wife "Pet." Col. Wait tried to get this testimony ruled out, but without success. The father testified that Bishop could have kissed Mrs. Cobb, as Bishop claims, in the pantry, after Mr. Cobb died, without the others, sitting at the table, seeing them; also, that when Mrs. Administrator on Cobb's estate, made an inventory of the articles in the house, he allowed Mrs. Cobb to reserve everything she called a present.

Mrs. Lillen A. Brady, a neighbor of Mrs. Cobb, and also a member of Victory Lodge, in which the prisoner had been Worthy Chief Templar, testified that Mrs. Cobb attended the oyster supper given by the lodge the night of Jan. 16, 1878; that she went home with Bishop, Administrator on Cobb's estate, to see her children to be cared for by Mrs. Waterman over night; Mrs. Cobb told the witness that her husband was in Troy, and that she would be alone that night.

Mrs. Walker, a sister of Mrs. Bishop, was asked whether she knew that Mrs. Bishop knew where Bishop obtained the watch-chains given him by Mrs. Cobb. Objection was made by the defense to this question, and there was a protracted search among the statements of witnesses for the particular statement which this was designed to contradict. At last it was produced. Mrs. Cobb had sworn that on her return from Troy she told Mrs. Bishop that she sent the chains to Mr. Bishop. This witness now testified that her sister never knew anything about it. The witness also testified that on one occasion, when Mrs. Cobb had ridden down street with Bishop on the occasion of the latter's visits, Bishop had said resentfully to Mrs. Cobb, "If reports are true, this is not the first time you have been out riding with my husband." At another time the witness sat with the Cobbs and Bishops in church, and Bishop passed communion-tokens to Mrs. Cobb to read, and when she returned them he put them back in his pocket. Mrs. Bishop thereupon remarked, jealously, to her sister, "It makes no difference where I sit; Wesley has eyes and ears only for Kate."

Mr. Moyer, who sold Bishop a pencil-case, was called to identify the one Mrs. Cobb claims to have picked up on the boat. While it looked like the one he sold, he could not swear that it was the very one.

The State here rested. The defense tried to introduce a pamphlet entitled "Fallibility of Scientific Testimony," by Dr. A. C. Cassel, designed to break down Doremus' testimony; and also a book by Prof. R. D. Hay, of Amherst College, on tea-drinking. Objection was made by Mr. Waller, however, and both were ruled out. Mr. Waterman was recalled to testify relative to his mother's talk with Della Cobb's name-book from the lawyer's. His memory was rather imperfect in regard to some of the details, but he did not recall any conversation about a cup marked "Pet." Mrs. Waterman did not remember another child, and ask her if this was not the one she was thinking of; she said nothing to Della about having carried a note from Bishop.

Miss Loomis, whom the child said was present at the time, was also recalled, for the same purpose, and, after the direct examination, was very closely questioned by the State's Attorney, but without shaking her story at all. She said that, being deaf, she asked the child to come near her, when on telling the grandmother about the lawyers and her talk with them. So Della sat in the witness' lap, and the witness held her ear down so as to catch every word. She did not hear anything said about a cup. Mrs. Waterman did not exhibit any cup of her own.

The defense had had one or two more witnesses to call, but, as they did not readily respond to the summons, and apparently were of little consequence, the case for the defense was rested and the noon recess taken.

Col. George C. Ripley began his argument for the State at 2 o'clock. He first paced nervously before the jury, speaking at first in moderate tone. By degrees his manner grew warm and his gestures more animated. First he pictured the character of Mr. Cobb, and the happy home made desolate by his death. Then the history of the repeated illness and final death was reviewed, which brought him to the analysis of Prof. Doremus, the accuracy and results of which were dwelt upon at great length. The whole grain of arsenic was discovered in the parts examined, and yet it was plainly shown that the poison was partially eliminated from the system. High medical authority declared, he said, that the man died of arsenic; suicide was not suggested by the defense, and accident was more than improbable. All the testimony tending to suggest the possibility of habitual arsenic-eating was assailed, the chief argument against it being the absence of an ostensibly loving wife amid all the mystery of the illness and death, when she claimed to have known that Cobb was using arsenic persistently. If the poison was not voluntarily, taken then he must have been murdered.

Comparison was then made between the testimony and motives of Bishop and Mrs. Cobb on the stand. The speaker dwelt at length upon the horrible character of Bishop, but denounced him as beyond the pale of human sympathy and human pardon, but he held that Bishop was beyond all hope of saving his life in giving his testimony, and hence he was entitled to the full reward deserving of belief. Mrs. Cobb, who contradicted the poisoning story, was straining every nerve for self-preservation. The main points of her story, already disproved, were then cited to show her mendacity. Of course, the motive for the crime was found in the criminal intimacy. The evidences of this—the poetry and the assignations—were emphatically enumerated, and a pointed allusion was made to Mrs. Waterman's endeavor to make the prisoner's child perjure herself. Col. Ripley occupied two hours and a quarter, and at the end of the argument the court granted a recess of 15 minutes.

At 8 o'clock Thresher began his opening argument for the defense. Last June, when Bishop was arrested, he secured Mr. Thresher as his counsel. But after Bishop made his confessions last October, his lawyer abandoned him, and employed Messrs. Watt and Greene in Mrs. Cobb's defense. In his argument Mr. Thresher directed his efforts to demolishing the theory that Mrs. Cobb preferred Wesley Bishop to her own husband. He then discussed at length the doctrine that a person is to be presumed innocent until proved guilty. Much time was devoted to citations from authorities as to the nature and efficacy of a reasonable doubt in the jury's mind concerning the prisoner's guilt. Great stress was laid on the other justifiable presumption that, until the contrary was proved, a wife is faithful and devoted to her husband and worthy of his confidence. Instances of husband-poisoning, he said, were as rare as the loss of a star from heaven. Taking up the theory of arsenical poisoning, Mr. Thresher said that Cobb's attending physician had not suspected it. Prof. Doremus and his analysis were very sneeringly referred to. The stains which were shown the jury contained infinitely small quantities of arsenic, which Prof. Doremus had not attempted to weigh. At most, that expert had found only one grain of arsenic, whereas Taylor stated that between two and three grains was a fatal dose. The large number of patent medicines which Cobb had taken, to say nothing of the remedies put up by Dr. Button, an irregular practitioner, were enough to kill almost any one. Mr. Thresher had only half finished his argument, but was obliged by the lateness of the hour to suspend further discussion until to-morrow.

Victory Lodge of Good Templars, in which Mrs. Cobb held the highest office last year, has just accepted her resignation of membership, and has stricken her name from the rolls.

"DOC." CLOW'S CHARMED LIFE.

THE MANY ESCAPES OF A RAILROAD BAGGAGEMAN.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Jan. 14.—"Doc." Clow, as he is known to railroad men, but whose right name is Albert Clow, is one of 12 through baggagemen in the employment of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, and his route is from New-York to Buffalo. He has probably been in more "smash-ups" than any other railroad man in the United States, and has seen men killed alongside of him right and left, but, with one exception, he has always come out without receiving an injury of any account. Twelve years ago he was on a milk train which ran off a switch near Montrose, Hudson River Railroad. His car was upset and broken, and a tramp was killed, but "Doc." came out of the ruins all right. He was on a Yonkers train which ran into another passenger train. Four cars were smashed and several persons were hurt, but "Doc." crawled out from under a car and helped to clear the track. He was through baggageman on the Pacific Express train which came into collision with an old train seven years ago on the New-Hamburg draw-bridge, and another man was in the car with him. The car, when the train struck the old train, turned over on its side, and bumped along over the trestlework before it came to the horrible chasm, into which it plunged. As it lay on its side the door was, of course, on top, and through it "Doc." crawled, and, as he reached the opening, a terrific jolting hurled him on the ice below, over which the burning kerosene from the burst oil-cars was flowing, but he managed to crawl to safety, receiving only a slight singeing. The other man was carried down into the river beneath the draw with the car, and killed, and in all the cars that went through the bridge "Doc." was the only person saved. Two or three years ago Clow's train was in a collision near Greenbush. His baggage-car was torn to pieces, and he was smashed in with the baggage, but not a bone was broken. In this accident two were killed. A year after, another collision occurred, near the same place, and "Doc.'s" train was again in it. The baggage-car and express-car were smashed to flinders, but once more "Doc." escaped, and again two persons were killed. Then his car was run into by a car loaded with lumber at West Albany, and the lumber was telescoped into the baggage-car, but, as it came in one end, "Doc." went out the other. Some time after, his train was run into by a coal-car, and his baggage-car was wrecked. In this accident he jumped before the crash came, and went over and down into a ditch, but not a bone was broken. Again, he was baggage-master on the St. Louis express when it ran off the track a short distance east of Buffalo, a few years ago. The train was badly smashed, and the express messenger in the car ahead of him was burned to death, but "Doc." did not receive a scratch. In all these hair breadth escapes he never received a scar. But to-day he carries a scar which worries him. It reaches from the centre of his forehead down to the end of his nose—a sort of zig-zag scar, as though he had been struck by l

THE NEW SOLAR THEORY.

WHAT SCIENTIFIC MEN THINK OF MR. LOCKYER'S DISCOVERY.

PROF. HENRY DRAPER WAITS FOR FACTS—THE PREGNANT PASSAGE IN COMPTES RENDUS WHICH STARTED THE CRAZE—THE DATA UPON WHICH MR. LOCKYER RESTS HIS DOCTRINE—ANOTHER INTERPRETATION THAT THEY MAY POSSIBLY BEAR.

While the acknowledged masters of experimental physics in this City, such as Prof. Rood, of Columbia College, and Prof. Draper, of the University of the City of New-York, are cautious about expressing an opinion of Mr. J. Norman Lockyer's alleged discoveries respecting the constitution of the solar atmosphere, it is very evident, from the general drift of their conversation, that, while they concede the probability that the so-called elements are not simples, they are not prepared to concede that Mr. Lockyer has furnished any sufficient demonstration. This hypothesis, which has taken a new significance in view of the doctrine that all forces are but modes of one primal force, has been conditionally accepted by physicists since the days of Sir Isaac Newton, and formed the basis of the speculations of medæval science. But as Prof. Draper very cautiously observed in the course of an interview last evening, it is one thing to accept this doctrine in a vague and general way as something that may possibly be proved some time, an quite another thing to bring sure optical demonstration that such is the case.

Prof. Draper was found yesterday in his laboratory on the third floor of his residence in Madison-avenue. He laughed heartily when his attention was called to the double-leaded telegram from London that appeared in a morning journal, and called attention to a passage in Comptes Rendus (journal of the Academy of Sciences, France,) for 1878, page 674. The passage occupies the space of four lines, and runs as follows:

"En raisonnant d'apres les analogues fournies par la manière d'agir des composés connus, j'ai mis en evidence que, independamment du calcium, beaucoup de corps consideréés commes élémente, sont aussi des corps composés."

Such, word for word, is the note in Comptes Rendus, to which the Secretary of the Academy briefly adds that Mr. Lockyer will furnish the facts in a few days, and this note, when translated into English, will be found to convey all the real information upon which the great hydrogen craze was based. While Prof. Draper would not wish to be understood as disparaging the work of a spectroscopist with whom he has had some controversy, he believes that Mr. Lockyer ought to publish his verifying facts immediately, if he has amassed sufficient data to furnish unquestionable proof of his hypothesis, and will wait patiently for the official transcript of his paper in the "Transactions of the Royal Society" before expressing a decided opinion. From such meagre memoranda of that paper as he has been able to obtain he is, however, constrained to maintain that such proofs have not yet been adduced as would justify the scientific world in accepting Mr. Lockyer's claims to the discovery that hydrogen is the Proteau basis of many of the so-called elements; and he is particularly cautious about subscribing to the doctrine of dissociation in the photosphere and association of the 14 elements in the color-sphere of the sun as the true explanation of the different spectra presented by the two spheres, ingenious as that doctrine is.

From data supplied by Prof. Draper, and from the latest reports of foreign scientific journals, the following statement appears to cover the principal points of Mr. Lockyer's theory, and will give the general reader a pretty clear idea of its data so far as they have been announced:

Although the experimental data upon which Mr. Norman Lockyer bases his hypothesis that the so-called elements are really compound bodies have not yet been published, and were, if the best reports may be believed, not fully explained at the meeting of the Royal Society on Thursday, Dec. 12, his communication last November to the Academy of Sciences, France, and his more recent paper, have led to such general and sometimes ignorant discussion, that its scope and method of investigation should be clearly explained, before venturing to estimate the measure of success that has attended his efforts. To this end it will be necessary to recall briefly the basis upon which the certainty of the spectroscope as an instrument of precision and optical analysis is supposed to rest. In observing spectra, two modes of volatilizing the substance under examination have been used. The first and most common is that of the gas-flame; the second by means of sparks from an inductive coil of higher or lower intensity. In either case the light from the incandescent substance is permitted to fall upon the slit of the spectroscope, the spectrum being generally one in which the lines run across the whole optical field of the instrument. Mr. Lockyer is given the credit (which appears really to belong to Prof. Henry Draper) of having been the first to modify this method of examination by interposing a lens between the spark and the slit of the spectroscope. There is no dispute that this interposition has enabled the spectroscopist to study the various regions of heated vapors, as formed by the incandescent body, and to establish the fact that not all the lines in the spectrum of the substance under analysis have the same extension; that is to say, not all extend to equal distances from the poles. This fact is not new, but has been the common property of scientific men for some years, although it has not before been made to serve as the basis of any comprehensive theory. For instance, in an alloy that contains very different proportions of two metals, the spectrum of the constituent present in the smallest quantity is reduced to its simplest form, the lines largest in the spectrum of the pure substance and its compounds alone and shorter lines being suppressed altogether; while the spectrum of that present in the larger quantity shows all the lines of the simple metal, short as well as long. What is more curious still, if the amount of the small constituent is gradually increased, all the lines of the spectrum gradually reappear in the order of their length. The exact method of quantitative analysis has yet been deduced from these data, and the data are perhaps insufficient for the purpose, but they point to a use of the spectroscope in the detection of crime which may become important at no very distant day. It has been observed, further, that the lines due to the presence of a particular substance vary not only in length and number in ratio to the amount present in the pound, but also in their relative brightness and thickness in the same proportion. Armed with these general facts, Mr. Lockyer commenced, some four years ago, (see reports of his paper before the Royal Society) a series of researches on the special region of the metallic elements, with a view of determining with more precision than has been done heretofore what elements are present in that body. He has taken, according to the paper before the Royal Society, about 2,000 photographs of the spectra of the metallic elements, and more than 100,000 observations. What remains is necessary to take so many in the fact that absolutely pure substances are difficult to obtain, and that a process of elimination by comparison of photographs has to be gone through with before the lines due to impurities can be ascertained. Experimentally, the spectrum of a pure substance is something that has never been registered, but must be inferred from the absence of the longest and strongest lines furnished by familiar impurities. So far, the theory of spectroscopic analysis is simple enough. But Mr. Lockyer finds that the hypothesis that identical lines in different spectra are the result of impurities is not sustained by his facts, or, rather, fails to explain them. He has found, for illustration, that the short lines, supposed to be due to alloy, are often present after the long ones have disappeared, and the substance is, according to spectroscopic reasoning, presumably pure.

This leads him to propose a new hypothesis, from which his theory that the so-called elements are compound follows, as a matter of inference rather than a matter of demonstration, and which is that elements furnish different spectra according to the temperature at which they are examined. The hotter a star, the simpler its spectrum. The hottest stars furnishing only very thick hydrogen lines and very few metallic lines, and the coolest, the fluted band-spectra of compounds of metals with non-metals and of non-metals in a state of isolation. His hypothesis presupposes that the compounds are first decomposed into elements by heat, and that these elements may be decomposed into elements of lower atomic weight by higher degrees of heat. To use his own illustration, each of the salts of calcium has a fixed and identifiable spectrum at a given temperature, but if the temperature be gradually raised, this spectrum is gradually supplanted by the very minute lines of the metal in the blue and violet portions of the spectrum. At the temperature of the electric arc the line in the blue is intense, and the H and K lines in the violet are very thin; in the sun, on the contrary, the H and K lines are very thick, and the line in the blue is of very slight intensity as well as considerably thinner than in the arc. These and other facts of a similar description, discovered by Dr. Huggins and Prof. Young, are most simply explained, Mr. Lockyer thinks, by assuming that the lines result from the vibration of several distinct molecules. The question resolves itself, therefore, into a manner of explaining certain phenomena, and turns upon the point whether these phenomena shall be regarded as due to the vibration of several distinct molecules or as due to different vibrations of the same molecule at different temperatures, and the one explanation is just as sufficient as the other, for both are purely hypothetical, and have no direct optical support.

The data upon which the hydrogen hypothesis is based are very briefly treated in his Royal Society paper. In the first instance, A, the most refrangible hydrogen line in the solar spectrum, is only seen at a very high temperature in laboratory experiments on hydrogen. During the eclipse of 1875 it was not visible in the solar prominences, and is not shown in the photographs taken at that time. This A line of hydrogen may be photographed by volatilizing indium in the electric arc, but no hydrogen lines are visible when palladium is similarly treated. From these facts, and a few like them, Mr. Lockyer concludes that the non-reversed line in the atmosphere of the sun, supposed heretofore to be due to helium, and line 1,474 are really due—the first to a simpler form of hydrogen than that which furnishes the A line, and the second to a more complex form than that which yields the F line. In other words, like lithium and calcium, the hydrogen spectrum is optically very different at different degrees of temperature.

The application of this hypothesis of different spectra at different temperatures to solar studies is very simple, and easily comprehended. The photosphere of the sun is that blazing vestment of light which envelops its immediate body, and is seen as a disk through the color-sphere, supposed to be a thin envelope of incandescent vapors. The color-sphere visible in a total eclipse gives a spectrum crossed by bright lines, while that of the disk, in common with that of the solar corona, is crossed by black lines. With his theory of different spectra at hydrogen of different temperatures, Mr. Lockyer supposes that a decomposition of the so-called 14 elements into isolated bases is constantly taking place in the color-sphere of the sun, thus furnishing the different spectra which have been ascribed to the different elements.

Such, briefly set forth, is the theory of Mr. Lockyer, and such, without going into tedious detail, are his facts. Prof. Draper is not willing to express an opinion upon the value of the line of investigation they indicate, while at the same time dissenting from the sanguine view that they prove all that is ascribed to them. What now simply bears the complexion of an ingenious speculation may turn out to be an important discovery; but scientific men cannot accept a hypothesis simply because it bears the signature of a man who has made his name familiar in the literature of the spectroscope.

THE GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.

LECTURE BY MAJOR CONSTABLE—AFGHANISTAN, THE PRESENT SEAT OF WAR—HER RELATIONS TO ENGLAND AND RUSSIA.

Under the auspices of the American Geographical Society, Major A. G. Constable delivered yesterday evening, at their annual meeting, a lecture on "Afghanistan, the Present Seat of War, and the Relations of that Country to England and Russia." Chickering Hall was crowded with a most intelligent and appreciative audience. The lecturer's own personal acquaintance with Afghanistan and the careful study he has given for a long series of years to Asiatic matters, rendered the gentleman absolutely familiar with the subject, one by no means well understood by Americans in general. Major Constable opened his lecture by stating that a little over 40 years ago, he had formed one of a group of English officers, who, on the plains of Ferozepore, were drawn up in review to receive Runjeet Singh, the Maharajah of Lahore, the ally of England in the contemplated invasion of Afghanistan. Runjeet Singh was verging on to 70, and on his arm, fastened by a golden bracelet, blazed the Koh-i-noor, but even brighter flashed the eye of this Eastern despot. This interesting being at New-York 9, a native of Afghanistan, to dispossess Dost Mahomed Khan, and to restore to the throne his brother Shah Soojah. Dost was the youngest of 20 sons, and ruled by his Vizier, Fatteh Khan, who was at the head of the Barukzyes, one of the two great tribes of Afghanistan. In 1838, Dost Mahomed was ruler of the whole of Afghanistan, with the exception of Herat. Now, Herat is correctly styled the gateway of India. All invasions of India have taken place by armies passing to the southward of Herat through the Bolan Pass. A very interesting description was given of the various invasions made through Afghanistan, all tending toward the plundering of India. The first occurred B. C. 518, under Darius, and these inroads have been continuous. The last was that of 1838, in 1398, is well known. The last was that of Nadir Shah only 150 years since. The objective point was usually Delhi. The present differences between England and Afghanistan were clearly defined in the 1863 Dost Mahomed, at his death, left his throne to Shere Ali, setting aside the claims of his elder half-brothers, Afzul Khan and Azim Khan. These men rebelled; sven Shere Ali's younger brother, Ameen, tried his hand against the elder. In this fratricidal strife most of them were killed, save Azim. Abdul Rahman, Afzul's son, escaped to Bokhara, and then joined his uncle Azim in strife against Shere Ali. After many battles, Shere Ali was defeated in 1866, and sought refuge in Herat, where his son Yakoob commanded. In time, Afzul and Azim died, and then Shere Ali won his long-disputed position, but mainly through the warlike energy of Yakoob. Abdul fled to the Oxus, and has been ever since a Russian pensioner. Now, the trouble between Shere Ali and England is that, when his belligerent brothers, Afzul and Azim, were contesting his claim to the English Government had recognized them in turn as de facto rulers. When, in 1868, Shere Ali met Lord Mayo at Umballa, he tried to persuade his lordship to recognize Abdoola Jan as his heir to the throne of Kabul. Lord Mayo politely refused that the India Government had a difficult task to pursue, for Afghan brothers, being like Kilkenny cats, generally endeavor to eat one another. Yakoob turned on his father, intriguing with Persians and Turcomans. Russia quickly seized the opportunity and new complications arose. Yakoob was summoned to Kabul, a safe conduct being granted him. Shere Ali put Yakoob in prison confinement, and though the Indian Government interceded for his life, it is said that Yakoob's imprisonment had been so rigorous as to have disturbed his intellect. Russia was all this time approximating the frontier. Shere Ali laid before the English what he entertained to be the ultimate ends of Russia. Lord Northbrook thought the Ameer's alarms were premature. "Masterly inactivity" was then the policy of England. Between Afghanistan and Russia, and being absorbed into the Indian Empire, or holding his own through Russian interference, was all the Ameer saw. He chose the latter course. Hence the present trouble. To-day the Bolan, Peiwar, and Khybar Passes are held, and English soldiers are at Jalalabad, Chunzee, and Kandahar. Major Constable closed a most interesting and instructive lecture by expressing the belief that "in spite of Czars and conferences the English have this time entered Afghanistan to remain there." Capt. Wyndham, of the English service, then gave a description of stereopticon illustrations of the various passes in Afghanistan, and the military episodes.

The following gentlemen were elected as officers of the society for the present year: President, Chief-Justice Charles P. Daly; Vice-President, Gen. George W. Cullum, United States Army; Foreign Corresponding Secretary, Rev. Roswell D. Hitchcock; Treasurer, Hon. Levi P. Morton; Councilors, William E. Curtis, George Cabot Ward, Paul B. DuChaillu, Egbert L. Viele, William. H. H. Moore, Isaac Bernheimer.

BROMIDE OF POTASSIUM FOR PINCKNEY.

The office of the Corporation Counsel was crowded yesterday afternoon by persons who gathered there in anticipation of hearing James R. Davies testify in defense of Justice Walter S. Pinckney. Davies was not present, however, and an attachment will issue against him to-day. Among the witnesses examined yesterday was Otto Doepfner, a druggist, of No. 935 Third-avenue, at whose place a barber named Wanner, according to the testimony of that individual, got some bromide of potassium for Justice Pinckney as a cure for nervous headache. About two-thirds of the package retained by the barber was shown to Doepfner, who said he could not swear whether it was bromide of potassium or sodium unless he were permitted to subject it to the test of a certain reagent. Mr. Richard H. Huntley, a lawyer, testified that he had tried several cases in Justice Pinckney's court, and that he was very much pleased with his conduct; he found that the Justice possessed a clear, discriminating mind, and that, considering the character of some of the counsel he had before him, he treated them with remarkable courtesy. Henry Hupfeld, a German druggist, at No. 963 Third-avenue, testified that during the years 1877 and 1878 James McKenna, an officer of the Seventh District Court, and Samuel J. Lewis frequently purchased solutions of bromide of potassium for Justice Pinckney. Jacob H. Smith, formerly clerk of the Washington Mansion House, at Hackensack, N. J., testified that while Justice Pinckney was a guest at that establishment, in June, 1878, he suffered a great deal from chills and fever. The trial will be continued at 2:30 P. M. to-day.

THE COMING BILLIARD TOURNAMENT.

The list of players entered for the Brunswick & Balke tournament will probably be changed during the present week. Joseph Dion was taken ill from a cold during his practice with Slosson for the late Sexton-Slosson match, and the illness has so increased as to deprive him of an opportunity of practicing for himself. As a consequence, his enforced withdrawal from the contest is regarded as a certainty. His place will be probably filled by Randolph Heiser, the young Boston expert. Schaefer and Garnier played a practice game last evening at the latter's establishment, when the Frenchman developed the strongest play he has exhibited. He made 600 in 23 innings, his best runs being 258, 162, and 61. Schaefer's score was 316, and he made one run of 153. Garnier is the favorite in some quarters for the first place in the tournament.

A CLAIM AGAINST AN INSOLVENT BANK.

When the National State Bank at New-Brunswick, N. J., failed the North River Bank of New-York held a claim against the insolvent bank for $8,138. The North River sued out an attachment upon which it received $1,329. Subsequently it neglected to file its claim, and yesterday application was made to Vice-Chancellor Van Fleet for permission to reopen the matter and permit the filing of the claim. The Vice-Chancellor said he would grant the application provided the North River would allow the $1,329 already received to be accounted as part of the first dividend declared. The bank holds the matter under advisement.

THE DRY GOODS ASSOCIATION.

The Dry Goods Mutual Benefit Association held its annual meeting for 1879 last evening in the St. Nicholas Hotel. The Treasurer's report showed a balance on hand of $1,221 53. Two important changes in the constitution were unanimously adopted. The mortuary assessment of $1 was raised to $2. The article limiting the membership of the association to 1,000 was changed so as to reduce the total membership to 500. The members now number 451. The annual election of officers resulted in retaining these of last year, as follows: President, A. Judson Stone; Vice-Presidents, William B. Fuller, A. L. Guerber; Treasurer, Robert M. Elting; Secretary, Jacob Oberholser. The association is wholly benevolent in character, and was organized Jan. 15, 1876. It was incorporated in January of last year.

Superintendent Lamb has information from many savings banks in New-York and elsewhere, in reply to direct inquiries respecting their transactions since Jan. 1, 1879, which is of the most encouraging character. All reports agree that the business this month is the most favorable in several years. Old depositors who withdrew money months ago are now returning it to the same savings banks, and in a few cases the identical money withdrawn is now redeposited. Without exception, the savings banks report improved conditions, and that the adverse tide seems to have changed, and that "there is an evident tendency now toward confidence, steadiness, and security among depositors."

THE BAR ASSOCIATION.

The Bar Association held its annual meeting and election of officers at the club-house last evening. Vice-President Charles Tracy in the chair. There were about 100 members present. The Executive Committee reported that there were $6,666 on hand, and that the association numbers 705 members. The Treasurer's report showed that there is now to the credit of the sinking fund $13,000; to the general fund, $3,257 53, and to the library fund, $223 67; total, $16,581 20. James Armstrong, Benjamin F. Romaine, Jr., Sutherland Tenney, J. Bryant Lindley, Benjamin H. Bristow, and George P. Andrews were unanimously elected to membership in the association. The following gentlemen were elected officers for the ensuing year:

President—William M. Evarts.
Vice-Presidents—Samuel J. Tilden, James Emott, William Mitchell, Charles Tracy, Josiah Sutherland.
Recording Secretary—Silas B. Brownell.
Corresponding Secretary—William Allen Butler.
Treasurer—Edward Mitchell.
Executive Committee.—Albon P. Man, William M. Prichard, Henry B. Anderson, Francis Forbes, James H. Fay.
Committee on Admissions.—Charles Sonders, Jr., Frederick L. Cadwalader, Douglas Campbell, Edward Solomon, Peter B. Olney, Robert W. De Forest, John M. Scribner, Jr., Charles H. Tweed.

Eighty-eight votes were cast. Mr. Evarts received 83 votes; S. J. Tilden 71; Messrs. Emott, Mitchell, and Sutherland 88 votes each, and Mr. Tracy 87. Ex-Judge Sutherland was elected to fill the vacancy created by the death of Gen. Sanford.

THE EXPRESSMEN'S ASSOCIATION.

The tenth annual convention of the Expressmen's Mutual Benefit Association opens at 10 o'clock this morning in the Metropolitan Hotel. The association has a membership of about 2,500 expressmen, representing every division of the express business and every important express company in the country. It is purely a benevolent organization. The members are divided into two classes—first and second. Whenever a member of the first class dies, each of the remaining members taxed $1, and $2,000 is paid to the deceased man's widow, children, or proper heirs, as the case may be. In the second class, the assessment in case of a death is 50 cents, and $1,000 is paid to the widow. The pecuniary benefit of this plan to the members of the association is shown in the Treasurer's report for the past year, in which it is stated that $98,693 have been paid for death claims. The death rate among the members was unusually large, however, last year, which is partially accounted for by last Summer's yellow fever epidemic in the South, which numbered among its victims several members of the Expressmen's Association. The number of deaths during the year was 57. At the present convention it is expected that some important changes in the constitution will be discussed, among them a plan for making the conventions biennial hereafter. An election of officers for the ensuing year will also take place. The present President is Mr. Shoemaker, of the Adams Express Company, of Baltimore, and the Secretary and Treasurer is Mr. S. Demitt, of the United States Express Company at Elmira, N.Y. The sessions are expected to occupy two days, and perhaps three.

A DEFENSE OF MR. STEARNS.

Mr. William E. Dodge, President of the National Temperance Society, has written a card to the newspapers, to the effect that Mr. J. N. Stearns is on his way home from the South, to deny, under oath, the charges against him. Mr. Dodge says that Mr. Stearns left in accordance with the advice of the Directors and Dr. Willard Parker, and he requests a suspension of judgment until his return. Rev. Albert G. Lawson also defends Mr. Stearns, and says he has in his possession Mr. Stearns' "written denial, made under oath, of any and every asserted criminal act or word." He says the Board of Managers of the National Temperance Society will probe and sift the whole matter thoroughly, and Mr. Stearns will, he says, undoubtedly, on his return, compel his accusers to support their statements by evidence in the courts.

THE XXIst DISTRICT REPUBLICANS.

There was a very large meeting last evening of the Republican Association of the Twenty-first Assembly District. The members were called to order by Judge Rufus B. Cowing, the late President of the association, who, in a few words thanking the members for their confidence and support, introduced his successor, Mr. Henry Welsh. On the proposed repeal of Article 14 of the Constitution there was a long and spirited discussion, which ended in nothing, for the subject was laid upon the table without a vote upon its merits. Mr. Robert Brown then introduced a series of resolutions highly eulogistic of Hon. R. B. Cowing for his service as President of the association during the past three years, saying that the members believe Judge Cowing will display on the bench the wisdom and ability which marked his previous life. The resolutions were unanimously adopted, and on motion were ordered to be suitably engrossed and presented to Judge Cowing. The meeting then adjourned.

SUPERVISING STEAM VESSELS.

THE INSPECTOR'S YEARLY REPORT—COLLISIONS AND OTHER CASUALTIES—AN INCREASE OF TONNAGE REPORTED.

The annual report of the Supervising Inspector of Steam Vessels for the Second Inspection District, which embraces the ports of New-York, Philadelphia, Albany, Boston, New-London, and Portland, was transmitted to Washington yesterday by E. Platt Stratton, the Supervising Inspector. From this it appears that certificates of inspection were granted as follows: New-York, 636; Philadelphia, 261; Albany, 147; Boston, 159; New-London, 148, and Portland, 93. The tonnage of the vessels so inspected was as follows: New-York, 256,241 tons; Philadelphia, 72,093 tons; Boston, 46,255 tons; New-London, 46,048 tons; Albany, 24,664 tons, and Portland, 15,291 tons. In New-York 700 boilers were inspected, as Philadelphia, 312; Boston, 183; New-London, 206; Albany, 159, and Portland, 96. Of these there were found to be defective, 133 at New-York, 4 at Philadelphia, 16 at Boston, 24 at New-London, 7 at Portland, and none at Albany. At New-York 17 boilers gave way under hydrostatic pressure, and 12 were condemned as unfit for use; at Philadelphia 3 gave way and 11 were condemned; at Albany 3 gave way and 1 was condemned; at Boston 2 gave way and 4 were condemned; as New-London 7 gave way, and at Portland 2, but none were condemned at either port. In New-York 56 reports for violation of law were reported by the local Board of Inspectors, and 1 at Philadelphia, and none of these were appealed from. At New-London, however, 3 appeals were taken. At New-York 6 masters were refused licenses, and at New-London 1.

The revocations or suspensions of licenses at New-York were as follows: Masters, 15; pilots, 2; engineers and assistants, 2. At Boston—Masters, 3; engineers, 1; pilots none. At New-York 1 mate and 1 pilot were also refused license. The number of explosions or accidental escape of steam, resulting in loss of life, are as follows: At New-York, 9; Boston, 1; New-London 1. The number of lives lost by these occurrences was: At New-York, 12, of whom 20 were passengers; at Boston, 3, and at New-London, 1. There were 27 accidents by collision at New-York, 2 at Philadelphia, 1 at Albany, 4 at Boston, 4 at New-London, and 2 at Portland, the total loss of life from collision being at New-York 9, and at Albany 1. The number of steamers wrecked, foundered, or grounded was: At New-York 3, at Philadelphia 2, (one being the ill-fated Metropolis;) at Boston 1, at New-London 3, and at Portland 1. The number of passengers carried by steamers was: At New-York 130,000,000, at Philadelphia 12,000,000, at New-London 2,000,000. no reports being made from other ports. During the year the tonnage added to the service was as follows: at New-York, 21,770 tons; at Philadelphia, 7,802 tons, and at Boston, 1,500 tons. The amount of property lost in bank: At New-York, $96,150; at Philadelphia, $2,000; at New-London, $15,700; at Portland, $13,750. Lost by collision: At New-York, $11,225; at Philadelphia, $1,130; at New-London, $1,695. Lost by casualty about the fleet: at Augusta, 3 feet at Cincinnati and Cairo, and 5 feet at Chattanooga, where the river is 4 feet 8 inches above the danger line.

SUPERINTENDENT WALLING ANGRY.

Henry Houder, alias Hoey, a notorious "banco-steerer," whose portrait is numbered 1,426 in the Rogues' Gallery, was seen by Roundsman Hubbard, of the Detective Squad, lounging about the corner of Sixth-avenue and Twenty-third-street, apparently waiting for a countryman. Hubbard ordered him off the corner, but Houder refused to go, and threatened, if molested, to cut Hubbard's nose off. Houder is a little fellow, weighing, probably, 125 pounds, while Hubbard is over 6 feet in height and built in proportion. Hubbard laughed at the threat, and this so enraged Houder that he abused the roundsman in the most outrageous manner. The officer took him before Superintendent Walling at Central Office. He was very impudent to Mr. Walling, and the latter expressed his surprise that Hubbard had been so patient with him. "If you had said that to me," said the Superintendent, "I think I would have given you a sound thrashing." "Oh!" replied the impudent banco-steerer, "I'd just as lief cut your nose off, if I got a chance." Mr. Walling sprang to his feet and advanced toward the prisoner, but cheeked himself and said: "I never say that to me in the street, you little toad, I'll break you in two." Hubbard took the prisoner to the Jefferson Market Police Court, where he was discharged, there being no evidence against him.

THE RAVAGES OF SCARLET FEVER.

There were 28 new cases of scarlet fever reported at the Sanitary Bureau yesterday, and the disease may be said to be gradually assuming an epidemic form. Eleven deaths occurred yesterday. On this subject Dr. John T. Nagle, the Register of Vital Statistics, made the following report to the Board of Health yesterday:

"Scarlatina was the most fatal of the contagious diseases reported during the past week; the mortality from this disease was 54, which is the highest weekly number of deaths attained from this disease in over eight years; 36 of these deaths were in tenement-houses, 10 in houses containing less than four families, and 2 in institutions. There was 1 death each in the First, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Twelfth, and Twenty-first Wards; 2 each in the Eleventh and Twentieth, 3 each in the Tenth and Thirteenth, 5 in the Twenty-second, 7 in the Nineteenth, 8 in the Sixteenth, 9 each in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth, the Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, Ninth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth, Twenty-third, and Twenty-fourth Wards being exempt from any fatal cases. Diphtheria caused 22 deaths, 13 of which were in tenement-houses, 8 in houses containing less than four families, and 1 in an institution. The highest number of deaths from this disease (4 each) was in the Eleventh and Nineteenth Wards."

A WAYWARD YOUTH.

James Stanley, the youth who, on being arraigned in General Sessions a few days ago for breaking a pane of glass and stealing two bottles of brandy from the show-window of Peter M. Corcoran, No. 71 Canal-street, giggled incessantly, and said he did not consider the offense a burglary, inasmuch as he had only done it in order to "get square" with his father, who had turned him out of doors, was again brought before Judge Gildersleeve yesterday. His Honor said that he had made a careful investigation into the circumstances of the case, and, although the prisoner was undoubtedly technically guilty, yet he could scarcely be held legally guilty. He had been put out of the house by his father because he could not obtain employment, and had acted as any youth of his age might. The difficulty was now settled, however, and his father had expressed his willingness to take the young man home and look after him. His Honor then discharged young Stanley on his own recognizance, and the prisoner left the court-room with his sister, a young girl of attractive appearance. Stanley displayed none of that uncontrollable desire to laugh which had characterized his first appearance before Judge Gildersleeve, a week's confinement in the Tombs having thoroughly sobered him down.

WINTER IN ITS STRENGTH.

THE ICE-GORGED RIVERS.

GREAT MASSES OF ICE AT NEW-ALBANY, IND.—THE GORGE IN THE CUMBERLAND RIVER THE GREATEST EVER KNOWN—A LARGE AMOUNT OF PROPERTY SWEPT AWAY.

LOUISVILLE, Jan. 14.—A dispatch from New-Albany, Ind., gives the following account of the ice movement there: The ice-gorge in front of this city commenced giving way early this morning, and the news attracted a large number of people to the river front. The noise of the popping and cracking of the ice was very loud. At first the ice moved slowly down, but soon afterward great fields of heavy ice came sweeping down in front of the city and lodged. It was piled up six feet above the surface of the water and grounded on the bottom along shore for two miles, extending 200 yards into the river at some points. The river fell four feet inside of an hour, but rose again three feet in consequence of the ice stopping two miles below. No damage was done to the craft along this side of the river, as everything except one or two empty barges had been taken to Portland. The prospects are not flattering for so lucky an escape when the Madison gorge arrives.

Louisville, Jan. 15.—The gorge has to-night report great destruction of property all along the Kentucky River. At Beattyville, a large number of boats that were in the harbor were torn from their moorings by the floating ice and sunk, entailing a loss of $50,000.

A dispatch from Elizabeth says the steamer Stahlman is a complete wreck, and is floating down the river on her side. During Monday night she landed on shore; there the ice carried off her cabin, which was swept against the pier of the railroad bridge and totally destroyed. The main part of the steamer was afterward struck by several thousand logs, which the ice had torn from the shore. The crew of the Stahlman mutinied, broke open the closets, seized all the whisky on board, made a desperate assault on the mate, and were driven off with pistols. The ice gorge in the Cumberland River, where this occurred, was the greatest ever known. It extended from shore to shore, and in breaking up it carried away large trees.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., Jan. 14.—The ice is leaving the Horse-shoe at Sandy Hook, and if the present weather continues, the New-Jersey Southern Railroad Company expect to resume connection by the steamer Jesse Hoyt between New-York and Sandy Hook to-morrow, for freight and passengers.

BEGINNING THE WORK OF THE SESSION.

GEN. SEWELL ELECTED PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE AND MR. JACKSON SPEAKER—BILLS ALREADY POURING IN — GOV. M'CLELLAN'S MESSAGE.

TRENTON, Jan. 14.—At about midnight last night, Senator Hobart, of Passaic, withdrew from the contest for the Presidency of the Senate, and Gen. Sewell's nomination in the caucus this morning was accomplished without opposition. The Senate officers of 1876 as easily won their struggle for the offices this year, with the exception of Sergeant-at-Arms Champion, who, having had the three years of service to which party usage entitles him, was replaced by Capt. L. N. Mulford.

The canvass in the House was a more spirited and exciting one. The Democrats have been laughed at all day for harboring the hope that they would be permitted to assist in its organization. When they heard last night than 10 of the Republican members had declined to attend a caucus until this morning, they jumped to the conclusion that there was a serious defection in the Republican ranks. The 10 who absented themselves from the caucus Monday night were friends of Deacon. The wily politicians of the Democratic side thought they saw a chance to combine with the 10 and elect Deacon, notwithstanding the selection of Jackson by the Republican caucus. The successful working of such a combination would not, of course, be a Democratic victory, for Deacon is a Republican, but the Democrats found a crumb of comfort in the anticipation that the Republican organization would thus be paralyzed. But Mr. Deacon wisely made his battle within the party lines. His friends went readily into caucus, and abided by its result. He tied Mr. Jackson on the first ballot, each receiving 13 votes. Styles receiving 5, and Voorhies 2. On the next ballot, the 5 Styles votes, and the 2 Voorhies votes went over to Jackson, and the nomination was won. Hon. C. O. Cooper was accorded the nomination for Clerk of the House by a rising vote. J. Herbert Potts was given the nomination for Reading Clerk without opposition; George C. Wynkoop was selected for Engrossing Clerk, and John B. Felle was made Sergeant-at-Arms. The agony over, large deputations of office-seekers and wire-pullers started for their homes at once, and Trenton looks comparatively deserted to-night.

Toward 3 o'clock, the members of the two houses strolled leisurely into their respective chambers. Both the Senate and House had refitted in anticipation of their coming. The fresco-work had been renovated. The chandeliers were resplendent with new gilding. Fresh coats of varnish transformed the old desks into new. The Assembly Assistants had taken the place of the faded Brussels of last year. Many of the faces that appeared in the chambers were also new to the place.

In the Senate, Ludlow, of Middlesex, who was President last year, presided until the organization had been effected, and the clerks of the Democratic Senate sat at the desk in front of him. They read the credentials of the new Senators, and President Ludlow held the book while the oath of office was read, slowly and sometimes inaudibly, the oath of office from a parchment lying on the desk. Then, the preliminaries having been arranged, Senator Hobart arose, and in a few words offered the resolution which gave the lates Democratic officials to their Republican successors. When the vote for President was being taken, Senator Sewell bolted the Republican caucus to pay Senator Ludlow, his Democratic opponent, the courtesy of announcing his vote for him. When Ludlow's name was called, he bolted the Democratic caucus to cast his vote for Sewell, and so return his successful rival's compliment. The organization was effected by the choice of Senator Sewell as President, N. W. Voorhies, Secretary; William J. Cloke, Reading Clerk; L. N. Mulford, Sergeant-at-Arms. Senator Sewell at once appointed W. J. Bruce his private secretary. Senator Beekman, of Monmouth, voted with the Democrats for Ludlow, but abstained from voting on the nominations for subordinate officers.

Clerk Patterson, of the last House, presided in the Assembly Chamber while the organization was being effected. Mr. Duryea, who was named for the Speakership by the Democrats, administered the oath to Hon. Schuyler B. Jackson, when that gentleman ascended to the Speaker's chair. Speaker Jackson appointed Hon. W. Budd Deacon, his successful competitor in caucus, to administer the oath to the subordinate officers as they were elected.

When the houses had been organized, the Governor's Message was read, and in both houses the bills began to pour in. In the Senate, 20 bills found their way to the Secretary's desk. In the House, 18 were presented. Among them were bills to reduce the number of lay Judges of the Courts of Common Pleas; to repeal the act establishing District Courts and to increase the jurisdiction of the Justices of the Peace; to punish Executors and Administrators who misuse trust-moneys; to prohibit the sale of certain hours of the morning and evening to 2 cents; to build the bridge across the Morris Canal Basin at Jersey City; and to provide for the holding of a convention to remodel the State Constitution. Then the houses adjourned until to-morrow morning.

GOV. McCLELLAN'S MESSAGE.

Gentlemen of the Senate and General Assembly:

I first invite your attention to the state of the finances as set forth in the clear and able reports of the Controller and Treasurer. The financial condition is most satisfactory. You will observe that the indebtedness of the State has been decreased within the year by $600,000, and that, as all temporary loans and the unpaid balances of former appropriations have been discharged, the existing debt consists solely of the outstanding bonds of the war loan, and now amounts to $2,196,300. As the sinking fund now reaches the sum of $1,458,852 34, and as $100,000 of the principal is paid within the year, this debt may be regarded as a small and temporary burden. Under the law of the last session frequiring the sinking fund to provide hereafter for the accruing interest on the bonds and of the annually-maturing principal, the State fund, in other words the State taxation, is materially relieved, and will henceforth furnish only $90,000 each year, with the exception of the year 1880, when nothing occur to interrupt the natural working of the system, the State fund can be still further relieved, and no long time will elapse before the sinking fund shall be sufficient to meet the required to meet the principal and interest of the debt.

While the receipts from taxes have fallen off some $41,000, and those peculiar to the year nearly $20,000, the receipts from income—i. e., from taxes on securities, licenses, fees of office, Prison receipts, fines, licenses, &c.—have increased some $31,000, so that the total receipts exceed those of the last year by about $20,000. On the other hand, in consequence of the care exercised by the last Legislature in regard to appropriations, and from other causes, the expenditures proper to the year were nearly $400,000 less than those of the preceding year, so that it has been possible to pay off all the floating debt, and enter the new year with a credit balance of nearly $120,000. I invite your especial attention to the facts and reasoning by which the Controller demonstrates this subject that I must repeat what I said one year ago, and that is, to restore order to the financial affairs of municipalities and townships, to reduce expenditures, increase receipts, prevent waste and maladministration, and preserve the financial good name of localities suffering under a burden too heavy to be borne, it is absolutely necessary that every citizen should take an active and intelligent interest in the concerns of local government.

PUBLIC EDUCATION.

As our institutions are based upon the supposition that all males of mature age participate in the affairs of government, as electors at least, all will agree that the Government should in some way assure itself that all citizens possess sufficient intelligence to enable them to perform properly at least their lowest duties as citizens. It will probably be conceded that it is the duty of the State to insist that all children shall be thoroughly instructed in reading, writing, composition, and arithmetic, with a pretty accurate knowledge of the geography, Constitution, and history of our own country, together with a general acquaintance with the history and geography of other countries. Thus much, at least, in the way of preparation for their political duties. But if the duty of the State terminates here, its interests do not, and the question at once arises as to how far it can safely go, or, perhaps, what is the least it can properly do, in the direction of preparing its youth to become useful and industrious citizens, skilled workmen, producers of wealth. It would appear to be a sound proposition that, having reached the limit of the subjects as to the necessity of which all agree, further progress in education should, in a great measure, be regulated by the probable future pursuits of the majority of the pupils in the different localities. For example, in an agricultural region, where most of the boys will probably become farmers, it would seem natural to turn their studies in the direction of farming pursuits. They might be taught some of the fundamental principles of the science of agriculture to enable them afterward to pursue the study of agricultural chemistry and economy, enough of the principles of mechanics to enable them to learn how to detect the difference between a good and bad machine, enough of the principles of engineering to enable them afterward to learn the best method of draining, and the use of materials in rural construction, &c. &c. In the cities, and places where manufactures and the mechanic arts flourish, their instruction might well be turned in those directions without any one's attempting to convert the public into technical schools. I can see no harm, but much good, as probably resulting from devoting a little time in the public schools to the practical instruction of the girls in some of those branches of domestic industry which can easily be taught and are most certain to prove useful to them in the households over which they will eventually be called to preside. The purpose of public school education ought to be to furnish the boys and girls with the tools of education, and teach them how to use them in educating themselves for their various pursuits in life. It is clearly good political economy in the State which educates the children, to see to that education tend, in some measure at least, to the benefit of the commercial and other industries of the State.

The home for Disabled Soldiers is well managed, and probably serves a useful purpose. I see no reason why a total appropriation of more than $14,000 is needed for this institution this year.

STATE PRISON.

From frequent inspection of the State Prison, I am satisfied that the administration is excellent. The only difficulties which arise from the want of room must necessarily be the case, it is neither harsh nor cruel, but just and unvarying, and as kind as the circumstances permit. The food of the prisoners is as good as it ought to be, and thorough cleanliness is enforced. I do not think that any well-founded complaint can be made against the officers of the prison, who are, so far as I am able to judge, of a high class and eminently fitted for their difficult work. The new wing is a useful addition to the prison, but it would be difficult to imagine any improvement upon it, as regards security, ventilation, health, and convenience. Some of the old wings are far from what they ought to be, and the new wing does not supply all the accommodation required. As the present is a favorable time for such work, I invite the consideration of the Legislature to the propriety of altering another of the old wings, on precisely the same plan as that followed for the new wing in point of construction. The expense would be less than that of the last, as more of the old walls would be available, and the cost of labor and material is diminished. The arrangements for cooking and serving the food in the prison are too limited a scale for the present needs of the institution, and it would be advisable to authorize the expenditure of a sufficient sum to enlarge the kitchen, laundry, and gas-works. Unfortunately, we must anticipate the necessity of a future increase in the number of convicts, and it is very clear that the present crowded area should be enlarged. I therefore recommend that the present State Arsenal lands, adjoining the prison, and that the prison wall be continued so as to inclose the whole of the area thus gained. One of the arsenal buildings can be readily converted as a trifling expense into a prison chapel, which is very much needed.

COMMISSIONERS OF FISHERIES.

The efforts of this board in enforcing the fishery laws, and in fish-culture, have been eminently successful. The general interests of the community are best served by preventing the indiscriminate taking of fish at improper seasons, and the replenishing of the lakes and rivers with food fish is a wise and profitable measure. I trust that the labors of the Commissioners will be approved, and that ample provision will be made for the continuance of the work. I invite attention to the report of the Commissioners for a full explanation of the object of the commission, and a detailed statement of their operations.

NATIONAL GUARD.

The National Guard of the State has rendered good service in the past, and will do so whenever called upon in the future. It is an honorable and necessary institution, which merits the confidence and kind feeling of all worthy citizens, and should be maintained in such force and in such efficiency as to enable it to preserve the peace within the borders of the State without the necessity of invoking the assistance of the United Government or of any of the other States. Its condition has my especial care. During the last Spring many persons apprehended a recurrence of the troubles of the preceding year, so that I found it my duty to place the National Guard in thorough condition for service. This has been done, and we have on hand, ready for immediate use, the camp equipage, equipments, and ammunition required to supply a division. Under the law of the last session, two companies have been mustered in for service with Gatling guns. The regiments of the National Guard are in good condition, except with regard to the use of their weapons. The brief opportunities they enjoyed for target practice at the Brinton Range have been of marked service, but much yet remains to be done, and, no doubt, the practice of the coming Summer will effect a very great improvement. Nothing can be much more helpless and useless than a soldier armed with a breech-loading rifle which he has not been taught to use. Target practice is quite as important as battalion drill in practice. It is absolutely necessary to require it of the National Guard if they are to be of the slightest use in real service, and it must be regarded as a permanent and indispensable part of their instruction, which must be repeated with each recurring year. I think that it is necessary to establish the position of Inspector-General of Rifle Practice, and there should also be an Assistant Inspector for each brigade. It would be advisable to encourage emulation among the National Guard by authorizing the issue of prizes for marksmanship.

THE TRENTON POTTERY.

Among the unpaid Commissioners appointed to represent the State at the Paris Exhibition, two only have made reports—the State Geologist and the Superintendent of Public Instruction. Both of these contain much interesting and useful information, and are worthy of careful study. At its last session the Legislature authorized me to appoint a Commissioner to visit Paris, for the purpose of procuring information for the benefit of the potteries of the State, and appropriated $1,500 toward this expense.

After consulting with some of the leading representative of the pottery interests, I selected Mr. Isaac Broome as possessing the requisite preliminary knowledge and qualifications. Illness has prevented him from completing his report in time to accompany this Message, but I trust it will be ready before your adjournment. From certain special advantages of location, and other causes, Trenton is now the largest centre of potteries in this country, and there is no reason why, if properly encouraged and aided, it should not, before many years, become one of the largest potteries in the world, and export its wares to other countries. So far as the plain and useful wares are concerned, our people now equal, at least any in the world, and in some respects decidedly lead the European manufacturers.

What is mainly needed now is that they should also be able to supply the great demand for finer and more artistic wares. It has been clearly proved within a few months that our clays make porcelain of the best quality. The lack is in educated and skilled modelers, designers, and decorators. In another part of this Message I have stated the necessity of aiding the pottery by encouraging technical schools, and desire to impress upon you that the schools are not required to create, but to meet an existing demand, and that a true regard for the interests of the State make the step recommended imperative. But something more than this is needed, and that is specimens of designs and work to serve as models and to suggest ideas to the workers. I have endeavored to supply this demand in part by procuring for the State Library such illustrated works bearing on pottery and glass-making as were to be had in this country, and also authorized Mr. Broome to add to the collection in Europe. He has done this most intelligently, and the vessels in the State Library now possesses a small but very excellent collection of illustrated works, referring mainly to the ceramic art, but also to the glass-making, furniture, &c. Additional agreements will be made in the library to enable artists and designers to make such studies and copies as they wish. But beyond this it is very desirable that there should be established a museum or collection of characteristic and good specimens of pottery, porcelain, and glass to serve as models and studies. I would advise a small appropriation to lay the foundation of such a collection, which will prove of infinite value to our future interests. What has been done, and what I now recommend, for the pottery and glass interests should also be done for other industries, including the agricultural, for there is no sounder policy for a Government than to do all in its power to encourage industry, and thus give employment both to capital and labor. And there is no State more favorably situated than our own for the rapid and favorable development of industry. Let me say, also, that it has been found necessary by Governments in other parts of the world to do precisely what I have recommended in order to create and develop similar industries.

In conclusion let me return to the subject which occupied an early part of this Message, and urge a careful study of the causes which have brought distress upon some of our cities, and oppressive burdens upon not a few townships. It is comparatively easy now to ascertain what causes of outlay or collection of taxes have been unnecessary, and what action of bad laws have brought about a state of things which all good men regret. There will probably be no more favorable opportunity in the future to collect and arrange for use the data on which to base wise and well-weighed general laws for the government of cities, which, if they cannot repair the injuries of the past, will, at least, arrest the evil where it is, and prevent the recurrence of similar action when our people shall be once more carried away by too prosperous winds. The condition of many of the counties, townships, and cities is doubtless very favorable, in others less so, and in a few, very bad. The remedy in these last cases is that the people should look the matter fairly in the face, acquaint themselves with the worst, and set themselves honestly and vigorously at work to apply the best practicable remedies. GEORGE B. McCLELLAN.

FORTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

SUMMARY.

In the Senate, after the expiration of the morning hour, Mr. Davis, of West Virginia, called up the resolution instructing the Agricultural Committees of the Senate and House to consider and report what can or ought to be done to advance and encourage agricultural development. Mr. Davis spoke at length in support of the resolution, and then it was laid over in order to give Mr. Paddock, of Nebraska, an opportunity to speak in regard to it. The consideration of the Patent bill was then resumed, but, without taking final action, the Senate went into executive session, and subsequently adjourned.

The House of Representatives agreed to the conference report on the Military Academy bill. The Mexican Pension bill was then taken up, and, after various amendments had been adopted in Committee of the Whole, it was laid aside, and the Speaker announced various appointments to fill vacancies on committees. The House adjourned at 4:15 P. M.

SENATE.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS.

The following bills were introduced and referred:

By Mr. SANDERS, of Nebraska—To provide for punishing persons who steal horses, mules, cattle, or other property from Indians. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SARGENT, of California—Relating to the tax upon deposits in savings banks. Referred to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. WALLACE, of Pennsylvania—For the recomputation of the accounts between the United States and the several States, and between the United States and the City of Baltimore, growing out of moneys expended by the several States and the said City of Baltimore in the war of 1812 with Great Britain. Referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

THE ANTI-POLYGAMY LAW.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY, of Michigan, presented a petition from 2,000 Gentile women of Utah, favoring such legislation as will make effective the Anti-polygamy law of 1862. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WORK FOR FRIDAY.

Mr. ANTHONY, of Rhode Island, submitted a resolution that on Friday next, at 1 o'clock, the Senate proceed to consider bills on the calendar not objected to, to be discussed under the five minutes' rule. Agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS.

The morning business having been disposed of, Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, called up the resolution submitted by him on the 8th of December last, instructing the Committees on Agriculture of the Senate and House, to consider generally the subject of agriculture, and report by bill or otherwise, what can or ought to be done by the General Government to advance, encourage, and protect agricultural interests. He spoke at length on the subject. At the conclusion of his remarks, he asked the passage of the resolution.

Mr. PADDOCK, of Nebraska, said he did not wish to retard its passage, but he desired to speak briefly in regard to it, and therefore asked that it lie over for the present. So ordered.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President in answer to the resolution of the 3d of June last, transmitting a report from the Secretary of State, and copies of correspondence between the United States and Great Britain, in regard to inviting other maritime powers to accede to the three rules prescribing the duties of neutral governments, as set forth in the treaty of Washington. It was ordered that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, a communication from the Secretary of the Navy in response to the Senate resolution of Feb. 6, 1877, transmitting a narrative of the expedition of Capt. C. F. Hall to the Arctic regions, prepared from the notes of Capt. Hall, by Mrs. Hall, his widow. Ordered that it lie on the table and be printed.

THE PATENT BILL.

The Senate then resumed consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill to amend the Patent laws, and Mr. MATTHEWS, of Ohio, stated at length his objections to the bill, one of the principal ones being that it proposed a fixed statutory scale for the measurement of damages, contrary to a series of judicial decisions which have been built up from year to year.

The amendment submitted by Mr. Morgan, of Albama, several days ago, providing that "whenever the court shall be of the opinion that the suit of the plaintiff or the defense of the defendant was vexatious, or malicious, the infringement was willful, the court may award against the party guilty of such vexations or malicious conduct, or of said infringement, such sum by way of counsel fees and expenses of suit as it shall deem just and reasonable," it was agreed to.

After some discussion the bill was laid aside, with the understanding that it should be the unfinished business to-morrow.

The Senate then, at 3 P. M., on motion of Mr. SARGENT, went into executive session, and when the doors were reopened, at 3:15 P. M., adjourned until to-morrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THE LATE MR. WILLIAMS' SALARY.

On motion of Mr. HUBBELL, of Michigan, a resolution was adopted directing the Committee on Appropriations to make an appropriation for the payment to the widow of the late A. S. Williams of the amount of his salary for the remainder of this session.

THE MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. DURHAM, of Kentucky, submitted the report of the Conference Committee on the Military Academy bill, and it was agreed to.

THE MEXICAN PENSION BILL.

Mr. MCMAHON, of Ohio, desired to call up the Mexican pension bill, but was antagonized by Mr. ROBERTSON, of Louisiana, with the bill for the improvement of the Mississippi levees, and by Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, with the Mexican Pension bill.

Finally, the Levee bill was postponed until Thursday next, and the House, by a vote of yeas 112, nays 105, determined to take up the Mexican Pension bill, and immediately went into Committee of the Whole [Mr. Eden, of Illinois, in the chair] on that bill, which was then read by sections for amendments.

Mr. HARRISON, of Illinois, offered an amendment, providing that no pension shall be paid to any survivor of the Mexican or Creek, or other Indian war until he shall have arrived at the age of 60 years, unless from disease or other infirmity he is unable to earn his living by manual labor.

Pending action on the amendment, the committee, under a misapprehension as to the limitation of debate, arose.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, moved that all debate on the first section of the bill should close in 20 minutes. This was agreed to—yeas 124, nays 106.

The yeas and nays were then demanded by Mr. TOWNSEND, of New-York, on a motion to go into Committee of the Whole, and the result was—yeas 121, nays 95—the negative vote being cast principally by Republicans—so the House again went into committee.

Mr. MYERS, of Pennsylvania, offered an amendment to Mr. Harrison's amendment, fixing the age at which survivors shall be entitled to pensions at 75 years. Rejected.

Mr. MYERS moved to amend the amendment by fixing the age at which survivors would be entitled to pensions at 70 years. It would be unfair to soldiers of the late war to pass a bill which would give pensions to able-bodied survivors of the Mexican war, while the bill to pay arrearages of pensions to soldiers of the war of the rebellion was undisposed of.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected, and the amendment was then defeated—yeas 72, nays 77.

Mr. GOODE, of Virginia, moved to embrace in the benefits of the bill the officers and privates of the Marine service. Adopted.

Mr. SINNICKSON, of New-Jersey, offered an amendment granting pensions to soldiers who served 60 days in the military or naval service of the United States in the year of 1861, for the suppression of the rebellion. The amendment was received with laughter on the Republican side.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon, moved to amend the amendment, so as to include the survivors of the Oregon and Washington Indian wars in 1865-6. Adopted.

On a standing vote on Mr. Sinnickson's amendment, the yeas were 87 and the nays 79, and on a vote by the tellers the amendment was agreed to, 96 to 85. The announcement was received with applause on the Republican side.

Mr. BRAGG, of Wisconsin, offered an amendment granting pensions to the survivors of the next war and their widows and children. Ruled out of order.

No quorum voting, the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, moved to strike out of the bill the portion granting pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars, and also the amendment just adopted on motion of Mr. Sinnickson.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois, offered as a substitute an amendment striking out of the first section everything but that directing to the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension rolls the names of the surviving soldiers, including Militia and volunteers of the military and naval forces of the United States in the war of 1812, who were honorably discharged therefrom, and who have not been placed on the pension rolls, and granting to each of said persons the pension now allowed by law to persons in like condition who served in the regular army during said war.

Mr. BURCHARD accepted the amendment.

The vote was then taken on the substitute, by tellers, and resulted—yeas, 97; nays, 97. The Chairman [Mr. Eden, of Illinois] cast his vote in the negative and the substitute was defeated.

The committee, without further action, rose.

THE BOARD OF ALDERMEN.

APPOINTMENT OF STANDING COMMITTEES—BUSINESS OF A MISCELLANEOUS NATURE.

There was a large gathering of politicians in the chamber of the Board of Aldermen yesterday before the hour had arrived for its regular meeting. They expected that Mayor Cooper would send in names for the vacant Police Commissionerships, but they were doomed to disappointment. At 2 o'clock President Mott occupied the chair, after which Alderman Jacobus introduced a resolution providing that the Corporation Attorney shall give 10 days' notice before bringing a suit for a violation of the corporation ordinances against any person, and that in case the violation shall cease to exist in the meantime, that no proceedings shall be taken in the case. The matter was referred to the Committee on Law.

A resolution revoking the privilege granted to the Surrogate to occupy the new wing of the Court-house was then presented, and referred to a committee.

Alderman Sheils called attention to a resolution which was passed by a previous board in February, 1875, directing the Dock Department to have the work of cutting and dressing stone for the piers done by workmen who reside in this City, and he moved that the Mayor be requested to notify the Dock Board to conform to the resolution. The matter was referred, on motion of Alderman Morris, to the Committee on Public Works by a vote of 10 to 9.

President Mott then appointed the following standing committees:

Finance—Messrs. Houghton, Morris, Burns, Kenney, R. Hall.

Ferries and Docks—Messrs. Jacobus, Hyatt, Slevin.

Markets—Messrs. Morris, Hall, Cavanagh.

Salaries and Offices—Messrs. Burns, Morris, Foster.

Law Department—Messrs. Hyatt, Stewart, Keenan.

Railroads—Messrs. R. Hall, Jacobus, Roberts.

Streets and Street Pavements—Messrs. Stewart, Kenney, Sauer.

Police, Health, and Fire Departments—Messrs. Kiernan, Jacobus, Sheils.

Bridges and Tunnels—Messrs. Fink, Strack, George Hall.

Lands, Places, and Park Departments—Messrs. Kenney, Perley, Roberts.

County Affairs—Messrs. Burns, Haughton, Morris, Kiernan, Keenan.

Public Works—Messrs. Perley, Kiernan, Stewart, Fink, Carroll.

Mr. Haughton, as Chairman of the Finance Committee, is a member of the Sinking Fund Commission.

Alderman J. G. Hyatt offered a resolution which, after reciting that this City pays nearly one-half of the State taxes, "earnestly urges upon the attention of Gov. Robinson the importance of giving this City a representation in the State Board of Assessors, and recommends the members of the Legislature from this City to give their support to the measure. The resolution also requests the Tax Commissioners of this City "to take action looking to a reduction of the taxable values in accordance with the fall in prices of real estate, so that it may be brought down to actual cash specie payment basis—which in many cases is 50 per cent. below the present appraisement." The paper was laid over.

Alderman Fink moved that the Committee on Law be directed to prepare amendments to the ordinances, so as to secure the payment of laborers employed by contractors on public improvements. The motion was adopted.

A communication was received from Gen. Newton in answer to a resolution of the previous Common Council, which was adopted in October, 1878, in relation to the Harlem Bridge over the Harlem River. The General, in reply, says that in view of the improvements in the navigation of the river, the draw of such bridges should have a clear height of 24 feet at high water. The communication was ordered to be printed.

Alderman Morris submitted a resolution, which was adopted, requesting the President to appoint a committee of three to investigate the charges that had appeared in a morning newspaper against Albert Osborn, who had been appointed on the recommendation as Sergeant-at-Arms of the board, and the following were appointed as the committee: Aldermen Haughton, Burns, and Keenan.

A petition was received asking the board to authorize Mr. Abraham Brown to run stages from Cortlandt-street through West-street to Chambers-street, and from Chambers-street to the East River and Union Ferry-boat. Referred to the Ferries Committee.

Alderman Morris offered a resolution, which was adopted, requesting the Police Board to erect a station-house in the Sixth Precinct, provision having been made for the same by the Board of Apportionment.

A HEAVY FAILURE IN BROOKLYN.

James H. Prentice, a well-known hat manufacturer, made an assignment yesterday to his brother, John H. Prentice, for the benefit of his creditors. The liabilities amount to $200,000, and the assets cannot be ascertained until stock is taken in both of Mr. Prentice's factories. By the failure 700 persons are thrown out of employment. Of these, 300 were employed at the factory corner of Raymond and Willoughby streets, and 400 at the factory on Nostrand-avenue, near Myrtle-avenue. Mr. Prentice attributes his failure to the hard times. In 1871 his factory in Raymond-street was burned down, causing him severe loss, from which he never fully recovered. The assignment filed in the County Clerk's office yesterday gives the following list of debtors: John H. Prentice, $56,619; Martin Bates, of New-York, $7,000; Clark Brothers, No. 539 Broadway, New-York, $15,845; Archibald F. Finn, No. 592 Broadway, New-York, $13,258; J. H. Leed, New-York, $2,000; Arthur Church, New-York, $1,500; G. H. Krause, New-York, $1,700; T. O. Lothian, New-York, $400 Frost, Duxbury & Co., No. 116 Franklin-street, New-York, $1,000; C. M. Vom Baur, New-York, $4,000; Lewis Widdiger & Co., New-York, $3,157 83; Richard Cook, New-York, $1,855; Taylor, Meyler, of Brooklyn, $14,365; the New-York Dyeing-Wood, Extract, and Chemical Works, $1,000; Moses P. Whitcomb, of Springfield, Vt., $5,000; D. R. Brown, of Springfield, Vt., $1,000; Hope, New-York, $1,200, and numerous family debts, amounting to a large sum, in all making the total near $200,000. Much dissatisfaction was expressed by the hands who had their first intimation of the failure when, on going to work yesterday morning, they found the doors of the factories locked.

THE BELDEN CASE SETTLED.

The proceedings were discontinued yesterday in the suit brought in the Court of Common Pleas by Washington E. Conner against William Belden, Henry Belden, Jr., Charles D. Belden, and Jay Gould, partners of the plaintiff in the sock-broking firm of William Belden & Co., for the appointment of a Receiver of the assets of the firm. A judgment, based upon a stipulation signed by all the parties to the suit, was filed by Judge Joseph F. Daly, decreeing the dissolution of the partnership, and the appointment of Mr. Conner and Henry Belden, Jr., as joint Receivers, without fees, of the assets, books, notes, securities, and choses in action of the late firm, and the stocks, bonds, and other securities with the Mercantile Trust Company until converted into money. A Referee will be appointed to take and state the accounts between the partners, and, on the confirmation of the report by the court, the amount found due to or from the partners, respectively, is to be paid to or by them. The Referee is to be chosen by the attorneys of the partners, or, in case they disagree, by the court.

DECISIONS IN THE COURTS.

INTERESTING TO BOOK PUBLISHERS.

The General Term of the Court of Common Pleas has just decided a case of considerable importance to publishers of subscription books. In 1872, the firm of D. Appleton & Co. entered into a written contract with Samuel L. Hall, the present publisher of the English subscription edition of the "Encyclopedia Britannica," by which Hall was for five years to have charge of selling their books published in numbers or parts, at a yearly salary of $4,000 and a commission "equal to 1 per cent. of the actual net amount of sales of all books sold in numbers or parts by Appleton & Co." The Appletons then guaranteed that these commissions should amount to at least the sum of $1,000 per annum, and the contract closed with a provision by which the Appletons were at liberty to terminate it at any time upon payments of salary and commissions to date, if in their opinion Hall should violate any of its provisions or become incapacitated for the fulfillment of his duties. Under this contract Hall remained in the employment of the Appletons the full term of five years, during which time they issued "Picturesque America." "Picturesque Europe," and other works published in parts. These books were all disposed of by subscription, the subscribers signing an agreement to take only a whole number of parts as issued, but paying for each part as number on delivery. During the five years Hall received his salary and a commission of 1 per cent. on the net receipts from these subscriptions as he left, without the money received, but demanding the repayment of this sum, Hall produced a list of a number of payments which he claimed to have made during the preceding five years to canvassers who were under his direction. As these claims appeared, on examination, to be without foundation, D. Appleton & Co., through their attorney, Douglas Campbell, began an action in the Court of Common Pleas, to recover from Hall the amount of his overdrafts, and this action was referred to Rufus F. Andrews as sole Referee. Upon the hearing before the Referee, Hall, in addition to demanding the allowance of his alleged advances, now for the first time set up a large claim for additional commissions. At the time of the termination of his contract there were still outstanding several thousand unfilled subscriptions to "Picturesque Europe," "Picturesque America," and some other number books. These subscriptions had been obtained during Hall's employment, and he claimed that each subscription constituted a sale of the entire book, and that he was therefore entitled to the commission of 1 per cent. on all receipts until the delivery was completed. The Referee decided that the word "sales," as used in the contract, did not mean subscriptions, but that the commissions ended with the net receipts from the parts as they were delivered; that such commissions ended with his employment, and that Hall had received all to which he was entitled. As to his alleged advances, he held that some of them had been already paid, and that as to the remainder they were simply personal loans from Hall to the firm, and that therefore the firm had nothing to do. He accordingly gave judgment for the plaintiffs for the amount of Hall's overdrafts. The defendants have appealed to the General Term from this decision of the Referee, the case came on for argument before Chief Judge Daly and Judges Van Brunt and Larremore, and on the conclusion of the argument Judge Daly delivered the opinion of the court. He said that it was customary with the court to take the papers for decision in cases of importance, that no injustice should be done to the appellant by a hasty decision, but that this case was so free from doubt that the court had not hesitated to decide upon the spot. As for the contract, he said the construction placed upon it by the Referee was the proper one. A subscription taken for a book to be issued in a number of parts could in no sense be regarded as a sale for the purpose of paying commissions. It was the evident intention of both parties that Hall should for five year receive 1 per cent. on the net receipts of such book was delivered, and nothing more. Regarding the alleged advances made by Hall the case was equally clear. It was conclusively proved by his own books of receipts that some of the money which he claimed had been already paid him. As to others, it was shown by memoranda in his own handwriting that alleged advances for the firm were personal loans of his own, having no connection with the business. The witness being then shown Hall's books, declined to refer to them, the Referee was justified in disbelieving all in the testimony. In conclusion he said that the court had never affirmed a judgment with more confidence and satisfaction.

The Signal Service Bureau report indicates for to-day, in this region, rising barometer, cooler north-west winds, clear or partly cloudy weather.

The ridiculous series of amendments to the Mexican Pension bill, and the successive votes on them in the House yesterday, afford a very good illustration of the method of wasting a day in Congress. At a time when every hour must be utilized, if the necessary work of the session is to be done with any approach to thoroughness, a bill which closely affects the honor of the country is made to give way to a piece of palpable legislative jobbery. Its opponents are compelled to resort to dilatory motions to impede its progress, and the afternoon's work counts for as nearly nothing as possible. The Democratic majority in the present House have but little character to lose, but there are still some men among them who have a political future. On grounds of mere partisan expediency, it would seem to be worth their while to make an effort to keep the majority up to their duty in disposing of public business, a duty for whose neglect the party will certainly be held responsible.

Mr. Potter has announced his intention of presenting in the House next Monday a resolution asking for the necessary authority and appropriation to enable his committee to investigate the cipher dispatches. Gen. Butler has also announced his intention of debating the proposition, having, it appears, conscientious objections to "spending the people's money for any such purpose." Why Gen. Butler should think it entirely proper to spend public money in the attempt to discover corrupt Republican practices in Southern Returning Boards, and yet find wicked waste in the slight expenditure needed to unearth the details of the Tilden conspiracy to steal the Presidency, is one of those mysteries which it would be a waste of time to attempt to solve. It is extremely probable that when Gen. Butler proceeds to debate the resolution, he will leave his true purpose in this characteristic move as inscrutable as before.

The bill authorizing the issue of certificates of deposit in aid of the refunding of the public debt will be reported from the Committee on Ways and Means to-day. To fulfill its purpose of encouraging small investors to become holders of 4 per cent. bonds, it is obvious that the committee's bill must be modified in the manner proposed by Judge Kelley. The inducement to invest $10 in a certificate of deposit bearing 3 per cent. interest will draw out a very inconsiderable portion of small savings, if the certificate cannot be converted short of the addition of another four to it, and their application to the purchaes of a $50 4 per cent. bond. The class likely to be attracted by this form of investment need the option of taking their money back when required, and though such a modification of the scheme might be somewhat unprofitable as well as troublesome to the Treasury, it would render possible a very interesting experiment in the direction of a National Savings Bank system. The interest accruing on the proposed certificates, even assuming that they are to be made exchangeable from hand to hand would be sufficient to prevent their entrance as an element of inflation into the currency.

Mr. Wendell Phillips announces himself as the prophet of the Greenback movement, and predicts that if the movement plants itself on the one point of "No State or national banks of issue," its leaders "shall not wait long for victory," and when it is won, "the Republican Party and John Sherman will claim it as 'their thunder'!" We are not so confident of our prophetic powers as Mr. Phillips is of his, but we venture to say that whatever public man or political party shall aid in establishing a purely greenback currency in this country will have no reason to be proud of the "thunder." And we have no doubt that it is in this direction that the energies of the Greenback movement will be turned. The national bank currency is objectionable to the Greenbackers because it cannot be expanded by a vote of Congress, and cannot be made irredeemable. It is a "value currency," and not a "fiat currency," and as such it will be exposed to the bitterest attacks of the men of Mr. Phillips' stripe.

A rose-colored report was presented to the stockholders of the New-York Elevated Railroad Company at their annual meeting yesterday. Among other things, it was claimed that the average distance run by the company's trains each day is greater than the circuit of the globe. Just how inspiring this statement was to the stockholders we cannot say, but it ought to allay the impatience of passengers who daily shiver on the brink of the platform waiting for a train to take them. The report also says that the public is warned that the company cannot possibly heed all the complaints and suggestions sent in, and that when one portion of the community want the cars superheated, and another write against heating them, the company will please itself in the matter. The company, as it happens, has already explained that it bought a cheap apparatus for heating the cars, and that the contractor failed to fulfill his contract. The apparatus used by the Metropolitan Railroad Company was rejected as being "too expensive." The New-York Elevated Railroad trains would run more regularly, we are also told, if the naughty people along the line of the road did not waste the Croton water to such an extent that the engines are kept in a state of drought.

A STARTLING EXHIBIT.

Gov. McClellan, in his first Message, gives prominence to the subject of county and municipal indebtedness, the burdens it imposes, and the cause by which alone relief can be honestly obtained. More or less attention is accorded to the same subject by half a dozen other Governors in their communications to the Legislatures of their respective States; but though they say enough to indicate the importance of the problem, they contribute little or nothing toward its solution. Illinois is one of the few States whose Auditor has been enabled to tabulate the municipal debt. His statement shows that the total of this form of indebtedness in Illinois is little less than $52,000,000, of which, according to Gov. Cullom, nearly 30 per cent. represents obligations incurred in aid of railroads. Michigan only knows that the indebtedness is large, and Gov. Croswell urges the Legislature to make provision for acquiring the requisite data. Gov. Williams tells the legislators of Indiana that "it is not the State taxes but the county and township taxes and fees of officers that oppress the people;" but his Message does not embody particulars. Gov. Hartranft discusses at some length the need of a reform of the municipal system of the State, which at present fosters extravagance, debt, and taxation. "It is apparent to all," he says, "that, under the present system the bankruptcy of our [Pennsylvania] larger cities is only a question of time." But we have no figures to determine the literal significance of the remark. In Ohio, again, as Gov. Bishop shows, while the State debt does not exceed $6,000,000, the county and municipal debts, in the aggregate, exceed $41,000,000.

It is creditable to Gov. McClellan that he has endeavored by his own efforts to gather a portion of the information which the New-Jersey Legislature has failed to furnish. The contrast between State and local indebtedness is more striking in New-Jersey than in Ohio. Within the year, New-Jersey has reduced its indebtedness as a State by $600,000; the total existing debt amounts to $2,196,300, of which all but about $700,000 is already provided for by a sinking fund. The time is not distant, then, when this fund will furnish all the means required to meet the principle and interest of the debt. On the other hand, we lately published an approximate estimate of the municipal indebtedness of the State, amounting to $50,000,000, or about 10 per cent. on its assessed valuation. The Governor's inquiries appear to have been confined to nine cities, and the exhibit he makes more than justifies the apprehensions that have been entertained with regard to the financial future of some of them. The nine comprise Jersey City, Hoboken, Newark, Paterson, Elizabeth, Rahway, New-Brunswick, Trenton, Camden; and their aggregate indebtedness is $36,502,722, or nearly one-sixth of their entire taxable property, which is set down at $228,145,707. Of the $5,044,734 taxation levied, only $223,998 is on account of the State. The city taxes are $3,440,034.

Looking at these New-Jersey burdens in heir relation to population, the three most oppressed cities are Rahway, Elizabeth, and Jersey City. The debt of the first, per head, is $243 and the expenses, also per head, $23; of the second, $224 and $14, respectively; of the third, $130 and $16, respectively. New-Brunswick comes next, with a debt of $88 per head, and expenses $10; then Newark, $71 and $8, respectively; then Hoboken, Paterson, Trenton, and Camden, with burdens diminishing in the order named. Evidently, the New-Yorker, anxious to escape taxation, will not transfer his abode to any of the five cities, whose inhabitants, according to Gov. McClellan, are groaning under debts recklessly incurred, and expenses which they are ill-fitted to provide. And yet it may be fairly inferred that the ruinous indebtedness of Rahway and Elizabeth, and the too heavy load of New-Brunswick, were incurred with the view of attracting population during the era of real estate inflation. Elizabeth, which has absolutely nothing to recommend it beyond its railroad facilities, put on the airs of a thriving city; spent borrowed money to suit the purposes of speculators in houses and lots; and incurred obligations which make its bankruptcy merely a question of time. Rahway has been ruined by the same folly. New-Brunswick, with more advantages of situation, moved more moderately, but still unwisely. And Jersey City, in its eagerness to outstrip Brooklyn as an absorbent of New-York's surplus, rushed into debt at a rate that must bring many of the mouths of the Brooklyn Aldermen. There is danger that New-Jersey will suffer in the estimation of many who are on the lookout for new homes. The State will be prejudiced by the bad financial condition of its spendthrift municipalities. Outside of these cities, however, its position is a strong one. Gov. McClellan expresses the opinion that "as a general rule, the financial condition of the rural counties is good." The farmers are cautious and safe. Speculators and jobbers are the root of the evil.

Gov. Hartranft sees no likelihood of maintaining the solvency of overburdened Pennsylvania cities except through the adoption of a plan for their government substantially resembling the plan devised by the New-York Commission. Gov. McClellan bases his hopes upon the greater willingness of the individual citizen hereafter to take a more active part in municipal affairs. Only thus, the Governor argues, can existing embarrassments be overcome and their recurrence prevented. Those who have a direct interest in honest and economical local government must exert themselves "to restore order to the financial affairs of the municipalities and townships" "and preserve the financial good name of localities suffering under a burden too heavy to be borne," or the system of municipal government will suffer a shock not easily to be overcome. We fear that the Governor talks to ears that will not listen. His argument is unanswerable, but it has been pressed on tax-payers' attention many times before, and rarely with any tangible result. The cities and townships which rushed recklessly into debt, must endure the consequences. For the rest, nothing less than stringent constitutional provisions, keeping within narrow limits the proportion of debt to values, and prescribing with equal strictness the possible purposes of loans, will arrest the tendency to spend borrowed money lavishly.

THE SOUTH AND CENTRALIZATION.

It was formerly supposed that there was no doctrine so entirely repugnant to all the established tendencies of public sentiment in the South as that of centralized power in the Government of the Union. But the experiences of many years have shown very conclusively that however strongly the South may have been opposed to the exercise of centralized power to defeat its cherished aims, it was prepared to use such power to the utmost when it advanced those aims. The discovery, to be sure, is not a novel one, and the people of the Southern States are by no means the first who have invented a principle to suit their case, instead of judging their own case from a pre-established principle. But the history of the development of practices quite inconsistent with the idea formally professed by the majority of an important section throws some valuable light upon the probable future of the Republic.

For some time before the rebellion it was to be noticed that, while protesting most vehemently in favor of the rights of States, the leaders of public opinion in the South never hesitated to treat those rights in a most cavalier fashion when it became necessary to further the interests of the peculiar institution. It was in the interest of slavery that the Postmaster-General of President Jackson's day thought himself justified, by a mere departmental order, to determine what should or should not be admitted to transmission in the Federal mails. It was in the interest of slavery that the Federal Fugitive-slave law was passed which, quite uselessly, as experience proved, deprived certain alleged offenders, namely, fugitive slaves, of the right to a trial by jury. It was a pro-slavery Judge who announced from the bench of the Supreme Court the astounding doctrine that the rights of personal liberty, expressly guaranteed by the Constitutions of many of the Northern States, were not entitled to respect when they were claimed for black men.

But it was notably after the war of the rebellion was over, and the South, by an accident, had gained a friend and advocate in the Executive chair, that the most grotesque notions of the powers of the different branches of the Federal Government were proclaimed and acted upon. It was freely declared, and in the name of State rights, that the powers of the President to determine the authority of organizations claiming to be State Governments in the lately insurrectionary States was absolute, and that the claim of Congress to interfere in the matter was of no force. It was further held that the "pardon" of the Executive, even where there had been no legal condemnation, was ample to protect an offending citizen against any action which Congress might presume to take. And the remarkable spectacle was presented for a considerable period of a series of organizations claiming to be State Governments contesting the validity of the laws of Congress, on the ground that the "recognition" of the President was something which could not be overthrown or even questioned.

We are well aware that these are not recent facts. They have passed from the attention, if not from the memory, of most of our readers. But as they are in the direct line of much of that has recently been noticeable in Southern politics, it is not entirely useless to recall them. Take, for instance, the practically unanimous support given by the South to the theory that Congress has the right at all times to direct the issue of legal-tender United States notes. Nothing could be more radically in the direction of centralization than this. The power to change the value of the currency, to add to or diminish the burden of debt, to compel citizens to pay more or receive less in discharge of obligations, is the most sweeping, the most arbitrary, and the most intolerable that has ever been exercised even by despotic Governments. It is infinitely more expensive and more dangerous than the power of taxation. It is less subject to restraint, more subtle and less likely to be made the object of popular opposition. It is, indeed, in one sense, a form of the power of taxation, with this noteworthy difference, that while it robs the tax-payer and oppresses the public, while it drains the resources of the country and reduces its capacity for prosperous activity, it does not benefit the Government, but rather increases the direct demands for its support.

Again, the South, which was stirred profoundly by the early tariff laws because they were regarded as an unwarranted exercise of Federal power to promote the interests of one section at the expense of the remainder, now is clamorous for the expenditure of unlimited sums by the National Government for enterprises which are avowedly sectional in their nature, as, for instance, in the erection of levees on the Mississippi River and in the building of a Southern transcontinental railway line, to say nothing of the schemes for carrying a canal over the Cumberland mountains, or along the inland waters on the Atlantic coast.

Still again, we have the claim put forward by the Democratic Party, and sustained with great zeal and without a single opposing voice by the South, that Congress has the right to review the proceedings of the Presidential Electors of the various States; to determine, even without examination, disputes arising within the several States as to the eligibility or title of the electors, and to accept or reject at will the votes that each State may have declared—a doctrine not only unauthorized by the Federal Constitution, but opposed by the spirit of its every provision relating to the subject. This idea, so revolutionary, and so completely centralizing in its character, has recently been embodied in a bill in the House of Representatives, which, though it comes from a Northern Democrat, reflects the views, and will doubtless receive the support, of the great majority of Southern Representatives. To make the case more striking, the bill actually provides that the decison of the highest judicial tribunal of a State, specially authorized to take jurisdiction of these disputes, may be "reversed" by the action of Congress. We venture to call attention to these facts, because not a few well-meaning observers and critics of our recent politics have imagined that the arrival of the Democratic Party to power, supported by the "solid South," would help to correct the tendency to centralization which has been generally attributed to the influence of the war.

COMMERCE OF THE RIVAL PORTS.

The still belligerent attitude of the trunk lines in fact, however it may be masked, and the recently published statements about new arrangements of the Central for ocean freighting, give new interest to the subject of seaport competition. We discussed this somewhat last Summer, but are now able to bring the figures down to a later date. From the reports of the Bureau of Statistics we compile the following table of imports and exports by quarters during two and a half years ending June 30 last, the amounts being stated in thousands:

During 1878, Philadelphia and New-York show a gain on imports; Boston and Baltimore, a loss, as compared with the last quarter of 1877; on exports, the same comparison shows a gain for all four, but much the heaviest for New-York. Of the three former, Boston leads on imports and Philadelphia on exports, by the totals for the ten quarters; but when exports are compared with imports, the forcing of the former is clearly visible, for the imports of New-York and Boston nearly offset the exports, but those of Baltimore and Philadelphia are less than one-half the exports. The following are the comparative imports and exports for the nine years beginning with the year ending June 30, 1870, and closing with that ending June 30, 1878.

Boston's imports, at the maximum in 1872, show since a declining movement, but her exports, which in 1870 were less than one-third her imports, have maintained since an unbroken increase. Philadelphia's imports, at the maximum in 1874, have declined in every year since, while her exports have risen out of all proportion since 1875, and are now 2 1-3 times her imports. Baltimore's imports have taken the same movement as Philadelphia's, and her exports show the same artificial forcing during the last three years; New-York shows, of course, a decline in imports from the maximum year, although an increase from 1870, and her exports show a rational increase. The disproportion between imports and exports, comparing 1870 with 1878, has thus diminished very largely in the case of Boston, but has enormously increased in the case of Philadelphia and Baltimore. Comparing the last four years with the previous four, Boston gains $61,555,000 exports, and loses $72,324,000 imports; Philadelphia gains $64,095,000, and loses $9,223,000; Baltimore gains $61,229,000, and loses $22,502,000; New-York gains $45,039,000, and loses $274,358,000. At first sight, this loss of imports seems to be heaviest in case of New-York; but New-York bore the largest share in the decline of $450,000,000 imports which, by the same comparison, belongs to the entire country, and her interests in all the items covered above, except the last one, exceeded her exports. A more conclusive evidence of the relative position of the competing ports is found in the percentages of their trade respectively to the aggregate trade of the country, and we subjoin those percentages, domestic exports only being given, the first column being the percentage of the entire Atlantic coast (north of Florida) to the total:

In imports, New-York seems to be slightly improving its relative position, while the others fail to quite maintain theirs; on exports the others gain, and New-York loses. New-York's proportion of the import trade of the Atlantic coast is now 79.43, which is larger than in any previous year of the nine; on exports it is 62.66, which has fallen from 69.36 in 1870, but has risen from 1877, when it was 60.73. Outside the Atlantic coast, San Francisco is the principal point of imports, and it has made a notable gain since 1873; as to exports, New-Orleans is the principal point, and it has experienced a notable decline. The commercial growth of Philadelphia and Baltimore is evidently one-sided—the fruit of a forcing which is able to affect materially the outward grain trade, but does not succeed in reaching return trade. Each city has a railroad with which its fortunes are commercially entwined, and each road has sought to make good the lack of natural by means of artificial facilities, in a way which, whether financially successful or not, is admirably sagacious, aside from the feasibility of the object intended. The direct result of these efforts to make terminal facilities and unremunerative vessels turn trade currents is shown by the figures above. Comparing 1878 with 1875, New-York has lost 5.63 per cent. of the export trade of the country, and of this, the other three have gained 4.29; but in looking over the whole term, New-York's loss seems to be neither fixed nor material. Nevertheless, her trade has been maintained by her natural advantages and the favor of habit, in spite of the drawbacks of bad wharves and the costly necessity of breaking bulk in freight. Handling freights, particularly bulky ones, costs proportionally more than carrying them, if the mass has to be disturbed, and the elevator is the solution of the problem of cheap carrying.

A BELATED REPRIEVE.

A half-minute is not much in a man's lifetime, but it is a great deal when he is on the scaffold, ready to be hanged. In Mauch Chunk, yesterday, two men were hanged thirty seconds before a reprieve arrived from the Governor of Pennsylvania. Usually, all hopes of a reprieve are dead long before the hour for the execution arrives. In old times it was not unfrequently the case that, just as the rope was being adjusted around the neck of the condemned man, a stir was heard on the outer edge of the throng, and a horseman urged his foam-flecked steed, waved a white handkerchief over his head as he sped toward the scaffold, and shouted, "A reprieve!" a cry which was taken up by the sympathetic crowd, as strong men wept like children and women fainted. The lawyers and the telegraph have changed all that. The official intrusted with pardon and reprieve is besieged as soon as a man is condemned, and the electric wires have brought the Executive, the courts, and the hangman into instantaneous communication with each other. Nevertheless, two men who committed a murder in 1863, and were tried and condemned last April, would be alive to-day if their reprieve had not been thirty seconds late in Mauch Chunk.

It is not certain who is to be blamed for this unhappy miscarriage of justice. If the men were entitled to a day's delay in their execution, they were entitled to receive it immediately. It is a failure of mercy to bring a reprieve too late. And in this case, it appears there was ample time to take all the steps needed to postpone the execution. George Smith was murdered in Audenreid, Penn., Nov. 5, 1863. The gang who slew him were "Mollie Maguires." One or two of the murderers had already met their just desert; several died lawless and violent deaths, and the gang was so far broken up that, when its members began to make haste to inform upon each other, two or three years ago, it was not difficult to secure from them evidence enough to convict Sharpe and McDonnell of the murder of Smith. These two men, after so many years, were tried and convicted in April, 1878. They were sentenced to be hanged yesterday. From this sentence there was one appeal—to the State Supreme Court. But the law provides that such an appeal must be taken within twenty days after sentence has been passed. In this case the legal limit of time was allowed to expire, and then the counsel for the condemned men began to urge that the law fixing the limit of time of appeal was unconstitutional. They went to Harrisburg on Monday, the day before the execution day, to ask the Governor to reprieve the men until the Supreme Court should examine the law and decide whether it was constitutional. The Governor was in Washington, and the men were to be hanged on Tuesday, at 10:30 A. M., or thereabouts. Finally, the counsel saw the Governor on his return at 1 o'clock Tuesday morning, and they had audience with him a few hours later. The Governor consented to grant the reprieve, and a dispatch to the Sheriff was sent from Philadelphia at 10:35 A. M., Philadelphia time. The operators of the telegraph line did their best, but the order for the Sheriff to stay his proceedings reached Mauch Chunk a half minute after the men had been hanged.

Sharpe and McDonnell undoubtedly deserved hanging, if any men ever did. The crime which they committed was a cold-blooded and brutal assassination. Smith was murdered in his own house, in the presence of his wife, and in the most deliberate manner. The men who were hanged yesterday were fairly tried and justly convicted. Nobody need waste sympathy on these ruffians. Nevertheless, they were entitled to humane treatment. It was as cruel to deprive them of the few days in which they might have lived as it would have been to put them to death by a Sheriff's invention which would have substituted slow torture for speedy death. It is not creditable to the administration of justice in Pennsylvania that the disposition of the plea of two men, tried and sentenced nearly a year ago, should have been put off until the wretched convicts were on the scaffold. Those who are responsible for this delay are the counsel for the condemned. It seems incredible that a last resort should have been put off until next to the last day, or even to the last week, of a condemned man's life.

Gov. Hartranft has, by this tardy granting of a reprieve, impaired his reputation for firmness and decision. It is said that the law whose constitutionality was to be tested before the Supreme Court, was enacted at the request of the Judges of that court, who sought to be relieved in this way of applications on writs of error in just such cases as this. The Governor must have known this, and he knew the futility of the proposed appeal. But it does not help the case that the ineffectual reprieve would have only given the condemned men a few more days of life. "Only a few days more" sounds like a mockery to living men who would, if they could, give "millions of money for an inch of time." The evil of this whole case is that the gallows in Pennsylvania is invested with great uncertainty. "While there's life there's hope," is an old and cheery saying. But from this time out the condemned man at the foot of the gallows may not only hope that a reprieve may arrive for him at any moment, but he may take off his thoughts from the certain doom before him and be agonized with the reflection that the boon which he waits for may come when his life has gone past recall. If a stay of proceedings is to be granted at all, it should be granted while the condemned man's life may be said to keep the case open. It is a refinement of cruelty to keep hope alive and quivering at the foot of the gallows. If a criminal condemned to die has any rights at all, he has a right to know when he must prepare to quit this life. The counsel of Sharpe and McDonnell should not have postponed their wiredrawn objections until the eleventh hour. Gov. Hartranft should not have considered a reprieve at a point of time when, under all precedents, the case should have been considered closed.

The law provides that every life insurance company organized under the laws of this State shall deposit with the Superintendent $100,000, in bonds of the United States or of the State, to be held as security for the policy-holders. In the event of the insolvency of the company, these securities are to be converted into cash and their proceeds turned over to the Receiver of the company, to be divided pro rata among the holders of policies and annuities in said company. How very illusory is the slender security thus provided may be gathered from the report in another column of the legal squabble over the division of the deposit made on behalf of the defunct National Life Insurance Company. The company was declared insolvent in September, 1873; its risks and assets were turned over to the American National Life Insurance and Trust Company of New-Haven, which in turn became insolvent, and which also reinsured its outstanding risks in the National Capitol Life Insurance Company of Washington, whose founder is now serving a term in the Penitentiary. Meanwhile, a crop of actions of law had grown up around the claim for the distribution of the deposit made with the State by the original National Life Company. The State Superintendent adopted the somewhat singular course of obtaining on his own petition an order of court for the distribution of this fund, and of appointing his friend and attorney, James W. Husted, a Referee to hear and determine in regard to the claims existing against the fund. That has led to an application for an injunction and other legal proceedings, and the number of policy-holders entitled to participate in the fund is likely to be considerably reduced before the mode of division is finally determined.

One of the most marked contrasts between the British Parliament and the United States Congress is seen in the proceedings which take place on the death of a member. The American press has been full of the ceremonial attending the funeral of Congressman Schleicher, which was conducted with all the pomp and circumstance of a state funeral; whereas had that gentleman been an English Peer or member of the House of Commons, there would not have been, unless he had been a man of very exceptional eminence, any allusion even to his demise, except that if he had been in the lower house the Secretary of the Treasury would, in a few days, have moved for a new writ to issue for the return of a member to represent the vacancy occasioned by his death. It is true that the House of Commons did, last session, adjourn in consequence of the death of a private member, but this was because he died actually within the walls of the House, the only instance recorded. It is the same as regards members of clubs, &c. A degree of formality, here, is observed in reference to a deceased member quite unknown there. Such a ceremonial as floating a flag half-mast high, or making an oration over a member, is unknown in London, and the Athenæum and Garrick took no more notice of the death of Thackeray and Dickens than of Messrs. Brown and Smith, whereas had they been American, Academies of Music would not have held the throngs who would have crowded to listen to the catalogue of their talents and virtues. This love of privacy in everything relating to the dead has grown steadily in England of late years, and even where a funeral is public, it is often against the wishes of the deceased. Lord Russell had left such positive injunctions that he was to be buried without any parade, in the secluded village church where his ancestors lie, that his wife felt bound to refuse for his remains not merely the offer of a public funeral, but a tomb in Westminster Abbey. Similar shrinking from publicity was exhibited by Sir Robert Peel. Such men are, however, none the less remembered, and there are not a few Americans who think that our funeral business is greatly overdone. It probably took its rise here in the custom of the Dutch Church of making an oration at funerals, a proceeding in many cases inexpressibly trying to all parties, inasmuch as in the case of many persons there is nothing on earth to say which there is any sort of need for saying.

The maximum and minimum of sun-spots and their relationship to human affairs are being presented just now with much ingenuity. The Œdipoda migratoria, or Acridium peregrinum, according to Dr. F. G. Hahn, only visit temperate regions in great numbers during unusually hot and dry years, and disappear in wet and cold years. A curious table has been compiled by Dr. Koppen showing that in Europe locusts appear about the epoch of minimum sun-spot, increasing until the maximum sun-spot, then disappearing until the following sun-spot minimum. Tracing back European locusts and sun-spots, in 1613 locusts swarmed, when in 1610 the sun-spot was at its minimum, the maximum sun-spot being attained in 1615. In 1675 locusts appeared on the Continent, the sun's minimum occurring in 1677. Of course, rain-fall depending on these sun changes has much to do with the appearance or disappearance of these insects. Whether the laws which regulate the coming of locusts in other countries may be deduced from the sun, remains yet to be proved; still there are some strange coincidences which are worth recording. In India, locusts appeared in 1802; the minimum of the sun-spot was in 1793. In the United States the advent of locusts somewhat coincides with this theory. In 1855, 1868, and 1874–7 these nuisances were in abundance, and the epochs of minimum sun-spots were 1856, 1867, and 1877. These may be natural cycles of insect incubation. We might then suppose that the Biblical locust-flights one of the Egyptian plagues were synchronous with minimum sun-spot periods.

It has been estimated that there are in the State of New-York no fewer than 6,400 ecclesiastical organizations of all denominations, occupying nearly as many edifices, which furnish seats for over 2,600,000 persons, and having an enrolled membership of 1,300,000 in round numbers. The aggregate value of these church edifices and the lots which they occupy is about $101,110,000, to which should be added, say, $16,500,000, the value of the parsonages and other real estate belonging to the various denominations. The Methodist Episcopal Church is the most powerful one in the State, all things considered. It has the largest number of organizations, the largest number of edifices, the largest number of sittings, and pays its clergymen 20 per cent. more money in salaries than any other denomination. For instance, the three denominations having the largest number of organizations are, the Methodist, 1,785; Baptist, 823, and Presbyterian, 716. Largest number of edifices: Methodist, 1,766; Baptist, 812, and Presbyterian, 708. Largest number of sittings: Methodist 619,800; Roman Catholic, 388,000, and Presbyterian, 335,000. In membership, however, the Roman Catholic Church is far ahead of all others, the three largest being, Catholic, 582,000; Methodist, 181,000, and Presbyterian, 112,000. The Protestant Episcopal denomination owns the largest amount of church property, $24,602,000; the Roman Catholic comes next with $22,700,000, and the Presbyterian third, with $19,115,000. The sum annually paid for salaries of clergymen is $5,310,000, of which the Methodists pay $1,140,000; the Presbyterians, $952,000, and the Episcopalians, $811,000. The average for each organization in the State is $840.

The Hotel-keepers' Protective Association, formed some time ago, has been instrumental in so reducing the number of hotel-swindlers that they have ceased to be very troublesome. Not long since hundreds of these rogues traveled about the country, living sumptuously at first-class houses without paying a dollar. They became such a pest that the association was organized and conducted so skillfully that the designing scamps met with defeat at nearly every turn. The principal hotels in the leading cities belong to the society, and when any man defrauds one of them, the defrauded innkeeper telegraphs full particulars to the head office, usually in some commercial centre like Boston, New-York, Chicago, or Cincinnati. Then the head office at once issues a circular to every member of the association, giving the name under which the swindler has registered, his personal description, amount of baggage, and manner of pract

A BLAZING BROADWAY PILE

LOSS OF ONE LIFE AND A MILLION AND A HALF OF DOLLARS.

DESTRUCTION OF THE BUILDING ON BROADWAY FORMERLY OCCUPIED BY BROOKS BROTHERS — RAPID SPREAD OF THE FLAMES, FED BY COTTON AND WOOLEN MATERIALS—ONE FIREMAN KILLED BY THE FALLING WALLS—THE LOSS ESTIMATED AT $1,500,000.

Flames were discovered about 9:30 o'clock last evening by Capt. McDonnell, of the Prince-Street Police Station, bursting from the rear of the building at the north-east corner of Broadway and Grand-street. As he struck the signal, it was given from the threatened structure, which proved to be the store that had been occupied by Brooks Bothers until their removal to their present store. After the removal of this firm the the building, which measured 100 feet on Broadway and Crosby-st., and 200 feet on Grand-st., had been altered to accommodate several tenants. Howard, Sanger & Co. occupied the entire first floor. Naumburg, Kraus, Lauer & Co. occupied portions of the second and fifth, and the whole of the third and fourth floors. Edwin Bates & Co. had a large stock in the remaining portions of the second and fifth floors. The building included Nos. 462, 464, 466, and 468 Broadway.

The flames, when first seen, were issuing from the third window, on Grand-street, from the Crosby-street end, in the third story. This was in the portion occupied by Naumburg, Kraus, Lauer & Co. This firm has been using, recently, in its manufacture of mixed woolen cloth, nearly 70 per cent. of cotton. This caused the flames to spread very rapidly, and they soon acquired almost uncontrollable headway. Next to this building, on the north, was the Pacific Bank building, from which it was separated by the thick wall of the bank, in addition to its own.

The first alarm at 9:32 brought out five engines, which the subsequent alarms increased to 24, the entire fire force of the lower part of the City. The firemen appreciated the magnitude of their task from the first. The third story of the building was very high, and lines of hose were promptly carried to the roofs of adjoining buildings, whence water could easily be thrown upon the flames. The interior of the building was wholly under the control of the fire before a stream could be laid on. The burning goods, more than half cotton, at least above the second story, were only to be reached through the open windows of the building. The roofs of buildings on Grand-street from Broadway to Crosby-street, as well as the windows on Crosby-street, and the roof of the Pacific Bank, fairly bristled with firemen directing the many streams of water.

Commissioners King, Gorman, and Reilly were present, and directed the efforts of the firemen, assisted by Chief Bates and Assistant Chief Shay. They could only play, however, on the edges of the flames. Almost from the first moment of their discovery, the flames had been pouring out through the roof, and showers of sparks were sent upward with the increased draft of every broken window. The glare lighted up the lower section of the City from the City Hall to Union-square. Soon the whole roof had disappeared, and tongues of flame shot out through the jointings of the brown-stone copings. The stones began to fall, forcing the firemen to seek safer quarters.

The spectators had grown almost unmanageable. Every adjoining street was filled with them, and the Reserves called out by Capts. Brogan and McDonnell were hardly able to keep them back to the safety line. They surged against the Police, and forced them sometimes in positions of great danger. The walls bent under the intense heat and threatened to topple, but it required rough usage by the Police to drive the spectators from near the trembling walls. Inside the burning building, 100 by 200 feet, there was not a single division wall. The separating partitions between the occupants consisted merely of lath and plaster. Within a half hour from the beginning of the fire the floor dividing the third and fourth stories gave way. As it fell amimmense shower of sparks was sent up. Almost every window of the building was at once made the entrance-place of a stream of water, but it became steam before it could be effective. From the beginning of the fire the purpose of the firemen was rather to prevent the extension of the fire than to extinguish that which was in progress.

Gradually, from floor to floor, the fire fell, and communicated with fresh stocks of inflammable material. Within an hour and a half it had reached the second floor of the building. Mr. Kraus, of Naumburg, Kraus, Lauer & Co., had been making the rounds of the engines and promising large rewards if the firemen only prevented the fire from reaching that floor. As a matter of fact, it only did so through the falling of the floor above, which precipitated a mass of burning beams and flooring upon the stock of Bates & Co., whence it extended, notwithstanding all the water that could be applied, to the adjoining store-rooms through the thin partitions.

There was no progress made in fighting the fire, beyond confining it to the building, until after 10:45 P. M. By that time all the inflammable material stored in the upper stories had burned out, and it was hoped that the fancy goods of Howard, Sanger & Co. would escape the general destruction. Just then the muffled sound of an explosion was followed by the crash of the iron pillars through the floor below, and a mass of burning matter was precipitated upon goods that had been too far within the building to be reached by water. For the fifth time the sparks went up, and a large stock of easily-burned goods added fuel to the fire. That was the last of the attempt to save anything from the fire. The balustrade of the upper story had been gradually falling, and along with it came large flakes of the brown-stone casing of the building. All the interior beams had fallen in. The entire interior was a mass of burning wood and cotton. The Pacific Bank was temporarily threatened by the toppling of the wall dividing it from the burning building. At that moment it was hoped that the outer walls of the building would not fall. They had lodged, and the apparent integrity of the Broadway and Crosby-street sides led the firemen to hope that they would remain firm.

At 11.15 o'clock, when the fire was well under control, and the space inside the walls a vast glowing furnace, a number of firemen of No. 17 Engine were grouped in Crosby-street, on the easterly sidewalk and directing several streams of water into the ruins. Suddenly the southerly wall of the building, facing on Grand-street, wavered and fell with a thundering crash, scattering bricks, stone, and iron in every direction. There was a momentary stampede of firemen and policemen from the neighborhood, and before the dust from the fallen wall had cleared away the Crosby street wall fell also. This wall was not as heavy as the Grand-street wall, but it created frightful havoc owing to the narrowness of the thoroughfare.

The group of firemen belonging to Engine No. 17 had begun to scatter on the falling of the Grand-street front, but two of them, John Reilly and Dennis Doran, were an instant too late, and were struck by the falling masonry. The opposite building is of iron, five stories in height, and forms the north-easterly corner of Grand and Crosby streets. Reilly saw the wall coming down, and a comrade shouted to him, "Come away, Jack!" but the warning was not in time. The next instant Reilly was overwhelmed with the red-hot débris, and it was nearly 10 minutes before his mangled body could be extricated. Then he was found lying on the stoop of the store of Hinck Brothers, dead, and with his head hanging over a pit made by the carving-in of the grating, which had been driven into the sub-cellar of the building. His body was soon after removed to the Fourteenth Precinct Station-house.

His comrade, Doran, was fortunate enough to have escaped the direct forces of the fall and had managed to get around the low buttressed corner of Hinck Brothers' store, but instantly turned and rushed back over the débris to see what had become of his comrade Reilly. In the dust and smoke he was unable to see the yawning pit made where the grating over the sidewalk and stoop had been, and fell into the opening, through the broken flooring of the cellar and into the sub-cellar, a distance of about 25 feet, amid fragments of scorching bricks and iron. He was badly cut and severely injured, his shoulder-blade being broken, his head cut and bruised, and his body severely contused internally as well as externally. An ambulance was sent for and he was conveyed to Bellevue Hospital on its arrival.

For a distance of 25 feet on the Crosby-street side, and as far up as the third-story window sills, the building of Hinck Brothers was seriously damaged and disfigured. As the five-story wall of the burning building on the opposite side of Crosby-street toppled over it struck this building at its third story, and swept the front almost off, breaking away the cast-iron window-sills and columns as though they were made of pasteboard, and hurling tons of brick and other débris into each floor. This building is owned by C. C. Hastings, and was built in 1870 on the site of an old Presbyterian church, which was purchased in 1855 by the Trustees of the Mason Street Lodge. They intended to build a temple there, and held a fair there in 1856. The idea of building a Masonic temple there was abandoned, and the building was subsequently used as stables for an express company.

John Reilly, the fireman who was killed, was about 43 years of age, and resided with his wife and five children at No. 273 Delancey-street. He was formerly a member of No. 20 Engine, and had been with No. 17 Engine about six months. His was a brother-in-law of Civil Justice Timothy J. Campbell, and is said to have been a brave, active, and prompt member of the force.

Dennis Doran has been about six years attached to No. 17 Engine, and resides at No. 746 Fifth-street. He is an unmarried man, and will probably survive his injuries.

At a late hour last night a man named Bryan G. Hughes, a paper-box-maker, of Centre-street, was missing, and it was feared that he had been killed by the Crosby-street wall. A few minutes before it fell he was seen talking to Reilly, who was then holding the pipe, and afterward could not be found. Before Reilly and Dovan began work in Crosby-street, Chief Shay had given orders that not more than two men were to hold a pipe in Crosby-street, owing to the limited width of the street, and as the wall was likely to fall at any time, the men were cautioned to watch it, and at the first threat of danger to drop the pipe and run. When last seen alive Reilly was running away, within three feet of a safe position, with his right arm over his head to ward off the danger that he saw was overtaking him. Within a few feet distant, at the time the walls fell, there were quite a number of prominent men grouped on the roadway in conversation, and directly on the corner of the intersecting streets. Among them were Charles Waite, of the Windsor Hotel, Alderman Morris, Police Inspector Murray, Capts. Byrnes, Mansell, and Brogan, and Fire Marshal Sheldon. As the walls fell the débris was hurled to the right and left of them, but they escaped injury.

From the roof of THE TIMES building for the few minutes during which the conflagration was at its height the scene was very impressive. The progress of the fire was distinctly measured by the height of the columns of flame. The roar and crackle could not be heard at such a distance, and their absence added much to the grandeur of the sight. The roofs, railings, and pinnacles of the tall buildings beyond the new Court-house, whose easterly wing was in the line of vision, stood out like an illuminated lattice-work against the blazing base of a mountain of fire, which intensified the darkness all around. At the moment of their greatest activity the flames rose far above the general level of the intervening hous-etops, terminating in a long gradually thickening flame that slowly expanded into a canopy of smoke, through the rifts of which an occasional star was visible. As the wind was a little west of north, and very sluggish in its movement, a heavy veil of smoke soon settled over the lower portion of the City of which Printing House-square is the centre, but did not fall low enough to obscure the view. The reflection of the flames brought out strongly in a crimson hue, the slightest details of the buildings near the burning structure. At times sparks rose so high, and remained apparently motionless so long, that they were easily mistaken for stars shining through a luminous haze. At a later period a narrow base of fire was just visible above the house-tops, melting imperceptibly into thick, red volumes of smoke and blazing cinders. At 11 o'clock the flames were dying down to a lurid glow, but a dense cloud of smoke still hung over the intervening space, and a long, red flume floating away toward the north-east marked the course of the wind.

It was stated last night that the iron safe which stood in the front office of Naumburg, Kraus, Lauer & Co., on the Broadway front of the third floor, contained $30,000 in cash, which was to have been paid out to-day. The safe was still standing at 1:30 o'clock this morning, enough of the floor remaining attached to the Broadway wall to support its weight.

POLICE AND FIRE ARRANGEMENTS.

Twenty-three engines and nine hook and ladder companies were summoned to the fire by first, second, and third alarms and several special calls. The first alarm was sent out at 9:32 P. M., from Station No. 167, at the corner of Grand-street and Broadway, and three minutes later a call was sounded for the entire force of the central section of the Insurance Patrol. Two additional alarms summoned half of the upper and half of the lower sections of the patrol. At 9:50 o'clock a simultaneous call was sent to the engine companies whose duty it is to respond to first alarms telegraphed from Station No. 379, and at 9:55 a special call brought all the companies that usually start on the first alarm from Station No. 44. Other special calls were sent to five up-town engine companies required to take charge of the districts left vacant by some of those engaged in extinguishing the fire. The officials in charge of the Central Park Reservoir were directed by telegraph, at 10¼ o'clock, to turn on a full pressure of the water. Obedience to this order was manifest a short time after in the augmented force and power of the streams that poured through the numerous nozzles directed against the burning building. Panes of glass and stout window-frames, which, while the water was at ordinary pressure, withstood the force of the streams, were easily broken, giving the water free ingress to the interior of the building.

Inspector Murray took charge of the Police arrangements for keeping the crowds at a safe distance, for which purpose 100 men were detailed. Forty of these were withdrawn after midnight, and the others were ordered to remain on duty until 8:30 o'clock this morning. The fire-line extended along the west side of Broadway, from Howard-street to Broome, through Broome, to Mott, to Grand, to Crosby, to Howard, to Broadway. The crowds were largely increased after the theatres were over, but the Police succeeded in keeping them within bounds with considerable effort.

THE LOSSES.

Howard, Sanger & Co. usually carried a stock of costly fancy articles to the value of little less than $1,000,000. Their immense stock was depleted by the sales during the holiday season, but they have been replenishing their supplies to meet the demands of the Spring trade. Their business yesterday indicated that this trade was likely to be very large, for the store was visited by an unusually large number of Western buyers. They received yesterday new goods valued at $20,000, upon which, of course, no insurance was had. The insurance has always been effected through the Lorillard Fire Insurance Company. The firm has been in the habit of carrying $100,000 on its own risk, but it is stated, on good authority, that it has for some time lacked $250,000 of full insurance. The stock at the time of the fire was worth about $600,000.

The firm has been in the building now burned about four years. It has been in business for a long term of years, and was originally known as Cary, Howard, Sanger & Co., with its office in Chambers-street. The books of the firm were saved last night. They have been kept near the front of the store, so as to be got out rapidly in an emergency, although there was a strong vault in the cellar.

Naumburg, Kraus, Lauer & Co. had a stock valued at $500,000, which was said last night by Mr. Kraus to have been fully insured, although he could not call to mind the companies holding risks. The firm is comparatively a new one, having been organized about two years ago, when the large firm of Max Stadler & Co., then doing business in Leonard-street, was dissolved. Most of the members of the present firm were in the old firm. It is an interesting fact that yesterday the firm drew $30,000 with which to pay some large bills falling due early to-day. The money was placed last evening in a safe at the Broadway front of the second floor of No. 464 Broadway. When Mr. Kraus arrived at the fire last evening he was very solicitous about the rescue of the safe, and entreated the firemen to prevent the flames from reaching its vicinity. The door upon which it stood had not been shut up to 1:30 o'clock this morning. A strong force of Police was ordered to remain on duty all night to guard against an attempt of thieves to reach and plunder the safe.

Edward Bates & Co., who occupied the third, fourth, and fifth floors of Nos. 466 and 468 Broadway, running back to Crosby-street, suffer a heavy loss. Their stock is usually very large, but at the present time they have been carrying a reduced quantity of goods, because of their intention to move. It was valued at $275,000. They have usually been insured for $260,000, but last week $25,000 worth of their policies expired and they neglected to renew them. The firm is a very old one, and did a large trade, particularly with the South. They have a branch house in Charleston, S. C. Last month the firm sold to Brooks Brothers goods valued at $50,000. Edward Bates & Co. were for many years at No. 297 Broadway. They are to move last week to the new buildings south of the St. Nicholas Hotel, Nos. 409 and 411 Broadway, but were prevented from making the change by the delay in the completion of the buildings. They were insured through the Home Insurance Company, which held a great part of their risk.

The burned building occupied a space of 100 feet on Broadway and Crosby-street respectively, and 200 feet on Grand-street. It was owned by Brooks Brothers. Several years ago, when real estate was high, it was valued at $600,000. At the present time it is estimated to be worth about $350,000, and is reported to have been insured for $250,000. The insurance was intrusted to the Lorillard Fire Insurance Company, which distributed it among several other corporations.

The origin of the fire is a matter of conjecture. Mr. Kraus, of the firm of Naumburg, Kraus, Lauer & Co., was unable last night to form a theory as to the origin. The flames were discovered in the third story, near the corner of Grand and Crosby streets. A very few minutes later, and before the firemen had begun to throw water upon the building, the fire burst through the windows of the Grand-street side of the third and fourth floors, lighting up the entire street in an instant. It had run from the third to the fourth floor through the hatchway and lighted the interior of the building.

THIRTY SECONDS TOO LATE.

HANGED WHILE A REPRIEVE WAS ON THE WAY.

EXECUTION OF SHARPE AND M'DONNELL FOR A MOLLIE MAGUIRE MURDER THIRTEEN YEARS AGO—A REPRIEVE GRANTED BY THE GOVERNOR, BUT RECEIVED TOO LATE—THE CRIME FOR WHICH THE MEN WERE HANGED.

MAUCH CHUNK, Penn., Jan. 14.—An execution which it was thought would be one of the quietest hangings that ever took place in Mauch Chunk has proved the most exciting. A reprieve from Gov. Hartranft arrived here one-half minute after the drop fell—just 30 seconds too late to save the lives of the condemned men.

The two men slept quietly last night. McDonnell left orders upon retiring to be called at midnight for prayer. At that hour Sharpe was fast asleep. Neither of them ate any breakfast this morning. The priests, Fathers Bunce and Heinan, arrived about 7 o'clock, and mass was said in McDonnell's cell, in the presence of a number of relatives of the doomed men. At 9:30 the doors of the prison were opened to those who had passes, and the corridors were soon well filled with a mixed crowd, which examined the ropes, witnessed the attaching of them to the scaffold-beam, and other preparations. It was a serious time, and the Sheriff gave strict orders to his assistants to allow no levity on the part of the crowd. At 10:25 A. M. the Sheriff knocked on the doors of the cells as a signal that he was ready. The condemned men did not appear for some time, but when they did they did not show the least fear. The prisoners, the priests, policemen, and the Sheriff at once went upon the scaffold. After a short service the Sheriff said: "James McDonnell, have you anything to say before I proceed further?" McDonnell replied, speaking in a firm voice: "I am as innocent of the murder of Smith as the child unborn. I have already told of the only crime I was engaged in. [Referring to the Burns murder.] I am sorry I ever alienated myself from the Holy Catholic Church. I forgive everybody." In reply to the Sheriff's question, Sharpe said he was innocent of the murder of Smith. He said he had intended to have read a statement written for him by Mr. Boyle, of the Coal Gazette, but he would not, and asked that gentleman to be sure to publish it. The men then were shackled, and the priests kissed them good-bye.

The Sheriff was about to put on the white caps when Sharpe said he wished to leave his thanks with the Sheriff and officers of the jail. McDonnell said substantially the same. The men then kissed their crucifixes passionately and the priests whispered words of consolation in their ears. As the white caps were drawn over their heads every one except the doomed men left the scaffold, and the Sheriff taking hold of the rope attached to the spring, awaited a signal from Father Bunce before the drop fell. In a moment a white handkerchief fluttered from the priest's hand, and the Sheriff pulled the drop. The fall was over three feet, and the men came down heavily. McDonnell seemed to die instantly, but Sharpe struggled violently.

A reprieve was received at Mauch Chunk by telegraph at 10:37 A. M., and the manager of the Western Union Telegraph office rushed to the jail with it. He rang the bell violently for about a minute, and shouted to the door-keeper. The latter, however, did not seem to understand that the dispatch was a reprieve. It was from Gov. J. F. Hartranft, and granted a reprieve until Monday. There was great excitement in the town when the news of the reprieve was made known.

A scene of great excitement took place in the jail; but, although the condemned men had been hanging only a few minutes, there was no movement made toward cutting them down. The telegraph messenger reached the jail door before the drop fell; but no attention was paid to his knocking and ringing, the wife of one of the men having previously been extremely violent outside. When the drop fell the knocking and ringing continued, and the Sheriff sent out a man to arrest the persons whom he imagined to be creating a disturbance. It was then found to be the telegraph messenger with a reprieve. A brother of McDonnell, who had been kneeling by the scaffold, arose and excitedly charged the Sheriff and the bystanders with the murder of his brother. The excitement spread, and the Sheriff appealed to one of the priests, who exonerated him from blame. Amid this excitement and the reproaches of the maddened brother of McDonnell and the wailings of the bereaved families outside, the hanged men were forgotten, and their bodies remained suspended for 30 minutes after the drop fell. There is no reasonable doubt, however, that both were dead when the reprieve came. After the bodies were cut down they were placed in coffins and given to their families, who's cries could be heard for several blocks, adding greatly to the prevailing excitement.

HARRISBURG, Penn., Jan. 14.—The failure of the Governor's reprieve to reach Mauch Chunk in time to save Sharpe and O'Donnell from the gallows to-day, has been the subject of much comment here this afternoon and evening. There seems to be a disposition to place the blame somewhere, but upon whose shoulders to put the burden it is difficult to determine. The counsel for the condemned men left here yesterday morning to ask the Governor for a reprieve until the Supreme Court had decided the constitutionality of the law of 1877, requiring a writ of error to be taken within 60 days after sentence of death. To their chagrin, the counsel learned that the Governor was absent in Washington on official business. Communicating with him by telegraph, they found that he would reach this city at an early hour this morning. Accordingly, they awaited his return, and met him at the depot at 9 o'clock this morning. To their request for a reprieve, the Governor replied that he would decide the question in the morning.

Mr. Longstreet, of counsel, called at the Executive Department at 8 A. M., he alleges, and after waiting an hour Mr. Farr, the Governor's private secretary, appeared, and another hour brought the Governor. After some little discussion of the subject, the Governor ordered the reprieve to be issued. Armed with this, Mr. Longstreet hastened to the telegraph office. The dispatch was filed at 10:35 A. M., and sent at 10:36, and although every effort was made at Mauch Chunk to reach the Sheriff and cause him to suspend his sad task, the drop fell before entrance could be had to the jail. Mr. Longstreet feels very much distressed over his failure, just as success seemed about to crown his efforts. He is fearful that he will be accused of a lack of zeal and energy in the service of his clients, although his conscience acquits him of any such charge. The whole affair seems to have been the result of a concatenation of unfortunate accidents, or misdirected efforts, for which no one seems responsible.

Private Secretary Farr says, in effect, that the reprieve would simply have been a postponement of the execution for a few days, as there was no hope of a final pardon. The only hope for the men was that the Supreme Court would declare unconstitutional the law of 1877, limiting the time in which writs of error shall be taken out, but there is little probability that the court will render such a decision, especially if it is true, as is asserted, that the law was passed at the request of the Supreme Court, for its relief, and was drawn by one of its judges.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 14.—In the cases of McDonnell and Bergin, the Mollie Maguires, one of whom (McDonnell) was hanged this morning, the court refused to-day to grant a writ of error asked for. The execution of Bergin will accordingly take place two days hence, as arranged.

POTTSVILLE, Penn., Jan. 14.—The murder of George K. Smith, for which McDonnell and Sharpe were executed, was one of the most cruel and deliberate assassinations ever committed by the Mollie Maguires, or, as they were more commonly called at that time, "Buckshots." It was committed at Audenried, on the night of Nov. 5, 1863, 17 months after the time of the murder, at the same place, of Langdon, for which crime John Kehoe was hanged a month ago. According to the testimony of confessing Mollies, Kehoe, the murderer of Langdon, and "Yellow Jack" Donohue, (hanged in July, 1877,) the murderer of Morgan Powell, were the principal instigators of the attack on Smith, though the former does not appear to have been an actual participant in the murder.

George K. Smith was a coal-operator. He was accused of giving information to the officers who at that time were conducting the Army drafts and hunting up deserters, and for this it was determined to "put him out of the way;" though it now appears that even this miserable defense for their crime is not left to the murderers, since on the trial of McDonnell, N. P. Fowler testified that he had given the information for which Smith was killed; that he was so informed at the time by a priest, who appeared to know all about the affair. It was not a hard master to gain information about, however. The thing was not done in a corner. A doctor making professional calls on the day of the murder saw a number of men loading fire-arms. A boy looking for cows came upon 15 men holding a meeting in the woods; but boy and doctor had lived long enough in that wild society not to take notice of what they saw. They passed on, made no remarks, and no questions were put. Sort of trouble. Mr. Smith, who had been to Philadelphia, came home that day on an evening train, sick, and went to bed at once. His wife had received some intimation of coming trouble, and asked George W. Ulrich, a clerk in the colliery store, to spend the night in their house, and he came in for that purpose. About 8 o'clock two men knocked at the door, saying they had a letter for Smith from A. G. Brodhead, Superintendent of the Beaver Meadow Railroad, which must be delivered into his own hands. They refused to give it to Mrs. Smith. Mr. Smith sent word down stairs that he was too sick to receive the letter, and that the men should leave it and call in the morning for their answer. On receiving this message, one of the men drew his pistol, which exploded, either accidentally or by design, and at the report a crowd of men entered the room. At the same time Ulrich came in from another part of the house, and Mr. Smith, in alarm, sprang out of bed and hurried down stairs. He was immediately shot down and died in a few hours. Ulrich was also shot down and beaten, but not mortally. He, in the meantime, was made, one of the men drew his pistol, which exploded, either accidentally or by design, and at the report a crowd of men entered the room. "Long John" Donohue was wounded, and another Mollie, it is supposed, was killed, but he was carried off by his friends.

For 13 years nothing was done to avenge the murder; but when the members of the gang began informing on each other to save their own necks, this, among other forgotten crimes, was brought to the surface, and detectives were sent out in search of the murderers. James McDonnell was arrested in Illinois, and Charles Sharpe in Luzerne County. They were tried in April, 1878, and convicted. John Kehoe was indicted at the same Sessions for participation in their crime, but was never tried. As has been indicated, the number of Mollie Maguires engaged in this affair who have since become notorious, was very large. The fate of Kehoe and "Yellow Jack" Donohue has been told. McDonnell and Sharpe have now suffered the penalty for their share of the work. Michael Durkin, arraigned at the same time with them, has not yet been tried. "Long John" Donohue, one of the two men who presented themselves first at Mr. Smith's door, was picked up dead in the streets of Tuscarora, with a bloody sword by his side, four years after. He had been shot in an attack on the house of John C. Northall, a coal-operator. John, alias "Humpy," Flynn, who was Donohue's partner on this occasion, has disappeared. James Kerrigan and Charles Mulhearn, who were at least accomplices after the fact, have turned informers. Of the others, some have been killed, others traced to distant parts of the country, and in time more of them will doubtless be brought to justice.

McDonnell freely confessed that he was an accomplice in the murder of Patrick Burns, for which Martin Bergan is to be hanged on Thursday at Pottsville; but always protested his innocence of the murder of George K. Smith. Sharpe also declared himself innocent.

WARD'S MURDERER HANGED.

CONFESSION OF THE CONDEMNED MAN—SCENES AT THE SCAFFOLD.

ST. JOHN, New-Brunswick, Jan. 14.—Thomas Dowd was executed at St. Andrews, Charlotte County, at 8:15 o'clock this morning, for the murder of Thomas Edward Ward, on Sept. 18, 1878, at New-River. Dowd died instantaneously. About 60 persons were present.

Dowd's final confession was as follows: "The day on which the terrible deed was committed, I accidentally met Ward coming from the meadow, and asked him where he was coming from, to which he replied that he was coming from haying, but that he would never make any more hay. He asked me where I was coming from. I said, from berrying, to which he replied, 'You will never go berrying again.' Some words of dispute took place between us in reference to some evil thoughts McCarthy had put in Ward's mind respecting improper relations which he insinuated existed between me and Ward's wife, for which there was no foundation. Ward then struck at me with the pitchfork. I evaded the blow he aimed at me, and, after a tussle, got him down, and told him I have until then was exhausted. He said, 'For God's sake, let me up; I was only in fun.' I let him up. We walked a short distance, disputing by the way. He again struck at me with the fork. I again evaded the blow. We again got into holds, and tussled again as before until he was exhausted. He again begged to be relieved. He walked on a short distance. The dispute became hotter. He made a more determined effort to strike me. It was then that I picked up McCarthy's axe, which he had, and struck him with it, in self-defense. I thought if I attempted to run from him he would, when my back was turned, have plunged the fork into me. I gave him one blow on the head, and knocked him insensible; the blow did not kill him, for I saw his legs move. I ran away a short distance. I did not know what I was doing. I was crazed. I stopped, turned back, struck him two or three blows, and finished him; I then hauled the body into the bushes, and covered it with moss and brush, as it was afterward found. I buried his hat in the swamp. I went to the river to wash. The devil prompted me to drown myself, but then I thought if I did I would be lost forever. I never went back to where I hid the body until I was taken there; I most solemnly declare, in view of my approaching death, that Mrs. Ward is entirely innocent."

Dowd slept well during the night, and arose at 6 A. M. Father Doyle soon afterward joined him in his cell. Dowd ascended the scaffold with a firm step, and made a speech. He said: "I am much obliged to the Sheriff and Mr. Hall and his family. They have shown me every kindness and gratified my every wish. I bid the people of St. Andrews good-bye. I feel every kindly feeling to the people of St. Andrews. I wish you all well. God bless you all." He then knelt down with the priest, who recited the De Profundis and the Ordo Commendationis. The jailer then bound his hands and feet, placed the rope around his neck, adjusted the knot, and pulled the black cap over his face. Dowd then said, "Good-bye, Mr. Hall." The rope was then cut. He was pulled up into the air, and died without a struggle. Death seemed to be instantaneous. Ten minutes after the rope was cut Dr. S. L. Grove pronounced Dowd dead.

AMUSEMENTS.

LA TRAVIATA AT BOOTH'S THEATRE.

The performance of Verdi's favorite opera, "La Traviata," last evening attracted a full house. Miss Giulia Mario made her first appearance in New-York in the part of Violetta, with Signor Lazarini and Signor Pantaleoni in the cast. The audience was kindly disposed, and did all that could be expected to encourage the performers, but the fact remains that the opera was poorly presented. Miss Mario was evidently suffering from nervous extement incident to a first appearance, and probably did not do herself justice in the trying part of Violetta. She has a light and thin soprano voice, and lacks the dramatic force requisite for an adequate performance of the rôle. She does not sing with the artistic finish demanded by the music of the part, and was at times painfully inefficient. The part of Violetta demands the highest powers of the actress and the singer, and the lady was certainly courageous in her effort to give it to a New-York audience. Signor Lazarini was a careful and good Alfredo. He sang tastefully, and deserved praise for his performance. His voice is a genuine and sweet tenor, and he manages it with skill, fairly earning the applause he received from the audience. Signor Pantaleoni seemed to be under the influence of the cold he has previously suffered from. He was not up to the requirements of the occasion last evening, and his rendering of "Di Provenza" was a disappointment to those of the audience who knew his capabilities. He was, however, encored in this aria, which he repeated. The performance, as a whole, was careless, and Mr. Behrens allowed his orchestra and chorus to have their own will, without reference to the conductor's baton.

GENERAL MENTION.

This is positively the last week of the entertainment now being given twice each day at Masonic Hall, in which Tom Thumb and other extraordinary people take part.

A very general desire will undoubtedly prevail to hear Miss Dickinson's new lecture on matters relating to the stage, which she will deliver at Chickering Hall on Friday night.

In addition to "Cinderella," which seems to be enjoying a run at the Aquarium, several amusing and ingenious persons now contribute to the regular entertainment by their specialties.

Mr. Sam Devere, a performer of varied merit, will make his first appearance at the San Francisco Minstrels next week. In the meantime, the nightly programme contains a long list of varied attractions.

The coming revival of "Dot" at the Park Theatre, with Mr. John E. Owens as Caleb Plummer, recalls to mind that Charles Bass was the original Caleb, and that the piece was first produced in this country at the old Park Theatre in 1846.

The progressive managers of the Theatre Comique are now using the celebrated "Mulligan Guards" to a new and useful end, which is best described by the title, "The Mulligan Guard Ball." The patrons of this theatre will find the names of all their favorites on the present programme.

To-night will take place the first representation of Gilbert's famous burlesque, "H. M. S. Pinafore," the music of which was composed by Mr. Arthur Sullivan. The following persons will appear in the cast: Mr. Thomas Whiffin, Mr. Eugene Clarke, Mr. Henry Laurent, Mr. William Davidge, Miss Eva Mills, Miss Gurney, and Miss Jarbeau.

A RAILROAD'S FINANCIAL TROUBLES.

MILWAUKEE, Jan. 14.—Owing to legal complications which have arisen in regard to the Wisconsin Central Railroad Company, the Trustees of the mortgage bonds have at last been compelled to take possession of the road. Certain bondholders, owning about ¾ per cent. of all the bonds, have so embarrassed the company by suits for injunctions, and by garnisheeing their funds, that the operating of the road and the payment of the employees were imperiled. The Milwaukee and Northern Company, whose road was leased to the Wisconsin Central, also took legal measures to protect themselves, which added to the complications. The Trustees regret that they should be forced to this step at this time, as the company has never before been in so promising a condition. The officers of the company are sanguine that the result of the litigation will be such as to protect every creditor, and enable them to pay every honest debt incurred in the construction and operation of the road.

JENKINS, LANE & SONS, OF BOSTON.

BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 14.—Jenkins, Lane & Sons, boots and shoes, Summer-street, who failed on Saturday last, are reported as owing from $200,000 to $225,000. The firm bought a large portion of their sole leather in New-York, and more or less of their indebtedness is said to be to parties in that City. Of the firm's Boston indebtedness, quite a proportion is said to be to banks and banking houses, their paper having been largely disposed of by parties to whom it was originally given. The firm have of late lost heavily from bad debts in the Southern trade, their loanes from this source during the last four or five years aggregating it is said $250,000.

SHERE ALI'S DESPERATE STRAIT.

HE DECLARES HIS READINESS TO BECOME A VASSAL OF THE CZAR.

A St. Petersburg dispatch to the Vienna Presse states that Shere Ali, before leaving Kabul, declared his readiness to become a vassal of the Czar.

Another St. Petersburg dispatch to the same journal states that the Ameer, in consequence of the refusal of Russia to mediate, has abandoned as hopeless the idea of interesting the European powers in his cause.

LOUISIANA ELECTION OUTRAGES.

DEMOCRATIC WITNESSES NOT PRESENT BECAUSE INDICTED—TESTIMONY AS TO THE KILLING OF NEGROES AND WHITES.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 14.—At the meeting of the Teller committee to-day, the Democratic members complained that, owing to indictments against certain witnesses, taking testimony for their side would have to be postponed.

Edwin Craighead, of the New-Orleans Times, and Nimes T. Gordy, Sheriff of St. Mary's Parish, testified regarding the attack on Newman and the destruction of election returns. Their testimony was circumstantial, and goes to prove that the object of the destruction of the returns was to render the exercise of the appointing power by the Governor a necessity. The object of the attack on Newman was to quiet him in regard to a visit he had a few days before by Willie Wilson, who claimed possession of the returns in Newman's hands by virtue of a telegram he professed to have from the State Attorney-General. Gordy testified that the white Republican ticket was elected.

T. S. Shaffer, of St. Joseph, was recalled, and testified to the killing of an Irish laborer by negro constables and the lynching and shooting of a constable by a band of armed whites. No names were given.

Gaspre de Cuir, of Pointe Coupee, a member of the Legislature, testified to having heard that several negroes were whipped and beaten by whites; he understood that it was because the negroes organized revolutionary bands, endangering the lives and property of the whites.

Charles Decenge, of Caddo, a Deputy Marshal, saw two dead negroes at Caledonia the day after election. He understood that the negroes were killed on election day; the witness noticed at Greenwood poll that some names were not counted; the reason given was that the votes were in the wrong box.

DISASTERS AT SEA.

HAVRE, Jan. 13.—The American schooner Edwin L. Morrison, at this port from Galveston, brought the crew of the British bark Chili, Capt. Oliver, from Baltimore Dec. 23, for Rochefort, which was abandoned at sea.

MILFORD, Wales, Jan. 14.—The new American ship Thomas M. Reed, Capt. Small, from San Francisco Sept. 5, for Liverpool, went ashore in Freshwater Bay, and became a total wreck. Three of her crew were drowned. Her cargo is strewn over the sands, and much of it will be saved.

LONDON, Jan. 14.—The Norwegian bark Sarpen, Capt. Backer, which sailed from Ipswich Jan. 6, for the United States, is ashore at Ramsgate.

The Italian bark Federico La Cavera, Capt. Bestora, which arrived at Honfleur Jan. 2, from Baltimore, has been ashore at the former place. She has four feet of water in her hold.

HALIFAX, Jan. 14.—The steamer Alpha, from St. Thomas and Bermuda, arrived here last night. She had as passengers 56 shipwrecked seamen from the latter place. They belonged to the English steamers Kate and Lartington, previously reported wrecked. The brigantine Herbert H. Raymond, of Weymouth, Nova Scotia, and the schooner Welcome Home, of St. John, New-Brunswick, were both abandoned at sea.

A BURIAL POSTPONED.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 14.—A singular occurrence is reported from Fort Wayne, Ind. A large number of people assembled at St. Paul's German Catholic Church this morning to attend the funeral of Rose Miller, a young girl of 15, who had died on Sunday morning after a brief illness. At the conclusion of the services, when the procession was about to move to the cemetery, the coffin was opened and the relatives and friends approached to take a last look at the remains. Color was discovered in the face of the dead, the lips were red, and there was warmth in the remains. A general conviction was expressed that the girl was in a trance, and there was a strong protest against the burial, in which the priest, Father Koenig, heartily joined. He had expressed doubts that she could be buried before the funeral, but was overruled. He dismissed the audience, sent the hearse and the carriages away, and caused the body to be removed to the school-house on the adjoining lot. A report was started that Miss Miller had come to life during the services, and crowds of people soon gathered to view the remains. There was a constant throng of curious men and women passing before the body all the afternoon. A council of physicians was held, and they pronounced the aspect of the body very remarkable; but after applying the severest tests they united in the opinion that the girl was dead, and advised the burial. The relatives and Father Koenig, however, refused their consent, and this evening the body was removed to St. Joseph's Hospital, where an effort is being made to restore animation. There is no change yet in the appearance of the girl, and the belief is strong that she is alive. The burial will not take place until there is no further room for doubt.

TUESDAY, Jan. 14—P. M.

Speculation on the Stock Exchange was less active than for some days past, but the volume of business was nevertheless large, and at times the dealings were attended with considerable animation. Early in the day the market, under realizations, exhibited weakness, and prices yielded ⅛@½ ₱ cent. In the general list, while Michigan Central declined ¼@⅝ ₱ cent. After the first board a firmer tone was developed, and a steady advance in quotations ensued, the closing sales being at generally the best figures of the day. The improvement ranged from ½ to 1⅞ ₱ cent., the purchasing movement being most conspicuous in Northwestern, Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, Lake Shore and Erie. The transactions in the four stocks mentioned amounted to over 136,700 shares, or nearly three-fourths of the entire day's business. Among the coal shares Delaware, Lackawanna and Western was prominent, both in point of strength and activity, and closed an advance of 1¾ ₱ cent. from the lowest point. The bears in the stock seem to appreciate the fact that the outstanding short interest is altogether too large and constitutes an element of danger, and are consequently anxious to corner. The movement in this direction sufficiently accounts for the rapid rise in the shares to day. The buoyancy in Delaware, Lackawanna and Western imparted strength to the other coal stocks, which closed strong at advancing quotations.

The transactions aggregated 188,680 shares, including 52,575 North-western, 35,950 Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, 26,980 Lake Shore, 21,200 Erie, 9,600 St. Paul, 8,060 St. Louis, Kansas and Northern, 7,720 Michigan Central, 4,155 New Jersey Central, 3,550 Ohio and Mississippi, 3,200 Western Union, 2,895 Wabash, 2,410 Illinois Central, 2,130 Iron Mountain, 1,970 Pacific Mail, 1,350 Morris and Essex, and 1,220 Delaware and Hudson.

Northwestern common declined from 56¼ to 52⅝, and advanced to 53⅜, closing at the latter figure. The preferred advanced from 80½ to 80⅝, fell off to 80, rose to 80¾, and finally reacted ⅛ ₱ cent. St. Paul declined from 36 to 35⅝, and the preferred from 77⅛ to 76⅞, but subsequently sold up to 36½ and 77¼, respectively. Delaware, Lackawanna and Western rose from 46½ to 46¾, dropped to 46¼, and advanced to 48. Morris and Essex rose from 77⅜ to 79, and Delaware and Hudson from 40⅛ to 41. New-Jersey Central rose from 35½ to 35¾, fell off to 35⅜, advanced to 36¼, and reacted to 36. Lake Shore declined from 70⅜ to 69⅞, and rose to 70½. Michigan Central declined from 79¾ to 78½, advanced to 79⅝, and reacted to 79¼. Erie fell off from 23¾ to 23⅜, and rallied to 23⅝. St. Louis, Kansas and Northern preferred dropped from 32 to 31⅜, and subsequently rose to 33. The common was steady at 81¼@81½. Canada Southern advanced to 48, fell off to 47½, and recovered to 48. Ohio and Mississippi sold at 8⅝@8½, and the preferred at 21@22. Wabash declined from 21⅜ to 20⅞, and rose to 22¾. Western Union advanced from 95¼ to 95⅞. Illinois Central rose from 81½ to 81⅞. Iron Mountain fell off from 16½ to 16¼, and recovered to 16½. Pacific Mail advanced from 10½ to 11. Among investment shares Panama sold at 125½, Rock Island at 119½, Chicago, Burlington and Quincy at 113⅝, Fort Wayne at 104, and Chicago and Alton at 83¼. Pittsburg rose to 89¾, and fell off to 89.

The Money market was easy, with the bulk of the business on call at 2½@3½ ₱ cent. Prime mercantile paper sold at 4@5 ₱ cent. The following were the exchange and New-York rates at the undermentioned cities:

Charleston, buying 3-16@⅛ discount, selling 1-16@par;		Boston, H. & E., grr'd	32½
New-Orleans, commercial, ¼, bank, ⅛;		Boston, N. & N. 1st 7s.	71¼

Chicago, steady, buying 1-10 premium;		Ches. & Ohio 6s.	111
and Boston, 1-32 premium.		Chic. & Alton 1st.	113⅜
The foreign advices reported the London market for securities strong. Consols advanced ¼ ₱ cent., being quoted at 96⅜@96⅛ for money and at 96⅛ for the account—the highest prices for some time past. United States 10-40s advanced ¼ ₱ cent., and 4½s ½ ₱ cent., the former selling at 110½ and the latter at 104⅛. United States 1867s were steady at 103¾, and 5s at 109¾. Erie was steady at 23⅞@24. The preferred rose to 39½, and reacted to 39. New-Jersey Central advanced 1 ₱ cent., to 37. Do. consolidated Firsts rose to 79, and reacted to 78½. Illinois Central was exceptionally weak, declining 1 ₱ cent., to 83. Bar Silver was quoted at 50d. ₱ ounce. To-morrow will be fortnightly settling day at the Stock Exchange. The Money market continues easy, and three months' bills are discounted as low as 3½ ₱ cent. At Paris, Rentes rose to 113f. 52½c., and closed at 113f. 40c.		Chic. & Alton 1st, sf.	83¾

SMYTH'S SHARP PRACTICE.

THE INSURANCE SUPERINTENDENT IN COURT.

HOW HE OBTAINED AN ORDER FROM JUDGE WESTBROOK TO DISTRIBUTE CERTAIN FUNDS—A TEMPORARY INJUNCTION OBTAINED AGAINST HIM—ARGUMENT ON THE MOTION TO MAKE THE INJUNCTION PERMANENT.

An argument was had before Justice J. W. Gilbert, in the Supreme Court of Kings County, yesterday, in favor of continuing an injunction restraining Insurance Superintendent John F. Smyth from proceeding under an order made by Justice Westbrook, at Kingston, Ulster County, on Dec. 14 last, permitting him to pay out the sum of $130,000 contained in a trust fund deposited with his predecessor by the defunct National Life Insurance Company, of New-York. This company was organized in April, 1863, at which time $100,000 in United States bonds was deposited with Superintendent William Smyth. It remained in his custody until September, 1873, when an examination showed that the company was insolvent. In the following month an action was begun by Joseph Wilde, one of the stock and policy holders of the company, to wind up its affairs, and Eli Beard was appointed Receiver of the concern. At the time the Receiver was appointed the company had outstanding about 3,500 policies, insuring over $6,000,000. In December, 1873, this Receiver went through the form of attempting to reinsure the outstanding risks, in the American National Life and Trust Company of New-Haven, the latter taking possession of all of the assets of the National Life Insurance Company, including its trust fund. This company subsequently became insolvent, and Talcott H. Russell became its Receiver. The matter ran along until June 12, 1873, when a decree was entered in this City dissolving the National Life Insurance Company, and discharging the Receiver. During the year 1877 the New-Haven company reinsured all of its outstanding risks in the National Capitol Life Insurance Company, of Washington, D. C. This was the company which was organized by the notorious Ben Noyes, who is now serving out a term in the New-Jersey Penitentiary. In January of the same year an action was begun against Superintendent William Smyth by John C. Perry, in behalf of Ann Reese, who held a policy on the life of her deceased husband for $5,500. The action was a bill in equity in behalf of the plaintiff, and included as plaintiffs all the other policy-holders who might see fit to take advantage of the suit. The object of the action was two-fold; first, to enforce payment of the plaintiff's claim, and, second, to obtain a decree directing the distribution of this fund to whom it belonged. The Superintendent served an answer in the action, through the Attorney-General, who appeared as his counsel. In this answer the Superintendent claimed that the action could not be maintained, for the reason that he, as custodian of the fund, had exclusive power to distribute it. This issue was brought to a hearing before Justice Gilbert, in the Supreme Court of Kings County, in March, 1878, and was argued by the Deputy Attorney-General on behalf of Superintendent Smyth, and by Gen. B. F. Tracy and Mr. Perry for the plaintiff. The court held that the action was properly brought, and that it had full power and ample authority to administer the fund, because it was held in trust.

The action was afterward brought to trial on its merits before the same Justice, and a decision was rendered in favor of the plaintiff. As it appeared that the New-Haven company had no claim, the proposed company had or might have some interest in the fund, the entering of the decree, on motion of the Deputy Attorney-General, was postponed in order to enable the plaintiff to amend her summons and complaint, by making these companies parties, so that whatever risks they might have could be determined in the same action. The amendment was made by plaintiff's counsel, and each company was served with a copy of the amended complaint, when both made answer that they were entitled to some portion of the fund. A new action having been got ready for trial, the Superintendent, for a purpose which is quite apparent, applied, on Dec. 7 last, on his own petition, to Justice Westbrook at Kingston, and got an order, which he entered at Albany, purporting to direct him to distribute the trust fund. This was an ex parte application, and as it was not obtained in any action, and directs that the proceeds of the sale of the securities deposited with Superintendent Smyth by the National Life Insurance Company, of New-York, be distributed by the Superintendent "among the policyholders entitled thereto." The order also directs that it be referred to Gen. James W. Husted, to take proofs and ascertain who are the persons entitled to the securities; to ascertain the value of each policy, the sum owing upon each, and the share each is entitled to, and directs the Superintendent to furnish an actuary to assist the Referee. The Referee was directed in the order to give notice of his appointment and the time and place where proofs are required to be presented by publishing the facts for four weeks, the expenses to be determined upon the receipt of the Referee's report.

Referee Husted began to publish the statement on Jan. 3, in which he directed the owners of policies issued by that company to present to him their policies on or before Feb. 27 inst. On Jan. 7 last, plaintiff's counsel applied to Justice Gilbert for an injunction, on the ground that such a proceeding, if valid, would enable the Superintendent to distribute the fund summarily before rights of the parties to the action could be settled, and thus cut off their privileges, and the rights of the other classes of policy-owners, who might have surrendered their policies, and reinsured in other companies. A temporary injunction was granted. Being returnable yesterday, when a host of counsel appeared to represent the various policy-holders, and the two defunct insurance companies, while Mr. Rudd appeared for Superintendent Smyth. Mr. Perry opened the case, arguing that the injunction should be made permanent, otherwise the fund in dispute would be dissipated by the Superintendent before the plaintiffs could obtain their judgment, and that the order had been obtained by Superintendent Smyth without giving notice to either of the plaintiffs. Mr. Beaton, counsel for the New-Haven Company, read a long affidavit, in which he showed that the Superintendent had promised that he should give previous notice of any action on his part. Instead of doing so, he had obtained the order without the knowledge of any of the plaintiffs. The order, in his opinion, appeared to have been intentionally drawn so as to exclude the Reciver of the New-Haven company and certain policy-holders and claimants upon said fund from the right to share in the proceeds, and that the proceeding of the Superintendent was the result of a corrupt scheme to forestall a fair adjudication of the rights of all the claimants by a rapid sale and distribution of the fund among a favored few, before a final hearing in the action against him could be reached. It was further alleged that Gen. Husted could not be a fair Referee, as he had been the attorney of the Superintendent, and had been actively interested during the session of the last Legislature in the passage of a bill, which the Governor had refused to sign, which had cut off the rights of the American National Life and Trust Company in the fund, and the affidavit expressed the belief that the proceedings before Justice Westbrook were instituted by the same parties who were interested in the passage of that bill. Defendants' counsel denied that there was any intention to do other than distribute the fund honestly and fairly to those to whom it belonged. Justice Gilbert took the papers and reserved his decision.

RECORD OF A FLOATING DERRICK.

On the large floating dry-dock at the foot of Pike-street, East River, the 100-ton floating derrick City of New-York, designed by Engineer Isaac Newton, formerly the principal assistant of Gen. McClellan, who laid out the dock system, has just been taken up. This structure has a remarkable record. It was launched over seven years ago, and had not been raised from the water since. During this period it has been used almost daily raising weights of 60 or 70 tons. At one portion of the river wall in 1875 it transported and laid 1,750 cubic yards (3,560 tons) of Beton blocks, of which the river wall is chiefly made, laying this great quantity of masonry in less than 18 days in 14 feet of water. Before it was raised, its computed weight was 1,142,518 pounds; and its actual displacement on launching was found to be 1,142,644 pounds, showing a remarkably close calculation. On being taken out, it was found, despite its heavy and constant use, to be in an almost perfect state of preservation, so that it can be at once put back for another seven years of service. It is now to be seen on the floating dry-dock, but is to be sent afloat on Thursday.

SANITARY RULES FOR LODGING HOUSES.

Sanitary Inspector Ewing yesterday submitted to the Board of Health a report in relation to the condition of Fourteenth Ward lodging-houses. The report included a description of each of the places visited, the accommodations afforded and their sanitary condition. No. 98 Bowery, No. 83 Spring-street, and No. 154 Elizabeth-street were found in fair sanitary condition and well suited to the purposes for which they are used. Nos. 117 and 119 Elizabeth-street were found in a bad sanitary condition. The board adopted a resolution adding to the Sanitary Code a new section, to the effect that persons desiring to keep lodging-houses with four or more beds shall be required to apply to the Health Department for a written permit, and that such establishment shall be conducted in accordance with conditions and rules prescribed by the board. The section specifies that the air space allotted to each lodger must not be less than 300 cubic feet, unless adequate ventilation exists in the buildings, approved by the board.

THE FIRE INSURANCE BUSINESS.

Sixty-six companies were represented at the adjourned meeting held yesterday to consider the proposition to form a "tariff association," with a view to equalizing rates, as suggested by a committee appointed to ascertain the causes of the present extreme depression of the fire insurance business. Mr. Henry A. Oakley, of the Home, presided, and Mr. William W. Henshaw, of the Long Island, acted as Secretary. After an informal discussion, during which the idea was favorably entertained, the following committee was appointed to draft a suitable constitution and by-laws: N. C. Miller, of the Star; George T. Hope, of the Continental; E. F. Beddall, of the Royal; A. J. Clinton, of the Eagle; Stephen Crowell, of the Phœnix, of Brooklyn; C. P. Frame, of Frame & Hare, and John E. Leffingwell, of the Farragut. The meeting then adjourned, subject to the call of the committee.

THE NEW-YORK ELEVATED.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE COMPANY—A REPORT WHICH CONSISTS OF VERY GLITTERING GENERALITIES.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the New-York Elevated Railroad was held yesterday, and the following Board of Directors was chosen: Cyrus W. Field, David Dows, Ashbel H. Barney, John H. Hall, Josiah M. Fiske, Charles J. Canda, Alfred S. Barnes, John D. Mairs, Heber R. Bishop, Benjamin Brewster, Daniel A. Lindley, Edward M. Field, and James A. Cowing. The following letter was received from Col. W. T. Pelton:

NEW-YORK, Jan. 14, 1879.

To the Stockholders of the New-York Elevated Railroad:

I decline to be re-elected a Director of your company. Very truly yours, W. T. PELTON.

The President read a long report, in which he speaks of the road as a great success. On May 18, 1877, when he assumed office, the company had less than six miles of single-track railroad in operation, and was carrying an average of less than 8,300 passengers a day. To-day it has over 31 miles of single-track road, completed and in operation, and has lately carried 93,692 passengers in a single day. The average distance run per day is over 27,000 miles—greater than the circuit of the globe. When the extension from Chatham-square to the City Hall and from Fifty-ninth to Eighty-third-street on the West Side, with other sidings, is completed, which soon will be, the line will have a total of over 38 miles of single track in operation. On May 16, 1877, it had in its treasury less than $10,000 in cash, and owed a floating debt of over $278,000. It has now in bank, and in trust companies on call, over $768,000, and has not one dollar of floating debt. The number of passengers carried the last month, December, 1878, was 2,184,767, although the line to Harlem was not opened until the 30th of that month. To-day the bonds are selling at more than double what they were in May, 1877, and the stock at over nine times the price of that date.

By the cancellation of a contract with outside parties the company saved over $9,000,000 in the cost of construction last year. The road is said to have been constructed in the most thorough manner, in proof of which it is claimed that not one of the 3,000 columns has given way in the least, and that no accident occurred through the fault of the company or its employes. Three persons were killed, it is alleged, by jumping upon trains while in motion. It is promised that as the facilities increase the speed will be increased, but that rapidity will always be secondary to safety. On this point it is mentioned that letters of the most contradictory character are constantly received. Many persons complain that the present rate of speed is much too great. It is argued that the present rates of fare are cheap enough, being but a fraction over half a cent a mile for a ride between termini during certain hours of the day. Mr. Field holds out the hope, however, that the company may soon be able to make this the general rate. He suggests the possibility of trains with saloon-cars attached, for the privileges of which an extra charge will be made, and takes a strong argument in favor of the idea. He excuses the lack of accommodation heretofore provided by pleading that such patronage as the road has received was entirely unexpected, and promises that, if the public will have a little patience, the company will soon give them facilities so ample that no reasonable man can complain. Want of civility in employes is to be rigidly punished. No fault is found with proper criticism, and suggestions are gladly received, but the public is warned that where the company receives by the same mail letters advising exactly opposite courses, both cannot be followed. One portion of the public write against the speed of the cars, advising the passengers when leaving liable to take cold; others advocate a very high temperature. The stations are being completed as rapidly as possible. Three different methods of inclosing the stairways are now being tried, and whichever is decided to be the best will at once be applied to all.

Attention is called to the fact that, by a special provision of the charter, the company is required to pay to the City 5 per cent. of its annual net income, to be applied to improving and beautifying the streets and avenues through which its railroad passes. According to present figures the yield to the City will be between $25,000 and $30,000 a year, which is a greater annual income than was ever derived from all the surface railroads together. Mr. Field cannot say when a dividend will be declared. He says that the first dividend the company pays is for the road perfect, and considers that the fact that of the $5,000,000 of stock of the company two-thirds are held by 15 individuals, most of whom are Directors, should of itself be a sufficient guarantee that the road will be run in the interest of the stockholders. The income for the last three months is reported as sufficient to pay the running expenses, the interest on the bonds, and a fair dividend on the stock, and with the completion of the new riches it is believed that the revenue will be greatly increased. The following is an official statement of the travel over the road during the past year:

For the quarter ending March 31, 1878.....	932,581
For the quarter ending June 30, 1878.....	983,833
For the quarter ending Sept. 30, 1878.....	2,075,107
For the quarter ending Dec. 31, 1878.....	6,088,104
Total.....	10,079,625

No statement of any kind in regard to the cost of construction or equipment of the roads and expenditures is made. Subsequently the Directors met and elected Cyrus W. Field President, James A. Cowing Treasurer, and F. E. Worcester Secretary.

CHARGES AGAINST THE SHERIFF.

THEY ARE TO BE PRESENTED TO THE GOVERNOR ON FRIDAY—A NEW PROCEEDING AGAINST THE COUNTY CLERK.

The committee of the Bar Association intrusted with the duty of checking the extortionate practices of the Sheriff's, Register's, and County Clerk's offices have completed their case against the Sheriff, Bernard Reilly, and have reduced the charges against him to proper shape. The formal charges will be presented to Gov. Robinson on Friday, according to the present intention of the committee, and an application will then be made, similar to that made in the case of Register Loew, for the removal of the offending official. The general nature of the charges against Mr. Reilly was substantially shown in the committee's report to the association, though the charges to be brought to the Governor's attention will be more thorough and specific. Numerous instances are to be furnished of extortions practiced by the Sheriff and his deputies. Of the instances there will be a number in which the Sheriff is accused of taking outrageous fees on making levies on, and sales of, property to satisfy judgments, showing that the judgment creditors reaped little or nothing and that the fees and charges of Mr. Reilly and his subordinates nearly or quite swallowed up the sales. The mismanagement of the order of arrest department will also form the basis of one of the charges against the Sheriff, and cases will be cited showing his uniform illegal exaction of $10 or more where persons are arrested on orders of arrest, the reception of money to keep persons from going to jail, &c. The gross mismanagement of the Ludlow-Street Jail will also be one of the accusations against the Sheriff, and the illegal charge of $1 50 for releasing each prisoner from the jail after his legal discharge will form one of the specifications. The alleged illegal charges for room-rent at the jail, and, against the City, for the keep of paying patients will also be brought in. The charges, with the specifications, will occupy about the same space as did the charges against the Register.

Meanwhile, a new legal proceeding has been begun to get at whatever facts the County Clerk's books will disclose against Mr. Gumbleton. The proceeding is by J. Addison Cutler, the Secretary of the Bar Association Committee, who seeks in his individual capacity what the committee are also after. Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday granted an order requiring the County Clerk to show cause to-morrow why he should not be compelled to produce and exhibit his fee-books to Mr. Bush's inspection. The petition of the latter is substantially the same as the one made by the committee on the former application. From the petition, it appears that Mr. Bush called at the County Clerk's office on Monday morning and presented a formal written demand asking permission to inspect the book or books containing the account of all fees, perquisites, and emoluments actually received by him for all or any services done by him or his assistants in his or their official capacity," &c. Such book or books are, by section 9 of chapter 432 of the Laws of 1847, "show when and for whom every such service shall have been performed, its nature, and the fees chargeable therefor, and shall at all times during office hours be open to the inspection, without fee or charge therefor, of all persons desiring to examine the same." Mr. Gumbleton responded to the demand by referring Mr. Bush to his counsel, Messrs. Beach and Meade. Then Mr. Bush told the official that that was an individual and distinct demand, but Mr. Gumbleton returned the same answer. In an affidavit appended to the petition Mr. Bush says he has examined the transcript of Mr. Gumbleton's accounts to the Controller for fees received during four months of the past year, and that he is led to believe, after an examination of such transcripts, that Mr. Gumbleton does not keep any such book or books as required by the act of 1847.

JOHN W. HULL ARRESTED.

HIS RETURN FROM CANADA AND ARRAIGNMENT ON A CHARGE OF GRAND LARCENY.

John W. Hull, the old man who, on Dec. 28, absconded with $30,000 worth of Government 4½ per cent. coupon bonds, the property of Field & James, of No. 16 Broad-street, and who succeeding in eluding the vigilance of the Police, was yesterday arrested by Detectives McMahon and Irving, of the Nineteenth Sub-Precinct, in Brooklyn, having returned from Montreal, whither he had fled. Hull, accompanied by his brother, arrived at the Grand Central Depot at an early hour yesterday morning. He was recognized by the detectives, and a dispatch was sent to Superintendent Walling asking for instructions as to whether they should arrest him on a charge of grand larceny. Superintendent Walling sent an affirmative reply, but before it reached the depot Hull and his brother had secured their baggage and taken their departure. The officers, however, had the party under surveillance, and they arrested Hull soon after he had reached his brother's house, at No. 43 Park-place, Brooklyn. He was brought to the Central Office, and, on being arraigned before Superintendent Walling, he protested indignantly against his arrest, insisting that he had settled the matter with Mr. James, and wanted Mr. Walling to examine his certificate to that effect. The Superintendent said that he did not desire to examine his papers; all that he wanted to know was that there was a warrant out for his (Hull's) arrest, and he ordered the officers to take their prisoner before the magistrate who had issued the warrant. Hull was subsequently brought before Justice Otterbourg, in the Tombs Police Court, and was remanded until this morning. After his remand he was taken back to the Central Office and locked up in a cell, despite his protest that he was a gentleman, and should be allowed to go home.

The prisoner, in a conversation with a TIMES reporter, expressed indignation at his arrest, and stated that he would make Field & James pay dearly for the malicious falsehoods" which they had circulated about him, and which were published in the newspapers. Hull says that he had lost $90,000 in stock speculation on the day he took the bonds from the office of Field & James, and that it was his intention, as he expected to meet a man who owed him some money, to return the same day and give Messrs. Fields & James a check for the bonds. He left the City for the purpose of obtaining money, and believing that he was not liable to prosecution. He exultingly drew forth a document from his pocket, which purported to be signed by Field & James and John S. James, and which on its face was a release for any claims the firm had against him. The paper is dated Jan. 11, and Hull says the matter was settled amicably and satisfactorily between himself and Mr. James in Montreal. But, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. James has compromised the matter with Hull for $25,000, as reported in yesterday's TIMES, this will not save Hull from punishment, if it can be proved that it was his intention to steal the bonds.

BEGGING FOR THE POOR.

RESULTS OF THE WAGON TRIPS TO COLLECT GIFTS FOR ALL THE CHARITIES.

The large vacant stores Nos. 130 and 132 South Fifth-avenue, presented the general appearance of a large express office doing an extensive business yesterday. From early morning until after dark wagons of all styles of design, and evidently intended for many uses, drawn by one horse or by two, departed from in front of the building or drew up to it loaded with the queerest possible miscellany of articles. A great placard tacked to the side of each bore the inscription, "General Committee to Canvass for City Charities." In each wagon, besides the driver, was a representative of some City charity and four boys. The object of these wagons and their occupants was to collect supplies of every description from those disposed to give, for impartial distribution among the many organized charities of the City, where the supplies will be used for the benefit of the inmates or again distributed to the worthy outside poor. The large building on South Fifth-avenue is the general depot for the reception and distribution of these supplies, and the use of wagons, horses, and their drivers had all been voluntarily given for two days by business firms of the City. The work of yesterday was nominally among the stores and business houses below Fourteenth-street, and in it 46 teams were employed, nearly 300 men and boys, and a dozen women. Although the work was supposed to be done principally among the stores, in reality most of the contributions were from dwelling-houses, and some of the canvassers extended their routes to Ninety-third-street. The canvass of to-day will be conducted in the upper portion of the City, and will engage 100 teams.

The canvass is reported as successful as that for the yellow fever sufferers. In the early afternoon the teams began to return to headquarters, and hundreds of queer parcels began to encumber the floor. By dark all the canvassers had reported. An examination of the parcels afforded a curious study, and resulted in many queer revelations. Perhaps the most noticeable of all were great piles of shoes and hats, some partly worn, but many new and only somewhat out of style. In regard to the hats some trouble was experienced; for many of the teamsters and others who had been doomed to drink that day whether the exchange of their own tattered and disreputable head-gear for the sound and respectable hats given to the charities, was a fair exchange. These exchanges were frequently made despite efforts to prevent them. Every driver was also seen to appropriate to his own use and tuck away under the horse blankets on the wagon-seat a nice, warm overcoat that he decided would just about fit him. He said that he was no poor as anybody else, and he knew the lady who gave it would be pleased to have him wear it.

Among the articles contributed and piled in the reception-room were 100 loaves of bread, dozens of buns and pounds of several kinds of cakes, a very large unsalted, but by no means fresh, codfish, 20 pounds of raw beef, 20 pounds of ham, 20 pounds of salt fish, a side of pork, cheats of tea, bags of coffee, a barrel of apples, another of potatoes, quantity of old numbers of Harper's Magazine, several dilapidated school-books, a rusty stove, boxes and bags of groceries, in limited quantity, a box of shoe-blacking, scrubbing brushes, a quantity of yellow soap, several blankets, clothing in every state of preservation and dilapidation, and about $100 in cash and checks. The very meanest gift of all in one corner, and consisted of 15 cabbages that had been frozen and thawed until they were rotten. The turkeys and chickens also had a very ancient appearance, and the big codfish looked as though it had left the sea at the beginning of cold weather.

IRRATIONAL CONDUCT AND INTEMPERATE HABITS OF THE TESTATOR.

The trial of the contest in the Berrian will case was resumed before Surrogate Calvin yesterday, and occupied the time of the court during the whole day. Ex-Police Justice Scott testified that he had been intimately acquainted with Daniel Berrian, the testator, for some years; in 1876 witness observed that he was contracting a habit of drinking more than was good for him, and that afterward he was drunk nearly every time witness met him; his acts created the impression on witness' mind that he was irrational, and his conduct became much worse after the death of Mrs. De Zea, which took place in May, 1877; he was very bitter in his language toward Mr. Steele, and often spoke unkindly of persons whom, upon other occasions, he treated and regarded as his friends. Daniel Berrian, the testator's son, a man about 38 years of age, testified that his grandfather died in the Flushing Insane Asylum; witness was engaged in business with his father, and in 1877 and 1878 noticed a decided change in his manner; witness saw him at the St. James Hotel when Mrs. De Zea died; he was deeply under the influence of liquor, and acted like a child; he also saw him on the day he went to Colorado, in 1873; he was then intoxicated and very much excited; when he returned from Colorado witness met him at the ferry-boat; he was carrying some bags, two birds, some specimens of mining things, and when on the ferry-boat, going to Mrs. Steele's house, at Staten Island, he took out two flags and a tin horn, and began to wave the flags and blow on the horn; during the last year of his life he became slovenly in his habits and coarse and blasphemous in his language; witness did not know whether his father was ever married to Mrs. De Zea, but understood and believed he was not; she was buried as Mrs. Berrian; during his last illness, his family was refused admittance to his house in Fifty-fourth-street; witness believed his father was irrational after the death of Mrs. De Zea.

William H. Middleton, Eugene Blackford, and Mr. Shaffer, dealers in fish, gave testimony as to various eccentric or irrational acts done by the testator in and about Fulton Market in 1877 and 1878.

Theodore Berrian, a son of the testator, also gave testimony as to the change in his father's manner and habits at the times referred to.

The trial will be continued this morning.

THE CANAL QUESTION.

State Engineer Horatio Seymour, Jr., who came to this City to attend the Corning-Schenck wedding, called at the Produce Exchange yesterday and had a long conversation with President Edson on the canal question. He seemed in accord with the members of the Exchange in his views on the subject generally, and expressed himself as anxious to do all in his power to help New-York's commercial interests. In view of the fact that his report is soon to appear, he declined to anticipate it so far as the question of freeing the canals is concerned, but he spoke freely of the possible damage that would accrue from the approaching completion of the Canadian improvements, and advocated the deepening of the Erie Canal from nine inches to a foot. This, he thought, would be the cheapest method of providing against the danger. It is estimated that the boats now in use would then be enabled to carry 25 per cent. more grain, or with their present average loads would make the trip in 18 hours quicker time. Should something not be done, the Canadians will, it is asserted, be able to divert from this City 90,000,000 bushels of grain per season, at a loss to New-York averaging 12 cents per bushel. To move that much grain to Europe would require 3,000 ships, which expend at their port of lading on an average $2,000 apiece.

PAULA AND ST. JEROME.

A LOVE WHICH RADIATED FROM THE CROSS—LECTURE BY DR. JOHN LORD.

Dr. John Lord lectured yesterday in Chickering Hall on "Paula and St. Jerome," in illustration of the exalted sentiment which is possible between man and woman without being entangled in the mazes of an earthly love. With Paula, said he, we date the commencement in the great change in the social condition of woman as affected by Christianity. The moral and social condition of woman in the Roman world was described in the last lecture, and, therefore, the lecturer did not dwell upon it. The condition of Jewish women, he said, was better. We admire the exalted characters which illustrated the whole history of the Jews from Rachel and Deborah to Queen Esther. But even among the Jews we do not find the hallowed ministrations of Bethany until Christianity had restored the beatitudes of Eden. All that is glorious in friendship was exhibited in Paula—an illustrious Roman lady of the fourth century, who was rich enough to own a whole city, and who traced her lineage to the proudest names of the Republic. On her conversion she gave away her immense possessions to feed the hungry and clothe the naked, in accordance with the custom of the primitive Church, which exalted the virtue of charity. But her piety was also tinged with asceticism—another natural peculiarity of the Christians of that day—which was simply a protest against the materialism and epicureanism which were undermining society. The highest type of piety was antagonism to prevailing vices. Another peculiarity of Paula was great cultivation, she being able to speak Greek, and being well versed in Hebrew, which was a rebuke to the idleness and ignorance of the fashionable women of her class. Such a woman early fell under the influence of the celebrated Jerome—the great scholar of the Latin Church, whose translation of the Bible into Latin would alone have made him immortal. Like Paula, and she ladies who formed her chosen circle, he was of noble birth and great wealth, which he gave away, and remained poor to the end of his life, supported, in his latter days, by the munificence of his friend. Like Paula, Jerome had a boundless contempt for passing vanities and all the luxuries of Rome, and lived in studious retirement, except when he sought recreation in the society of those high-born ladies, to whom he was an oracle.

The lecturer then considered the remarkable friendship which sprang up between Jerome and Paula, and analyzed its elements; first, that it rarely exists except with equals, since there must be sympathy and congenial tastes in the outward relations of life. It must be confessed that such a friendship is esoteric, exclusive. Jerome and the Bishops and the great ladies, who formed his visiting circle, all belonged to the upper ranks of society. Among each other they freed their minds, as Cicero did to Atticus. The ignorant would not have understood their learned allusions; the narrow-minded might have been shocked at the treatment of their shibboleths; the vulgar would have repelled them by coarseness; the sensual would have disgusted them by their lower tastes. How could Jerome and Paula have discoursed on the fascination of Eastern travel to people contented with the pleasures of the capital? or on the charms of Greek literature to those who only knew the Latin? or on the sublimity of the Hebrew poets to those who despised the Jews, or of the luxury of charity to those who had no superfluities, or the mysteries of faith to speculating rationalists. A Jewish prophet must have seemed a rhapsodist to an Athenian critic, and a Grecian philosopher a conceited cynic to a converted fisherman of Galilee. Luther might not have admired Michael Angelo, and Bossuet might not have sympathized with Calvin, since they belonged to different circles and were exposed to different influences. It was the son of a King whom David cherished with a love surpassing the love of women. It was to Plato that Socrates communicated his moral wisdom. It was with enlightened youth that Augustine surrounded himself in the garden of Cassus. Cæsar walked with Antony, and Cassius with Brutus. We associate Aspasia with Pericles, Cardinal de Retz with the Duchess de Longueville, and Dr. Johnson with Hannah More. Genius, like a magnet, draws congenial natures to itself. The rivalries which alienate are not so destructive as the grossness which repels. Had not Mrs. Thrale been a woman of intellect, the hospitalities she extended to Johnson would have been as irksome as the dinners given to Robert Hall by his plebeian parishioners. Paula was to Jerome what Arabella Johnson was to John Winthrop, because their tastes, their habits, their associations, and their studies were the same—equals in rank, in culture, and perhaps in intellect.

But these things were not the basis of the friendship. The fountain and life of it was that love which radiated from the cross. Such a friendship for a woman it might have been transient—subject to caprice and circumstance, like the gay intercourse between the wits who assembled at the Hotel De Rambouillet, or the sentimental affinities which bind together young men in college or young ladies at school, where their vows of undying attachment are soon forgotten in the struggles and changes of life. Circumstances led to these friendships and circumstances dissolved them, like the merry meetings of Prince Hal and Falstaff—like the companionship of ennuied travelers on the heights of Rhigi or the galleries of Florence. The bonds of Christ bind together the selfish and the worldly is a rope of sand. But the impressive earnestness which overpowers the mind when exalted themes are discoursed about binds them together with a force of sympathy which cannot be overcome by the mutability of a mountain or the beauty of a picture. So there must be some common object in education, or philanthropy, or religion, which has an equal interest to many friends, which binds them together, or else their friendship would wear out. This was pre-eminently the case with Jerome and Paula. That object was monastic life, the extension of which was the darling scheme of the Church, and the great idea, among religious people, arising from a fierce protest against the vices of society, and radiant with celestial glories. There only its good side appeared. The bad side was subsequently developed. It had great fascination to such men as Basil, Chrysostom, and Augustine. Its ideal was lofty. It was theirs of the Church to reach the loftiest heights of religious contemplation. Its vow of poverty was a rebuke to the universal passion for money; its vow of chastity was the resolution to escape from the degrading sensuality which was one of the great evils of the time; and the vow of obedience was a recognition of authority amid social and political disintegration.

For this exalted life both Jerome and Paula panted; he, that he might be more free to pursue his studies, she to stimulate his labors and set a proud example of the happiness to be enjoyed, even amid barren rocks, for, at Rome, the Saint was worried and interrupted and Paula was disgusted with the utter selfishness of society. So, after spending a year in travel with a distinguished circle of friends, Jerome settled in Bethlehem, where Paula afterward joined him, digging out for him a cell in the solid rock. There the happiest days of both were spent, without provoking scandal or causing rude suspicion—so holy is character. There the great works of Jerome were chiefly written. There, too, did the wealthiest woman of the age dispense magnificent charities, so that when she died the whole land mourned for her, and she was buried with distinguished honors.

The lecture closed with a peroration on the true mission and dignity of woman. She made a great stride when she proved herself capable of a pure and lofty friendship. She will make a still greater one when a cynical world shall understand that it is not for the gratification of paltry vanity that she extends her hand of generous courtesy to man, but that he may be aided by the strength she gives in weakness, encouraged by the smiles she bestows in sympathy, and enlightened by the wisdom she has gained by inspiration.

The next lecture—Friday—on "Chrysostom"—a new lecture.

AN ATROCIOUS ASSAULT.

SENT TO STATE PRISON FOR FOUR YEARS AND SIX MONTHS.

John McGee, of No. 216 Mulberry-street, and Thomas Gibney, of No. 402 Mott-street, spent the day together on Nov. 11, and in the course of their ramblings met George Meady, who is a consumptive. In the course of an argument McGee struck Meady, and the attack was resented by Gibney, who struck back at the invalid's assailant. In the evening Gibney met McGee and his father, the latter of whom was armed with brickbats, and a general row ensued. Gibney, thinking he was in danger, struck the younger McGee, whereupon the latter rushed upon him, and drawing a razor from his coat-sleeve, drew it across his throat, inflicting a horrible gash, and also inflicted a number of cuts on his head and face. Gibney was removed to St. Vincent's Hospital, where he remained for several months, and is still compelled to keep his neck enveloped in rolls of lint and plaster. In General Sessions, yesterday, McGee was called to the bar by Assistant District Attorney Lyons, and pleaded guilty to assault with intent to do bodily harm. Judge Gildersleeve said that the fact of the complainant having struck McGee first was a slight provocation, which should be taken into account in passing sentence. The assault, however, was a most atrocious one, and the prisoner had a narrow escape from standing in the position of a murderer. His Honor then sentenced McGee to four years and six months in State Prison.

Arnold, the committee recently appointed by the Chamber of Commerce to confer with the Board of Health in relation to the report made by Prof. Chandler on the adulteration of sugar, called at the rooms of the Health Department yesterday and had a long conference with the members of the board. The conference was private, and at its close President Chandler said the committee were informed that the Board of Health did not desire to enter into the question with a view to its commercial aspects, but simply so far as it affects the public health. A written reply will be made to the communication of the Chamber of Commerce.

THE CUSTOM-HOUSE BATTLE

GEN. ARTHUR DEFENDED AND THE ADMINISTRATION ASSAILED.

INCOHERENT AND FRIVOLOUS CHARGES SENT TO THE SENATE BY SECRETARY SHERMAN—SENATOR CONKLING DENOUNCES THEM AS IMPERTINENT AND DEFENDS THE SUSPENDED COLLECTOR — THE COURSE OF THE ADMINISTRATION SCATHINGLY REVIEWED—THE REJECTION OF GEN. MERRITT'S NOMINATION CONSIDERED CERTAIN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—When the Senate went into executive session to-day there was no thought on the floor or in the corridors that any business of importance was to be transacted. As time went by, however, and the doors of the chamber still remained closed, it became generally noised about that a discussion of more than ordinary interest was in progress. Still, it was impossible to discover the precise subject of the debate, and this evening, because of the more than ordinarily strict injunction of secrecy which has been placed upon Senators, much difficulty has been experienced in procuring accurate details of what occurred. It is known, however, that the entire executive session was occupied by the consideration of the New-York Custom-house cases. The matter was brought up by a communication, in which the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to the request which the Senate made for the reasons which prompted the suspension of Collector Arthur and Naval Officer Cornell, brings a number of general and, as is now generally admitted by those who know their purport, incoherent and inconsequential charges against those gentlemen.

In brief, the communication sets forth that Gen. Arthur was negligent of his official duties; that he was frequently absent from the Custom-house until after 12 o'clock in the day; that he, in this way, set an exceedingly bad example to his subordinates, and decreased their general efficiency. In addition to these personal accusations, the Secretary charges that the Collector failed to carry out what are called "the reforms proposed by the Jay Commission;" that during his administration, the cost of collecting the revenues constantly increased, while the amount of revenues collected as steadily decreased. Specific reference is made to the alleged fact that under Gen. Merritt, who is now performing the duties of Collector, the revenues derived from the duties on personal baggage and on sugar have been very much greater for a given time than for a corresponding period under Gen. Arthur. With this one exception, however, all the charges are of a loose and general character. Nearly all of them are directed against the Collector, it being simply held in regard to Naval Officer Cornell, that his office was a sinecure, and that all the work of his department was done by the Deputy Naval Officer, Mr. Burt.

The Senate was quite full when these charges were read, and all the Senators listened to them with marked attention. When the reading was concluded there was a general turning of faces in the direction of Senator Conkling's seat. He immediately took the floor and made an exceedingly forcible speech in defense of Messrs. Arthur and Cornell, and at the same time a bitter and effective attack upon the Administration. The charges he characterized as frivolous, impertinent, and unworthy of serious attention; in fact, that they were very good evidence of the fidelity and integrity of the suspended officers, showing, as they certainly did, that the Administration, after investigations and examinations, inquiries, public and private, direct and indirect; after months of spying about, done by its secret agents, had only been able to discover against Gen. Arthur that he sometimes failed to appear in his office until the afternoon. The statutes, the Senator continued, provided that no Federal officer should be removed without cause, and he held that the flimsy nature of the charges which had just been read were in themselves proof positive that no good cause existed for the removals of Messrs. Arthur and Cornell. The whole movement on the part of the Administration he characterized as an attempt to coerce the action of the Senate, and, with good effect, he dwelt at considerable length upon the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury had specifically stated to Collector Arthur that no charges could be brought which reflected upon him as a public servant, and that this declaration had been emphatically sustained by President Hayes, who had on two different occasions tendered him [Arthur] important foreign missions. Since the tender of these places had been made, not one new fact had been elicited in regard to Gen. Arthur's management of his office, and by bringing charges against him at this late day, the Senator held that the Administration had, to speak mildly, stultified itself.

Senator Thurman next spoke briefly and to the effect that it was due to the suspended officers and to the people, who were all interested in the conduct of their servants, that the charges and the discussion upon them should be made public.

Senator Edmunds, at this point, suggested a plan by which the desired end might be reached, by moving that the charges be referred to the Committee on Commerce; that the members of that committee be privileged to send copies of the charges to Gen. Arthur and Mr. Cornell, to receive and consider their replies, to make such investigation as is necessary, and to report their conclusions to the Senate. This was agreed to without further discussion of importance, and, shortly afterward, the Senate adjourned.

Among the Senators who could be induced to talk in regard to the proceedings this evening, it was a matter of general comment that no one appeared during the session as the defender of the Administration and its view of the Custom-house cases. The belief was also expressed that Gen. Arthur's position had been greatly strengthened by what, when the facts are known, will doubtless be universally regarded as the groundless charges brought against him. A number of well-informed men express the opinion that the Administration makes the accusations for the sole purpose of gaining time and preventing the immediate rejection of Merritt and company. If this was the end which the charges were intended to secure, there is hardly a doubt that the President will be disappointed. To-night, more strongly than ever before, all the indications point to the rejection of the Acting Collector's nomination. The Committee on Commerce will meet to-morrow, and the charges, together with the old report of the Jay commission, by which they are accompanied, will be forwarded to Messrs. Arthur and Cornell at once, with the request that they make such reply as they deem suitable. It is not considered probable, however, that the committee will take definite action until after the election of a United States Senator in New-York, but there is hardly a doubt that a report in favor of Merritt's rejection will then be made.

In discussing Secretary Sherman's charges this evening, one of the most prominent members of the Senate said that there was in his recollection no precedent for his action in sending such a communication to the Senate. The request for information in regard to the causes which led to Gen. Arthur's removal was made by the Committee on Commerce, and to that committee the Secretary should have sent his charges. He evades this point, however, by stating in opening the communication that he sends it to the Senate "by direction of the President."

A NICE DEMOCRATIC SCHEME.

THE SENATORIAL CAUCUS DISCUSSES THE PROPRIETY OF DELAYING THE APPROPRIATION BILLS AND MAKING AN EXTRA SESSION NECESSARY—PATRONAGE THE OBJECT IN VIEW.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—The Democratic members of the Senate met in caucus to day for the purpose, according to the call, of determining what action should be taken by them in regard to the resolutions recently presented by Senator Edmunds, which declare in brief that the last three constitutional amendments were duly ratified; that the laws already enacted for their enforcement should be faithfully executed, and that Congress should further provide for their enforcement by additional legislation. After some discussion, the subject was referred to a committee of seven, headed by Mr. Thurman, to report to a future meeting of the caucus. A committee of three, with Senator Morgan as Chairman, was then appointed to report what further action, if any, should be taken to secure a repeal of both sections of the Revised Statutes which prescribe test oaths for United States jurors. This business having been disposed of, and a number of "war-horses" and party leaders having had abundant opportunity to talk about bayonet rule and the wrongs of "our people and the down-trodden and defenseless South," the members of the caucus calmly entered upon a discussion of the propriety of delaying the appropriation bills, thereby making an extra session necessary, and so securing to themselves the patronage of the Senate, now in the hands of the Republicans. It was finally agreed that the matter should be discussed further at a joint caucus of the Democrats of both houses.

THE ELECTORAL IRREGULARITIES.

AN INTERESTING DISCOVERY MADE IN THE CASE OF THE PRESIDENTIAL CERTIFICATE FROM ARKANSAS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—The National Republican of to-morrow will announce the discovery of the fact that the names of the seven Electors of Arkansas in 1876 are all signed on the back of the envelope containing the Electoral certificate of that State, in the handwriting of the same person. The story runs that when acting Vice-President Ferry received the Arkansas certificate, he discovered an irregularity therein, in the absence of the signatures of the Electors from the back of the envelope, and permitted it to be sent back to the State for correction, the same as he did in the case of the Louisiana certificate. When it was returned to him he presented it to the two houses in joint convention, and the 7 votes of the State were counted for Tilden and Hendricks.

A BILL FOR JAY GOULD TO FIGHT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—The friends of the Thurman bill, creating a Board of Commissioners to inquire and report to the next Congress what legislation is necessary to enforce the acts of 1862 and 1864, claim that it will certainly pass the House of Representatives. Jay Gould and the Union and Central Pacific lobby, on the other hand, pretend to believe that the bill is unconstitutional, and say that if it is passed they will fight it in the courts.

OVERRUN WITH CANDIDATES.

COMPLICATIONS OF THE CONNECTICUT SENATORIAL CONTEST—EACH CANDIDATE WITH CONFIDENT FRIENDS.

HARTFORD, Conn., Jan. 15.—The rush of politicians here to-day from all parts of the State has been very great, and the merits of Senatorial candidates have been discussed without intermission. The Allyn House and United States Hotel are overrun with the supporters of the different candidates, and the men who are doing the mathematical work for their respective favorites are busy in closed rooms, making up a final canvass. The caucus is to be a closed one, and will be held to-morrow evening, and, from the strong expressions of confidence on behalf of at least three of the candidates, it is evident that some persons are to be overwhelmingly disappointed. Taking the maximum figures given by the canvass for each candidate the aggregate footing largely exceeds the entire number of Republican members in the two branches of the Legislature, which proves the extravagant claims of at least some of the figures.

Gov. Jewell's friends claim that he has an assured lead on the first ballot, while the friends of Gen. Hawley are equally confident that he will go to the front very decidedly. There is no claim on the part of other candidates that either will lead at the outset. Mr. Platt's supporters think he will take the second place, and Gov. Minor's friends are sure that he will be second, though to-night it looks as if the vote for Minor in Fairfield County might be drawn upon some for P. T. Barnum, who has had to-day many urgent follow wrs from that county working for him. This evening a caucus of the members from the county was held, and Mr. Barnum was desirous of having a vote taken for a choice of candidates, and a motion to have an informal ballot was passed, but was subsequently reconsidered. Mr. Harrison's friends hope for such a division elsewhere as to secure additional strength for him after the first or second ballot. The situation is such, with so many conflicting assurances, that it is impossible to say what the probable result will be.

A TREASURER'S BREACH OF TRUST.

LOANING THE NEW-HAVEN ROAD'S MONEY TO FRIENDS — THE AMOUNT ABOUT $20,000.

NEW-HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 15.—The resignation of William A. Burroughs, Treasurer of the New-York, New-Haven and Hartford Railroad Company, will undoubtedly soon be handed in, if it has not been already. Mr. Burroughs is a very young man, living in Bridgeport, who was made Treasurer a little over two years ago, soon after the death of Treasurer Shelton. As has just been discovered, he had been in office hardly six months when he began to loan the company's money to his friends. By a skillful use of checks, he concealed such transactions from the Auditors, but at last they became known to officers of the company. The amount of money disposed of in this way is between $15,000 and $20,000, as stated upon excellent authority. His bondsmen are held in $30,000, and are responsible, so that the company will not lose a cent. Probably the loss of the bondsmen will not exceed $8,000. Mr. Burroughs' breach of trust seems almost inexplicable. Few men of 30 years have been given a position of such responsibility and honor as the one he enjoyed, but which he has thrown away.

REPUBLICAN SENATOR FROM COLORADO.

DENVER, Col., Jan. 15.—Gov. F. W. Pitkin, was inaugurated yesterday. His Message is devoted entirely to State affairs. N. P. Hill, Republican, manager of the Boston and Colorado Smelting works, was elected United States Senator yesterday, receiving more than a two-thirds vote in both branches of the Legislature. The Democrats voted for W. A. H. Loveland.

PIKE COUNTY'S LOSS BY ITS TREASURER.

MILFORD, Penn., Jan. 15.—The County Auditors to-night completed their examination of the accounts of James W. Quick, the defaulting Treasurer of Pike County, Penn. His deficiency, including $7,005 84 on deposit to his credit in the Port Jervis banks, is $16,400 07. It is now generally believed that the defaulter has gone to Europe.

KILLED BY A DYNAMITE EXPLOSION.

OTTAWA, Ontario, Jan. 15.—An explosion took place at Kennedy's phosphate mine, at Buckingham, yesterday. A hole had been loaded with dynamite over night, and in the morning failed to explode. The men attempted to drill it out, when an explosion took place, killing a man named Bigelow, breaking an arm and leg of another, and breaking an arm of a third man.

DEBATING FINANCE BILLS.

WAYS AND MEANS REPORTS BEFORE THE HOUSE.

THE THREE PER CENT. CERTIFICATE BILL PASSED AFTER A LONG DEBATE — MR. KELLEY'S AMENDMENT REJECTED—THE BILL ALLOWING THE PAYMENT OF CUSTOMS DUTIES IN GREENBACKS ALSO PASSED—MR. WOOD'S REFUNDING BILL REPORTED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—Mr. Wood, Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, was not so successful to-day in the House with the legislation from his committee as he expected to be. The committee had prepared several important bills, and it was the general impression and understanding that not more than an hour would be consumed in the passage of any one of them. But the House was not in a working mood, and not a single bill had been passed up to the hour appointed for a recess, until 7:30. The Three Per Cent. Certificate bill was presented by Mr. Wood early in the day, and after explaining its provisions, he gave notice that at the end of an hour he would move the previous question and insist upon a vote. This seemed to put some of the opponents of the bill in bad temper. Mr. Springer wanted to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole, but the Chair ruled him out of order, and Judge Kelley, of Pennsylvania, then got the floor, and offered his amendment making the certificates convertible, with accrued interest, after six months, into lawful money. Gen. Banks opposed the bill because it would injure savings banks, while Mr. Burchard, of Illinois, wanted to tack on, as a second section, a complicated savings-bank clause, most of which was copied from Mr. Waddell's Postal Savings Bank bill. Gen. Butler opposed the bill, saying it was a snare and a delusion, and that he was heart and soul, body and mind, opposed to it. He favored Kelley's amendment, however, if the bill was to pass. Mr. Hewitt opposed the bill, and especially Mr. Kelley's amendment. He made a bitter attack upon the banks, and claimed that this bill seemed to be framed for their benefit.

Mr. Garfield then spoke for five minutes and created the only enthusiasm manifested during the day. He gave a very clear explanation of the objects of the bill and claimed that it would materially aid the refunding of the 6 per cent. bonds, besides giving poor people a secure investment for their money. He compared these $10 certificates to bonds, and said, looking directly at Gen. Butler, that "when we can get 3,000,000 of our people holding these Government securities, then the occupation of those gentlemen who seek to array labor against capital will be gone." This created considerable amusement at the expense of the Essex statesman. Mr. Phillips, of Kansas, opposed the measure and offered a crude amendment for a postal savings system.

Messrs. Chittenden and Townsend, of New-York, defended the work of the committee, and when the latter had finished speaking, the debate had run two hours. Mr. Wood then proposed to move the previous question, but the point was raised that he had lost control of the bill, by permitting Mr. Burchard, of Illinois, to get the floor in his own right, after the first hour had expired. Speaker Randall came to Mr. Wood's rescue and decided otherwise. The previous question was sustained, and the main question ordered on the bill and amendments of Mr. Kelley and Mr. Burchard. The yeas and nays were ordered on Mr. Kelley's amendment, and it was rejected by a vote of 151 to 81. Mr. Burchard's amendment was also rejected by a decided majority. The opponents of the bill then tried to prevent an evening session by a motion to adjourn, but were beaten, and, without action on the bill, the House took a recess until 7:30.

At the evening session Mr. Springer's motion to table the bill was rejected, and the bill was then passed by a vote of 117 to 72.

The bill to authorize the payment of Customs duties in United States notes was next reported by Mr. Wood. Appreciating his mistake on the previous bill, Mr. Wood at once moved the previous question. Mr. Garfield claimed the right, in accordance with an agreement entered into by the Committee on Ways and Means, to offer an amendment providing that United States notes shall be received for Customs duties so long as they are maintained at par with gold. Opposition was manifested to the reception of this amendment from all parts of the House, and a disposition was exhibited to prevent Mr. Garfield from getting in his amendment. Mr. Wood tacitly encouraged this feeling, and did not seem inclined to withdraw his motion for the previous question to receive the amendment. He admitted that the agreement indicated by Mr. Garfield was made in the Committee on Ways and Means, but he preferred to leave the decision of the matter to the House. Mr. Garfield then moved to lay the bill on the table, and demanded the yeas and nays. This brought Mr. Wood to terms, and he withdrew the previous question and admitted the amendment, which was rejected by a decided vote. The bill was then passed as reported from the committee.

After considerable wrangling, Mr. Wood succeeded in getting before the House the bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange 4 per cent. bonds for 6 per cents, and to pay the holders of such bonds three months' interest from the date of surrender and exchange. The previous question was ordered, when the House adjourned. This action leaves the bill as the unfinished business for to-morrow.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY WORK.

BOSTON, Jan. 15.—At the forenoon session of the Woman's Board of Missions greetings were received from other boards. Mrs. Hovey, Secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, stated that its work showed an increasing growth from seven missionaries and $13,000 to 45 missionaries and $55,000. Their principal work was in India. Since the awakening among the Telugos last year, over 90,000 converts had been added to the Church, all in six weeks. The reports from Conference Associations connected with the board were read, and were followed by an address by Miss Johnson, Principal of the Bradford Academy. It was announced that $25,000 had been promised for the Armenia College by a friend, whose name had not been made public. The sessions closed with addresses upon the work in different fields.

COMMODORE GUEST'S FUNERAL.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., Jan. 15.—The funeral services over the remains of the late Commodore John Guest took place this forenoon at his late residence, and were of the simplest character. At the close of the services the body was escorted to the Eastern Railroad station by the officers and marines attached to this station, minute-guns being fired during the march. The remains were placed on the 11 o'clock train for Boston, accompanied by Lieut. Charles Seymour, the Commodore's son-in-law, and Walter E. R. Fentress, his private secretary. Work was suspended at the Navy yard and flags were displayed at half mast throughout the city.

MUTILATED BY A LOCOMOTIVE.

PATERSON, N. J., Jan. 15.—As Charles Pierson, an aged resident of Morristown, was crossing the railway track, near Boonton Junction, in a sleigh, last evening, he was struck by the Oswego express on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railway, and both his legs were torn off above the knees. He died in a few hours, after an amputation had been performed.

ONE DEATH CAUSING TWO MORE.

AILSA CRAIG, Ontario, Jan. 15. — Miss Walker, residing at Brecon Mills, suddenly dropped dead yesterday morning. Her betrothed, Edward Cousins, hearing of her death, cut his throat, and Miss Walker's mother, on seeing her daughter's corpse, also dropped dead.

PARADISE REGAINED.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Jan. 15.—In response to a call issued several weeks ago, Northern men who have settled in the South since the war assembled here to-day from five States, and held a convention in the open-house. They passed a series of resolutions setting forth the advantages of the South to persons seeking homes; declaring that the laws are equally enforced; that Northern settlers are not ostracized, but welcomed, and that in no part of the country do all classes enjoy a larger measure of liberty. The resolutions were passed unanimously, and amid applause.

LOUISIANA LAWLESSNESS.

TESTIMONY AS TO FRAUDS AT THE NEW-ORLEANS ELECTION—KILLING OF NEGROES AT CONCORDIA.

NEW-ORLEANS, La., Jan. 15.—At the meeting of the Teller committee to-day, Clement L. Walker, attorney, of New-Orleans, testified concerning the election in this city, that he believed the returns promulgated were not indicative of the true results, votes polled for Conservatives being counted for Democrats. He charged generally that there were irregularities and frauds in the conduct of the election, and said: "I have sworn statements of parties who witnessed the frauds. The Citizens' Party was denied representation at the polls, on the ground that it was not a party, but a faction; to judge from the class of men appointed Commissioners by the Democratic Party, a fair return of the vote was not expected; the counting of the vote at the polls was in most instances made in secret or by men determined to elect the Democratic ticket, and I am satisfied the statements of the vote at many polls made up for any deficit in the vote for the Democratic Party; aside from the falsity of made-up returns, illegal votes were cast, there being a great deal of repeating; the Conservative Party was organized for the purpose of putting respectable men in office."

E. Kennell, colored, a Coroner, of Concordia, testified: "There were seven men killed, all colored; I held an inquest over six; five were hanged and one shot; some were killed in November and others in October; one was shot in a field while picking cotton; some mounted men called him to the fence and shot him; those that were hanged were hanged at night; I do not know the men who did the hanging; some of the outlaws were white and some black; Commodore Smallwood was drowned in Lake St. John; they tied weights around him and threw him in at night; about 70 or 80 men were concerned in the affair; they drowned him because they claimed that he had threatened to kill Mr. Brown and his family; all that was learned of those who were killed was learned from colored people of the vicinity; George Washington, a colored resident of Concordia Town, and one Vermillion, Coroner of the parish, saw a body of from 65 to 70 armed men prowling through the parish; they recognized one of the men as Mr. Young; the crowd was going to Davidson's plantation, where they captured six or seven men and also some horses, one of which was mine; a few hours afterward I heard that a man was hanging in the graveyard; I went there and found it was H. Smith; he was cut down by his brother.

Charles W. Johnson, J. A. Johnson, David Young, Charles Lincoln, and M. D. Randolph, all colored, of Concordia, testified to general charges of intimidation and fraud in the late election.

G. L. Walton, of Concordia, member of the Legislature, denied in effect the charges made by previous witnesses.

THE ILLINOIS SENATORSHIP.

PRESENT ASPECTS OF THE CONTEST—GEN. LOGAN STILL CONFIDENT OF SUCCESS.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 15.—Assistant Secretary of the Treasury John B. Hawley arrived this afternoon to argue a case in the Supreme Court, and it is thought he may figure in the Senatorial contest. There is a rumor that in case Secretary Sherman resigns, to run for Governor of Ohio, the Secretaryship may be tendered to Mr. Farwell, but as it would hardly do to have the Secretary and the Assistant Secretary from the same State, if Hawley could be sent to the Senate now, the difficulty would be obviated. Collector Smith has left. The Logan men regard his visit as a notification that the Administration is opposed to Logan and feels very sore about it. So far, the only apparent result of Smith's visit has been to drive four or five Logan members away from Logan, who is not quite as strong as before, but is still confident of controlling the caucus on Friday night. There is no doubt that he still leads in the race, and, unless there is a great and sudden change, he will be nominated. Whether his nomination would be equivalent to an election, remains to be seen. The Oglesby and Farwell men are working vigorously, and claim that before Friday night they will have votes enough to beat Logan in the caucus.

THE RENO INVESTIGATION.

TESTIMONY OF LIEUT. WALLACE—THE WITNESS THOUGHT RENO ACTED WISELY.

CHICAGO, Jan. 15.—In the Reno inquiry to-day, Lieut. George D. Wallace, of the Seventh Cavalry, of Fort Lincoln, Dakota, was called to the witness stand. He testified that he was in the command of Major Reno on June 25, 1876; that Custer ordered Reno to charge upon the Indians; that he heard no order so that effect given by Reno to his troops, except when the retreat was made, after the first engagement. In the opinion of the witness, it was absolutely necessary for Reno to change his position from his skirmish line as a matter of safety for his troops, for the Indians had so worked into their rear that they were almost completely surrounded. The only advantageous point where a stand could be made was on the crest of the hill across the Little Big Horn River, where Reno eventually took up his position. The witness stated that he heard Custer tell Reno to charge the Indians, and add, "We will support you." In his opinion, as a soldier, Reno did the most advisable thing he could when he changed his position. Reno, he said, made an attempt to move out toward where it was supposed Custer was, but not being able to keep the wounded up with the column, it became necessary to fall back to the original position on the hill, and there remain. When they went into the fight Reno's men were worn out, and the animals were fatigued, having made forced marches, and both going without regular food nearly a day. When asked if he saw anything during that engagement to reflect upon the military character of Major Reno, the witness replied that he had told all he knew about it.

During the examination to-day the question was raised by Major Reno whether the inquiries should cover anything more than the movements of his command, and the court decided that everything connected with that battle from June 25 to June 26 should be taken into consideration.

PRIZE-FIGHTERS TO BE TRIED.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 15.—At the Central Station this afternoon Arthur Chambers, John King, and John H. Clark were arraigned on the charge of conspiring to fight a prize-fight. Several officers testified that King and Clark were introduced, in company with Chambers, to the audience of the Grand Central Theatre, on Jan. 7, as the participants in a prize-fight which was to take place. The defendants were held in $1,000 each for a further hearing on Wednesday next.

CONFESSING TO SIX MURDERS.

OMAHA, Neb., Jan. 15.—Richards, who murdered five persons in this State last Fall, was taken this morning, at 4 o'clock, from Kearney to Minden (county seat) for trial. He confesses six murders. He was removed under strong guard. Special dispatches this evening say that much excitement prevails in the county. About 400 people have already assembled to attend the trial, and it is doubtful if Richards ever comes back. Very little more excitement would end in lynching the prisoner.

A POSTMASTER'S CRIME.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Jan. 15.—John Back, the Postmaster at Frenchburg, Ky., was arrested yesterday charged with rifling valuable letters. It is alleged that he has broken open about 30 letters in the last three months.

TROY'S LIQUOR-DEALERS IN TROUBLE.

TROY, N. Y., Jan. 15.—Of 460 liquor-dealers indicted here for the violation of the Excise law, 138 pleaded guilty, the fines aggregating $1,897. The others are to be tried to-morrow.

GETTING READY AT ALBANY

SPEAKER ALVORD SELECTING HIS COMMITTEES.

WHO ARE TO HAVE THE PRINCIPAL LEADING POSITIONS—SOME OF THE DEMOCRATS TO BE APPOINTED—THE DEMOCRATIC SENATORIAL CAUCUS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 15.—Speaker Alvord was busy all this evening in making up his committees, and at midnight was still at work, but was not ready to announce anything for publication. The heads of the principal committees will be about as hitherto announced. Sloan will have the Ways and Means; the Judiciary goes to Strahan; Canals to Hurd, of Erie; Affairs of Cities to Hayes; Railroads to Halsey, of Cayuga; Insurance probably to Knowles, although that was not decided; Banks to Sawyer, of Tioga; Militia and Rules to Husted. The Chairmanship of the Committee on Commerce and Navigation has not yet been decided. Fish, of Putnam, will probably have a place on the Committee on the Affairs of Cities, and Brooks and Holahan will be among the Democrats who are to go on the Ways and Means.

Of the composition of the committees, aside from the Chairmen, there has been little or no speculation, and the Speaker and his friends have kept their counsel well enough to make it impossible to predict anything as positive.

The Democrats will hold a caucus next Monday night to nominate a candidate for United States Senator. They have no candidate as yet, but it is surmised here that the compliment will be paid to Lieut.-Gov. Dorsheimer of using his name. It is said that the nomination of Senator Conkling in the Republican caucus will be made by Gen. Husted.

BILLS SUBMITTED FOR ACTION.

REGULATING THE USE OF PROXIES IN COMPANY ELECTIONS—IN REFERENCE TO NEW-YORK'S WATER SUPPLY—THE DISPOSITION OF TRUST FUNDS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 15.—Reports began to be circulated this afternoon that Speaker Alvord was sick in his room at the Delavan House, and that it would be impossible for him to preside in the Assembly Chamber. The reports gained ground, and were confirmed to-night, when, at 8 o'clock, Mr. Husted appeared in the Speaker's desk and assumed the place of the absent Speaker. In his usual emphatic manner he rapped for order, and, espying a forgetful man in the gallery whose head was covered, he ordered him peremptorily to remove his hat, and then invited the clergyman present to make the opening prayer.

He then proceeded immediately to the regular order, calling for bills by counties. A large number of members seized the opportunity to get bills before the House. Mr. Stegman, of Brooklyn, introduced an Excise bill, which he says was approved in Brooklyn by both the liquor-dealers and the temperance interest. It applies to the State, and places the different grades of licenses at from $50 to $250. The hotel clause is omitted, but the Sunday-closing stipulation is retained. The same member introduced a bill to make mechanics' leins a prior claim on all property upon which they have performed any work. Mr. Baker, of Monroe, will probably excite some opposition among the publishers of country newspapers by the introduction of his bill to repeal the law authorizing the publication of the session laws in two newspapers in each county in the State. The County Treasurers bill, introduced by him, requires deposits to be made weekly by all County Treasurers except those of Kings and New-York Counties.

There was a moderate number of New-York bills introduced. Mr. Strahan introduced three of the number, all of which, he says, were suggested by the Message of Mayor Cooper. They are not new in their provisions, having been incorporated in the Hayes charter of last year.

Mr. Simonson introduced a bill providing that a proxy to vote in a life insurance election shall be valid only for an election specified in the proxy. The text of the bill is as follows:

SECTION 1. No proxy hereafter given by the owner of any policy of insurance, or by the owner of any share or shares in the capital stock of any life insurance company chartered by the laws of this State, giving authority to vote at any election of Trustees or Directors, shall be valid or legal except for a single election, to be specified particularly in such proxy, nor unless such proxy be duly acknowledged before, and attested by, a notary public or Commissioner of this State, nor shall it be valid for any purpose for more than one year after its execution and acknowledgment. All proxies heretofore given shall become void in two months after the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. It shall not be lawful for any Trustee, Director, officer, agent, or employe of any life insurance company chartered by the laws of this State, to procure, to hold, to vote upon, or to use, directly or indirectly, the proxy of any policy-holder or shareholder in such company, and any votes offered or cast in violation of this provision shall be invalid and rejected. It shall be the duty of the officers of every such life insurance company to send to the Post Office address of each policy-holder entitled to vote for Trustees or Directors therein, not less than 60 days before the date of each election, a blank form of proxy, together with a copy of the last financial statement of the company.

SEC. 3. Any violation of this act shall subject the offender or offenders to a penalty of not less than $500 or to an imprisonment of not less than 60 days.

SEC. 4. This act shall take effect immediately.

Mr. Fish introduced a bill in relation to public trust funds. This provides that it shall be the duty of all State and municipal officers, of all Directors, and other officers of corporations, and of all Trustees, and of all other persons acting in a fiduciary capacity authorized to loan money, or to deposit public trust, or corporate money or funds in any bank or other depository, or in the hands of any person or firm, to lend or deposit all such funds or money, wherever the funds or money lent or deposited shall be United States gold coin or any currency, check, bill, or draft, payable or convertible into gold at par, upon the express contract that payment shall be made in United States gold coins of the standard of weight and fineness established by the laws of the United States at the time the contract or deposit shall have been made.

Mr. Fish also introduced a bill to increase the water supply of New-York, the same bill being introduced by Mr. Robertson in the Senate. This is as follows:

SECTION 1. The Commissioners appointed, or to be appointed, under chapter 445 of the Laws of 1877, in which proceeding more than one claim is embraced, may conduct their examination as to any one of such claims at such time or times as shall seem best to them, and they may in their discretion postpone the ascertainment of the compensation to be made in such claim until any time prior to the final determination of the proceedings, and they may, in their discretion, proceed to the determination of compensation to be made to any one of such claimants, notwithstanding the fact that the examination and consideration of some other claim or claims is still pending, open, and undetermined, and such action on the part of the Commissioners in any proceeding now pending is hereby ratified and confirmed.

Sec. 2. The Commissioners referred to in the first section may take an any specified claims, and determine the compensation to be made therefor, and make a separate report with reference thereto, which report shall, as to the claims therein specified, be the report required in the act aforesaid, and the subsequent action with reference thereto shall be had in the same manner as though no other claims were embraced in such proceeding, which, however, shall continue as to all claims upon which no such separate determination and report is made.

SEC. 3. The Commissioners appointed to take lands and extinguish rights at Lakes Mahopac and Kirk, and on the Muscoot River in Putnam and Westchester Counties may, as to any claims embraced in such proceedings, award compensation for the absolute and entire exercise of such right as shall be specified in their report and may award therefor a modified compensation, and the payment by the same city of such modified compensation shall entitle it only to the exercise of such modified right, provided that the determination heretofore made as to the limits of elevation and depression shall not be altered or recommended, but such limits shall remain unalterable.

SEC. 4. The Commissioners may determine the compensation to be made to any person whose claims may be submitted to them, by the written consent both of such person and of the Commissioner of Public Works of the City of New-York, and from the filing of such consent with the said Commissioners they shall proceed with reference to such claim in the same manner as though it were embraced within the original petition.

Mr. Brooks came forward with a concurrent resolution of congratulation that resumption had been accomplished, and the resolution was adopted without an objection, as follows:

Resolved, (If the Senate concur,) That the Legislature of the State of New-York, expressing the sense and feeling of the great body of the people of the State and of the United States, congratulate its own citizens, and the country at large, upon the fact of the general resumption of specie payments after a lapse of nearly 17 years; and that we commend such financial legislation and practical administration in the future as will prevent any return of the calamity of an unredeemable paper currency.

The Assembly resolved, on Mr. Sloan's motion, to hold sessions hereafter, until otherwise ordered, at 11 o'clock in the morning. John E. Brodsky's petition to be awarded the seat of Daniel Patterson, the member from the Eighth District of New-York, who, Mr. Brodsky alleges, was elected by fraud, was presented by Mr. Langbein, and was referred to the Committee on Contested Seats. James Tighe, of Kings County, also presented, through Mr. Sheridan, his petition to be seated in place of Mr. Trowbridge, of the Fourth District. Mr. Skinner, who is determined to head off all appointments, with the view of reducing the force of the House employes, promptly objected to the appointment of an express messenger, and Mr. Sharpe's resolution calling for the appointment of the messenger went over in default of unanimous consent.

Mr. Husted then made the formal announcement of Mr. Alvord's illness, and also gave the information to the House that the committees would be announced to-morrow, and that the appointments would be made next week. With this announcement the business of the night was over, and the Assembly adjourned, having been in session only 35 minutes. Thirty-six bills were introduced in that time.

In the Senate, Mr. Goodwin called up his resolution calling for an examination to ascertain whether the expenses of the Senate cannot be reduced. The debate that followed was participated in by Goodwin and Hughes, the latter urging the necessity of greater economy in a long and fluent speech. Mr. McCarthy, who was favorable to extending the economical movement, asked that the resolution be amended so that the proposed examination should include all the departments of the State Government. In this comprehensive form the resolution was adopted.

AN ELEVATED ROAD FOR BOSTON.

CHIEFLY TO CONNECT RAILROAD AND SHIPPING STATIONS—PROMPT ACTION PROBABLE.

BOSTON, Jan. 15.—A scheme for an elevated freight railway in this city has been so far developed within the past few days that surveys will be begun to-morrow, and within a week it is expected that petition will be made to the Legislature for the charter, when plans and estimates will be submitted, and the enterprise pushed with energy and promptness. The purpose is to connect the extensive South Boston flats, which are being improved for the reception of freight at tide-water, with the Fitchburg, Boston and Lowell, Eastern, and Boston and Maine roads. The track is to be double, and the lower line will pass from these roads through Prince and Commercial streets and Atlantic-avenue, crossing Fort Point Channel at Oliver-street. The line will be about a mile and a quarter long, and, it is thought, will cost, with terminal switches, engines, &c., less than $1,000,000.

At present freight is transferred by the Union Railway, a surface road passing through the streets, at a cost of $2 50 a car, and the city restricts it to trains of no more than seven cars, and to slow running, not much faster than a man can walk. With the coming competition for low freights and quick transportation, the proprietors of this road see their opportunity. They say they can transport as low as 50 cents a car, and with great dispatch. Their route passes by the best wharfage property in the city and the great warehouses, which it is proposed to connect with the road by switches running into their second stories. Two gentlemen connected with New-York elevated roads have been in the city, and since Saturday have gone over the entire ground with three leading Boston capitalists, and it is understood that these gentlemen are to be the heaviest investors. The plan of connecting the Boston and Albany and the Old Colony with the flats by a half-mile line of elevated road is also under consideration, but it has not yet taken shape.

KANSAS PROSPERITY.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Jan. 15.—A dispatch to the Globe-Democrat, from Topeka, Kan., gives a synopsis of Gov. St. John's Message, which will be sent to the Legislature to-morrow. It is long, and refers entirely to State affairs. The financial condition of the State is shown to be good, the receipts last year having exceeded the expenditures over $311,000, and the bonded debt being only about $1,132,000, of which all but about $468,000 is held by the State in the sinking and school funds. The value of public school property is placed at $4,527,000, an increase of $250,000 in the past two years. The permanent school fund amounts to nearly $1,450,000. Referring to the Indian raid last year, the Governor recommends an appropriation sufficient to equip and pay a force of men when occasion requires to patrol the frontier, and promptly give warning of approaching danger, and aid the settlers when necessary. He also recommends the appointment of a committee to ascertain the damage sustained by citizens by reason of the raid, with a view that the necessary steps may be taken to secure payment thereof. He advises the revision and amendment of the Railroad law relating to passenger and freight rates, with a view to the more equitable adjustment of them, both for the people and the roads.

MISSOURI SENATORIAL NOMINATION.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 15.—The Globe-Democrat's dispatches from Jefferson City say the Democrats in caucus to-night nominated Gen. James Shields for the Senatorial short term, over David H. Armstrong, by a vote of 88 to 37. Gen. Shields has represented Illinois and Minnesota in the United States Senate. After more than two hours of filibustering, and several motions to adjourn had been voted down, the matter of nominating a Senator for the long term was postponed until to-morrow night, by a vote of 65 to 60, and the caucus adjourned.

AN ACTRESS' SERIOUS INJURIES.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 15.—Miss Louise Pomeroy, the actress, who was injured in a railway accident near Shreveport, on Jan. 10, is reported by the attending physician to be very low. Miss Stella Willis is improving, and the other members of the company, who were more or less injured, have recovered.

*DEATH AT O

IN FAVOR OF THE BRIDGE.

A QUICK DECISION ON APPEAL.

THE SUPREME COURT, GENERAL TERM, REVERSES JUDGE BARRETT'S RULING—A MANDAMUS ORDERED TO COMPEL THE CONTROLLER TO ISSUE ONE MILLION OF BONDS.

The appeal by the Brooklyn Bridge Trustees from Judge Barrett's order refusing a writ of peremptory mandamus to compel Controller Kelly to borrow $1,000,000 and pay over the same to the Trustees, was heard and decided at once by the General Term of the Supreme Court, yesterday, before Chief-Justice Davis and Judges Brady and Ingalls. The $1,000,000 is this City's third of the total amount required by the Trustees for the past year, the other two-thirds having been furnished by the City of Brooklyn. Under the act of 1875, which took the construction of the bridge out of the hands of the Brooklyn Bridge Company and transferred it to the Trustees appointed by the authorities of this City and Brooklyn, the two cities were directed by the Legislature to contribute $3,000,000 to complete the work, in the proportion of two-thirds of that sum from Brooklyn and one-third from this City. Controller Kelly refused to issue bonds and pay their proceeds to the Trustees, claiming it was apparent that the Trustees had not prepared their plans so as to insure the completion of the bridge for the $3,000,000, which amount, he insisted, was fixed to limit the total cost of the work; that the Board of Estimate and Apportionment had not authorized him to issue bridge bonds in response to the demands from the Trustees, and that the Common Council had repealed the ordinance by which the issuing of the bonds was permitted. The bridge Trustees then applied to Judge Barrett for a mandamus against Controller Kelly, and their application was rejected.

Argument on the appeal of the Trustees to the General Term of the Supreme Court was begun early yesterday morning, and was continued until after 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The bridge Trustees were represented by Secretary of State Evarts and Messrs. A. J. Vanderpoel, Austin Abbott, and E. M. Cullen. Corporation Counsel William C. Whitney and Messrs. W. H. Arnoux and John H. Strahan conducted the case for Controller Kelly and the other respondents. Affidavits by Henry C. Murphy and the Controller were first submitted to the court. Mr. Murphy recited the history of the authorization and construction of the bridge, and the circumstances of the demands made upon, and rejected by, the Controller. The affidavits of the latter were presented, one declaring that the bridge is an obstacle to navigation, that it was begun with corrupt intentions on the part of its projectors, as was shown by the testimony of William M. Tweed before the Aldermanic investigating committee; and that, although the act of 1875 makes ample provision for the proper completion of the bridge, the Trustees have refused to bring their expenditures within the limit thus set. The second affidavit sets forth the failure of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment to authorize the issue of more bridge bonds, and the repeal by the Board of Aldermen, of the ordinance respecting the issue of such bonds. A rebutting affidavit of President Murphy denies the charge made by the Controller that the Trustees have been wasteful in their expenditures.

Mr. Vanderpoel began the argument on behalf of the Trustees. He contended that the limit of money prescribed by the act of 1875 is a limit on the amount of the contribution by the two cities under the legislation already had, and that a further contribution, if found necessary, would be a matter for future legislation. The necessary cost of the bridge cannot be determined by the courts, or by any other tribunal than the Trustees; and to maintain the objections made to the payment of the requisitions which have been made by the Trustees, it must appear clearly from the statute not only that the sum of $8,000,000 was expressed as the limit of their power in connection with the bridge, but also that a plan which it should be practicable under all contingencies to execute fully within that limit, is made a condition in their power to draw up to that limit.

Mr. Vanderpoel was followed by Messrs. Strahan and Arnoux, both of counsel for the respondents, who argued that the Trustees were not qualified to apply for, or to receive, a writ of mandamus, and that these and similar questions, which it only is to be found in an equitable action, and that the proceedings were therefore defective. They urged that the limitation of the contribution of the two cities to $3,000,000 was a limitation of the expenditure necessary for the completion of the bridge, a further contribution was authorized by the Legislature; that the bridge as now being constructed interferes with navigation, and the decision of the Secretary of War to that effect is not to be set aside lightly; and, finally, that the bridge was being built in an extravagant manner, and will prove to be a useless and dangerous structure, certain to give way at some time to the force of the wind.

Mr. Evarts, in opening the concluding argument for the Trustees, said: "The discussion has shown that the counsel on both sides regard the real question to be determined by your Honors to be that which was determined by the learned Judge below. In a very intelligent and very discreet examination of the subject he came to the conclusion that there was no question to be determined here, except as to the true meaning and construction of the act of 1875. We are clear of any constitutional question entirely in this discussion. Whatever is applicable to any question of unconstitutionality is withdrawn from our present discussion by our learned opponents." After considering the question whether the remedy by mandamus was the proper one, Mr. Evarts proceeded to the question of the obstruction of the highway of commerce, arguing briefly that the action of Congress and the Federal authorities had set that matter at rest. He then entered upon an exhaustive discussion of the construction of the law of 1875, claiming that there was no limitation upon the total cost of the bridge.

At the conclusion of Mr. Evarts' argument, Chief-Justice Davis, after a brief consultation with his associates, Judges Brady and Ingalls, announced, orally the decision at which they had arrived: "The court is fully impressed," he said, "with the importance of this case and the questions involved in it, and also of the importance of a speedy determination of those questions, first, because of the necessity of progress while the result, if the determination be favorable to the Trustees; and secondly, if the case is finally to be determined by the court of last resort, to expedite as far as possible the obtaining of an early decision. We are all of opinion, and entertain no sort of doubt about its correctness, that the learned court below erred in its construction of the statute. There are only two important questions involved in the case. One first relates to the remedy, whether it be by mandamus or by some other method of enforcing the rights of the Trustees, and whether, if a mandamus be issued, it be an alternative or peremptory writ. The second is the proper legal principle in all cases where there is a clear right, connected with a clear legal duty, independent of extrinsic facts to be determined or passed upon by a court or jury. In this case, we conceive there is no reasonable doubt that a legal right exists, if the construction of the statute be as we think, and that the legal duty has been remitted by the statute, and by the subsequent action of the Common Council of this City, to the Controller, and he is charged with the necessary power for its execution, being directed to issue bonds as provided by the statute." The subsequent resolution of the Common Council, the court holds, was not a repeal or modification of the former ordinance, but was simply a request to the Controller not to take action upon the ordinance until he should have obtained an adjudication by the court upon the matter, to which the Controller, in the due course of administration of his duties, should pay proper respect; but if he disregarded it, it would subject him to no serious censure. The court, however, would not, under the circumstances, feel certain in saying that the Controller was justified in taking the opinion of the court before acting. Judge Davis then proceeded to the consideration of the other questions, whether or not the construction of the statute by the court below upon the statute was the correct one. He recited the provisions of the statute, which appropriated $8,000,000, to be drawn upon under the act as prescribed, in the proportion of two-thirds from the City of Brooklyn, and one-third from the City of New-York, and no more than $1,000,000 from New-York, nor more than $2,000,000 from Brooklyn, should be called for in any one year. The statute provided that the right to call for this money should terminate whenever $8,000,000 should have been expended in these proportions. It also met another contingency, which was that the public expense and cost of the bridge, and all the necessary structures connected with it, might not reach $8,000,000, and so another limitation was made by the court thought, upon the power of the Trustees. That limitation was expressed in the concluding words, which the court thought had been misunderstood as being a restriction upon the total cost under all circumstances. The provision reads: "Until the said bridge shall be fully completed, and open for public travel, and the debts and liabilities incurred therefor shall be fully paid." The true significance of these words, taken in connection with the other provisions of the section, the court thought, was that the drafts upon the two cities, in the proportions named, might continue against the $8,000,000 "until the said bridge shall be fully completed and open for public travel," &c.; that is, the right to call for these drafts upon the $8,000,000 should terminate when that event occurred, so that if the bridge were completed for a less sum, then the right ceased. This made the statute sensible and consistent with the object in view, and showed no intent to provide that the bridge itself should be limited under all circumstances in its cost to the sum of $8,000,000 appropriated, but left it open to the consideration of a future Legislature, after the expenditure of the $8,000,000, to say whether, in the exercise of its absolute power, it should make such further provision as should be necessary to complete the structure. The Legislature might impose the payment of any further appropriation upon New-York or Brooklyn, or upon the whole State, or distribute it in such localities and amounts as that depository of absolute power in the matter should deem expedient. "We therefore think," concluded Chief-Justice Davis, "that a legal right exists on the part of the Trustees and a legal duty on the part of the Controller in this matter, and that a mandamus directing the Controller, in pursuance of the statute, to issue bonds and pay over the money should be granted."

FAILURES AND SUSPENSIONS.

HON. WILLARD CARPENTER, OF INDIANA, BANKRUPT—CLOSING OF A SOUTHERN BANK.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 15.—An Evansville, Ind., dispatch says much excitement was created there by the announcement of the failure of Hon. Willard Carpenter. For 40 years he had been one of the most wealthy and influential men in that region, his possessions being estimated at from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000. He owns an enormous amount of real estate in that city and State. Two years ago he endowed a free college, to be called "Willard College," with property worth from $350,000 to $500,000. This endowment soon after, at the generally expressed desire of the citizens, who were invited to choose, was diverted to the erection of a museum and public library and the furnishing of a public park. The failure will not affect these schemes. Mr. Carpenter was the organizer of the project to build a straight-line railroad from Evansville to Indianapolis, but the intrigues of rival corporations caused its failure, and burdened Mr. Carpenter with costly contracts, which depleted his purse. He was in business with Jonathan J. Merritt, of Brooklyn, N. Y., at this time, and became greatly indebted to him in pressing completions. Mr. Merritt's heirs brought suit for $50,000, and Mr. Carpenter testified that he was not worth $300. He is nearly 80 years old. It is probable the failure will only affect Mr. Merritt's heirs and the Air Line creditors.

EUFAULA, Ala., Jan. 15.—The People's Bank is closed, and its suspension is announced.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Jan. 15.—The "bucket-shops" of Bernard, Landis & Co. and Spadman & Co. have suspended and gone into the hands of the Sheriff, who found no assets, although a considerable amount of money was taken in by both firms up to within an hour or two of the suspension. The recent rise in the stock market caused the collapse.

OBJECTING TO THE CODE.

A few members of the legal profession, possibly a dozen in all, assembled last night in an upper room, at the Park-Avenue Hotel, in pursuance of a call for the formation of an association to oppose further legislative action on the supplement to the Code of Civil Procedure, vetoed by Gov. Robinson last Winter, and to use all available means to obtain the repeal of the existing, and the restoration of the former, Code. As Mr. George Ticknor Curtis, temporary President of the association, did not appear, the organization of the meeting was delayed a long time, and Mr. David Dudley Field, Mr. Anthony R. Dyett and others fell into a desultory recital of the faults of the existing rules of procedure. But at length, as the evening wore away, it was decided to proceed with the election of permanent officers, and the following gentlemen, officers of the temporary organization, were confirmed by acclamation: President, George Ticknor Curtis; Secretary and Treasurer, A. P. Sprague; Executive Committee—Theodore W. Dwight, Joseph S. Bosworth, Henry H. Anderson, Joseph R. Flanders, Anthony R. Dyett, E. Cook, J. C. Spencer, S. J. Crooks, John Townshend, J. S. Auerback, Cephas Brainerd, Herbert A. Turner, James A. Kelly, Samuel G. Courtney, F. F. Marbury, Ethan Allen, and Ira D. Warren. A series of resolutions was offered and passed approving the Governor's veto of the supplement to the Code passed by the Legislature last Winter; protesting against hasty legislation on the subject at this session; disapproving the portions of the new Code now in force as intricate, badly arranged, and overloaded with unnecessary details; providing for the circulation of a memorial, to be presented to the Legislature in behalf of these views, and directing that a committee of five be appointed by President Curtis to prepare a bill in accordance with the resolutions above set forth, such bill to be pressed upon the attention of the Legislature at the present session.

INDIANS ELUDING ARMY VIGILANCE.

FORT ROBINSON, Neb., Jan. 15.—The Indians in the bed of Indian Creek, on the Hat Creek road, about 20 miles from this post, seeing no avenue of escape, determined Sunday night to retain their present vantage-ground. Consequently, in anticipation of a more vigorous attack on the part of the troops, they further strengthened their position by improving their rifle-pits during the night. At 12 o'clock next day a 12-pound Napoleon gun was brought upon the scene of action, but, owing to the nature of the position assumed by the savages, the gun could not be sufficiently depressed to play upon the position. A number of shells and solid shot were thrown as near as possible to their position, but apparently without effect. Affairs stood thus at dark on the night of Monday. On Tuesday morning, on making a reconnoissance of the ground held by the Indians the day before, the officers were informed, to their dismay, that they had escaped during the night. Owing to the troops having no provisions on hand, it was found impracticable to follow their trail; consequently the troops have just arrived in camp with a view to equipping a pack train, and starting on a prolonged scout after the savages.

SAYRES' EXECUTION CONSIDERED CERTAIN.

HARRISBURG, Penn., Jan. 15.—The action of the Supreme Court, in virtually affirming the constitutionality of the law relative to the writs of error in the Sayre murder case, makes Martin Bergen's execution, at Pottsville, to-morrow, certain. Gov. Hartranft having refused to consider favorably an application for a further respite for that reason. As soon as he receives the necessary papers in the Sayre case, the Governor will issue another death-warrant, and the time for the execution will be put far enough ahead to enable Sayre's case to be fully heard by the Board of Pardons. The plea will be made that he is not a fit subject for hanging, on the alleged ground of insanity. As the Board of Pardons was unanimous in recommending the commutation of the death sentence of Binaius Pistorius, the Catholic priest, to life imprisonment, the Governor will probably comply with its request, although there is considerable opposition to interference with the execution of the law. The widow of the murdered man [Jacquette] has written a letter to the Governor, in which she earnestly protests against a commutation.

OUR TAXABLE PROPERTY.

HOW PERSONS EVADE TAXATION ON PERSONAL PROPERTY—A RUSE TO THE TAX OFFICE—SOME FACTS AND FIGURES OF INTEREST.

Since Monday last the Commissioners of Taxes and Assessments have been busily engaged in listening to applications of persons who claim the right of exemption from taxes on personal property, and receiving notices of intention to apply for a reduction of taxes on real estate, when the proper time shall arrive for making such applications. Already, hundreds of persons have appeared before the Commissioners and wiped out their liability for the payment of personal taxes by making affidavit that they own no personal property over and above their debts, and, as there are upon the books of the department the names of 40,000 persons liable to taxation on personal property, bank shares, &c., and as the time allowed them in which to appear before the Commissioners and "swear off" does not expire until April 30, it is, of course, impossible to form any estimate of the amount which will finally remain to be collected, or to institute any intelligent comparison of the probable personal tax levy of 1879 with that of 1878 and the years previous. As regards the aggregate amount of real estate subject to taxation in 1879, the Commissioners are of the opinion that, owing to the large number of new buildings which have been erected during the past year, mostly in the Nineteenth and Twenty-second Wards, and in some localities down town, the sum will at least equal, if not considerably exceed, that of last year, and they hope to be able to effect a slight reduction in the rate of taxation. But in the matter of personal taxation, owing to the actual operations of the law of exemptions, they confess themselves at a loss to form any estimate of what the result will be. Taking the course of events during the past six years as a basis of calculation, it is presumed that the decrease in the amount realized from personal taxation will fall short of that realized in 1878 at least $10,000,000, or about $19,000,000 less than was raised from that source in 1872. Part of this decrease, however, is attributable to an actual shrinkage in values of personal property and stagnation in business. For instance, the stock in trade of a merchant which, in 1872, might have represented an actual cash value of $100,000, may now be worth not more than $50,000, or a man who, in 1872, may have been doing a good business, may not now be paying his expenses, and if his debts were all paid, might not be worth a dollar. And men are every day becoming better posted in regard to their rights under the law, and are more generally inclined to take advantage of them. As an illustration in point, a man came into the tax office yesterday who was assessed on the books for $25,000, but who swore that he owed $240,000 on bonds and mortgages. That wiped out his personal tax. Another man, who said he was in the stove and tin business, was assessed on $1,500. He swore that he would be worth, if his debts were paid, not more than $300; and another, who was assessed on $5,000 as a broker, said he was only a clerk in a broker's office, and did not own a cent. Another large item of exemptions is represented by stocks in incorporated companies, which are not subject to taxation by the owner, as they are supposed to be taxed as assets of the corporations represented. In some instances they are, but in a larger number of cases they are not, for the reason that corporations, as well as individuals, are studying how to evade the burdens of taxation, and are disposing of their bonds and mortgages and investing the proceeds in Government bonds, which are not subject to taxation. It is a well-known fact, for instance, that there are fire insurance companies in this City which do an immense business and have a capital and surplus of at least $500,000 so invested in Government bonds that they are not obliged to pay taxes on $20,000. Savings banks, also, are exempt from taxation on bonds and mortgages, simply because they represent the debts they owe their depositors. Should the City of New-York tax the money deposited in savings banks 2½ per cent, when the bank pays only 4 to 5 per cent. interest, the result would be that all the deposits would be speedily withdrawn, and a man could walk into the Tax Office with $100,000 in his pocket in greenbacks or banknotes, and the Commissioners would be powerless to levy a tax upon it. Besides the number of men who do business in New-York and live elsewhere, and the number of corporations that, though their business is done here, but whose "main office" is located elsewhere, are yearly on the increase, and, as a consequence, the amount realized from personal taxes is constantly and steadily on the decrease in a corresponding ratio, and bids fair to continue until the amount of revenue from that source will at no distant day disappear altogether.

In reference to the growth of the City of New-York during the past 50 years, as shown by the increase in the amount of taxable property, the cost of administering the City Government, the increase in the City debt, and the fluctuations in the rate of taxation, a few statistics may not be uninteresting. The rate of taxation, taken in decades, from 1805 to 1865, and yearly from 1869 to 1878, was as follows:

Year.	Per Cent.	Year.	Per Cent.
1815	.445	1872	2.90
1825	.381	1873	2.50
1835	.460	1874	2.80
1845	.598	1875	2.64
1855	1.205	1876	2.80
1865	2.89	1877	2.65
1870	2.25

The total valuation of real and personal property, taken in decades from 1805 to 1875, was as follows:

Year.	Valuation.	Year.	Valuation.
1805	$25,645,868	1845	$239,955,517
1815	81,638,042	1855	488,998,278
1825	107,784,546	1865	608,827,355
1835	218,723,703	1875	1,100,943,699

In 1878 the total valuation was $1,098,387,775. The total tax-levy since 1869 has been as follows:

Year.	Amount.	Year.	Amount.
1868	$21,912,814	1874	$33,313,816
1870	23,566,240	1875	32,362,790
1871	23,361,674	1876	31,109,621
1872	32,035,430	1877	29,178,940
1873	28,230,996	1878	28,008,888

Year.	Amount.	Year.	Amount.
1869	$4,486,920	1874	$7,373,491
1870	4,904,801	1875	8,012,380
1871	5,931,936	1876	7,691,761
1872	5,745,049	1877	4,162,883
1873	9,761,752	1878	3,908,272

Thus it will be seen that the tax of 1873 was the largest State tax ever paid by the City. Its large amount is due to the fact that in that year the Republican State administration made good, by taxation, the deficiency in the Sinking Fund which had been caused by preceding Democratic administrations. Of that sum of nearly $10,000,000 over $3,000,000 were, however, paid by bonds, and added to the City debt, so that the $8,012,386 paid in 1875, was the largest State tax ever paid in one year by direct taxation. The bonded debt, then, added to the City debt, from 1835 to 1878, was as follows:

Year.	Amount.	Year.	Amount.
1845	13,026,981	1875	112,911,488
1855	15,024,418	1878	117,700,742

The large increase between 1835 and 1845 was owing to the liability incurred in supplying the City with Croton water, while the increase from 1855 to 1865 was mainly due to the effects of the war. The gigantic strides, however, which the indebtedness of the City made between 1865 and 1875, of more than $80,000,000, is attributable to the results of the ruin of the Tweed Ring. For several years prior to 1871 the Ring had been squandering money, running the City in debt, and beguiling the tax-payers with a low rate of taxation. In 1870 they had a law passed restricting the rate of taxation to 2 per cent. Subsequently, however, the law was amended in order to allow an increase in the State tax, which raised the rate to 2.17 per cent. The explosion of the Ring in the Fall of 1871, and the adoption by the reformed administration of the policy of paying current expenses out of taxation, instead of adding them to the City debt, caused an increase to 2.90 per cent. From 1872 to 1876, the rate was also increased on account of the increase in the State debt, consequent upon the bounty loan, the replacing of the amount taken from the sinking fund, and the addition, in 1875 and 1876, of $1,598,767 50 to pay for the improvement of Fourth-avenue.

Should the ratio of increase in the value of real estate in the City continue this year in proportion to the past six years, the aggregate would exceed last year's total amount by about $25,000,000. The Commissioners think it will be more. The decline in values of real estate range from 10 to 60 per cent., while the assessments on old property remains about the same. In choice localities the decline is estimated at 10 to 15 per cent., in ordinary locations 30 to 40 per cent., and in unimproved localities 40 to 60 per cent.

The opening up of the upper end of the island, as the result of rapid transit on both the East and West Sides, is looked upon as a means of future increase of taxable real estate; but the benefit is not expected to be available for several years to come. On Broadway, below Houston and above Tenth streets, not much change in values is noticeable, while between those two points, one being above the wholesale trade and the other below the retail trade, there is a falling off in values to some extent. Applications for abatements in taxes on real estate will be received until April 30, and acted upon in May, so that the tax levy for 1879 cannot be fixed before June.

A SHERIFF'S ACCOUNTS SHORT.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 15.—Local political circles are disturbed to-night by the discovery of a deficiency of $23,000 in the accounts of the retiring Democratic Sheriff, William Pitt Wallace. Wallace frankly admits that the money is gone and that he cannot pay it. He says his living expenses during his term of office were high, and that he was induced to lend $10,000 of county funds to his business partner, who afterward became bankrupt. He declares, however, that he had no idea until the recent adjustment of the books, that he was behind in a larger sum that he was unable to pay. He says he will turn over all his property to his bondsmen. Soon after Wallace was installed in office he was tried in the United States Court and convicted of procuring illegal voters. He was sentenced to pay a fine of $500 and to be imprisoned for a short term. In consideration of his family, sentence of imprisonment was remitted. He was elected in the campaign of 1876, when the rallying cry of the Democracy was "economy and reform."

IN THIS CITY.

The following record shows the changes in the temperature for the past 24 hours, in comparison with the corresponding date of last year, as indicated by the thermometer at Hudnut's pharmacy:

	1878.	1879.		1878.	1879.
3 A. M.	30°	29°	3:30 P. M.	42°	25°
6 A. M.	37°	29°	6 P. M.	38°	22°
9 A. M.	38°	26°	9 P. M.	36°	18°
12 M.	42°	27°	12 P. M.	33°	16°

Average temperature yesterday.....23½°
Average temperature for corresponding date last year.....38½°

The snow-storm which began to fall shortly before 10 o'clock last night extended as far west as Omaha, and covered the localities of Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, Duluth, Grand Haven, La Crosse, and Milwaukee, and went on eastward to Boston. The wind blew at the rate of 13 miles an hour, only, but that was sufficient to drift the fine snow around the corners of buildings, leaving the pavement nearly bare in those spots, while large drifts accumulated in sheltered spots. The horse-cars did not find it necessary to double up their teams, as most of the lines ceased running at midnight, and the humidity of the air was very slight, being only 61 per cent., so that the snow plows cleared the tracks readily. Following the snow-storm colder weather may be expected. While the thermometer stood at 16° above zero in this City at 11 P. M. yesterday, the mercury had dropped from 33° to zero at Albany, and from 31° to zero at Pittsburg at the same hour. At 1 A. M. to-day the signals were ordered up, as there was a prospect of a heavy snow-storm, the wind was blowing from the north-east, and signals were also hoisted at Lewes, Baltimore, Norfolk, and Eastern ports.

WINTRY WEATHER WEST AND SOUTH.

BUFFALO, Jan. 15.—It has been snowing lightly since 10 o'clock to-night and fears are entertained of another blockade. No serious detention has yet been experienced on any railroad. The passenger train on the Lake Shore Road which was due here at 9 o'clock to-night, was one hour behind time, and the freight trains are moving slowly. On the Central Road passenger trains are from 40 to 60 minutes late. The Erie Express arrived on time, and the freight trains run regularly.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Jan. 15.—A drenching rain has prevailed all day, and the streets are streaming with slush from the melting snow and ice. The effect of the thaw on the ice in the river is imperceptible, however, and there is no prospect of the breaking up of the gorge here for some days at least, even though the weather should continue warm. The ice is not expected to move unless the river rises very much higher, of which there is no present prospect.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Jan. 15.—The tow-boat Hobson was sunk by the ice to-day. She can be saved. Unless a flood comes no more local damage can occur. The Kentucky River is reported in a turbulent condition, and much loss of logs has already occurred.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

At an early hour yesterday morning flames were seen issuing from the rear of Winchester's grocery, No. 96 Newark-avenue, Jersey City. An alarm was given, but owing to the breaking of a spring connected with the Newark-avenue bell, the station was not properly given, and it was some time before the location of the fire was known to the department. In the meantime the flames had spread rapidly, and it became necessary to ring the second alarm and call out the reserve force of firemen. At 5 o'clock the fire was under control, having been mainly confined to the rear ground floor of Winchester's building, though the adjoining buildings were somewhat damaged. The losses and insurances are as follows: No. 96, occupied by William Winchester as a grocery store, loss, $5,000; insured for $3,500 in the Relief and Royal Companies. The building was owned by Thomas H. Love, whose loss is $4,500, which is fully covered by insurance. The upper floor was occupied by A. C. Lavris as a photograph gallery. His loss is $800; not insured. No. 94, owned by Mary Pelioth, was damaged about $1,500; insured for $5,500. The ground floor was occupied by A. F. Fitzgibbon as a liquor store; loss, $1,000; not insured. Four families lived on the top floor. They lose furniture aggregating $1,000. No. 98 was slightly damaged. Philip Morris, fancy goods dealer, lost $300 on stock and $200 on furniture; fully insured.

The oil tank at the station of the New-York Elevated Railroad, at Front and Whitehall streets, was set on fire yesterday afternoon by sparks from a passing locomotive. An alarm brought the firemen to the spot, and the fire was quickly extinguished. Damage, $100. The trains on the eastern section of the road were delayed for about 10 minutes.

OSWEGO MIDLAND NEGOTIATIONS.

UTICA, N. Y., Jan. 15.—The Utica Herald announces by authority that the negotiations between the first mortgage bondholders and the holders of Receivers' certificates of the New-York and Oswego Midland Railroad Company have been brought to a satisfactory conclusion. The agreement provides for a sale of the mortgaged property, its purchase by the committee, and the organization by it of a new company. The committee consists of C. A. Jordan, Henry Amy, F. P. Jones, Edward Livingstone, Theodore Houston, Edward Parsons, William H. Fenner, Jr., C. S. Williams, and William C. Whitney. Six million dollars in bonds and $1,200,000 in certificates have already been deposited with the committee. The committee has determined to withdraw the appeal in the foreclosure suit now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, at Washington, and to procure the entry in the case of a moderate decree.

MICHIGAN LEGISLATIVE METHODS.

LANSING, Mich., Jan. 15.—The House Committee on Internal Improvements to-day reported favorably the joint resolution authorizing the Board of Control to transfer the St. Mary's Falls Ship Canal to the General Government. In the House of Representatives, Mr. Griffey introduced a bill extending for two years, unconditionally, the land grant in aid of the Marquette and Mackinaw Railroad.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Jan. 15.—At Sacramento to-day A. P. Clark, partner of Troy Dye, charged with complicity in the murder of Tullie, was acquitted.

TROY, N. Y., Jan. 15.—David Russell, of North Hebron, Washington County, was frozen to death last Saturday while attempting to walk home from a neighbor's house, a distance of a mile.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 15.—Henry Weber, a well-known bridge-builder, engaged in constructing a bridge at the Englefide coal mines, near Evansville, fell from a height of 12 feet, and has since been insensible. His injury is supposed to be fatal.

FORTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

SUMMARY.

The Senate conference committee on the Military Academy Appropriation bill submitted a report, which was adopted, and the bill was then passed. Mr. Voorhees submitted a resolution, which was adopted, instructing the Indian Committee to investigate the recent escape of Cheyennes from Fort Robinson and report to the Senate. A discussion was had on the bill for the payment of three months' extra pay to officers and soldiers of the Mexican war, pending action on which the morning hour expired, and the consideration of the Patent bill was resumed. Without action, however, the Senate went into executive session, after which it adjourned.

The special order in the House being the reception of reports from the Ways and Means Committee, Mr. Wood reported the Certificate of Deposit bill, to which Mr. Kelley offered an amendment providing for the conversion of such certificates, after six months, into lawful money. Mr. Wood explained and advocated the measure, as did Mr. Garfield and Mr. Chittenden, but it was strenuously opposed by Messrs. Kelley, Butler, and Hewitt, who argued that it was not in the interests of the working men, as claimed by its supporters. After a long debate, Mr. Kelley's amendment was rejected—81 to 151—as was one offered by Mr. Burchard. A motion was then made to adjourn, and the yeas and nays were ordered. The motion was lost—78 to 126—and the House, in pursuance of a previous agreement, took a recess until evening. At the evening session the Certificate of Deposit bill was passed by a vote of 117 yeas to 72 nays. Mr. Wood then reported the bill making greenbacks receivable for Customs dues, and this too was passed, after being strenuously opposed by Mr. Garfield. The Refunding bill was then reported, the main question was ordered, and the House adjourned.

SENATE.

THE M'GARRAHAN CLAIM.

Mr. MCDONALD, of Indiana, from the Committee on Public Lands, which committee at the last session of Congress reported adversely on the claim of Mr. McGarrahan, and obtained leave to submit a written report on the subject at this session, giving their reasons why his claim to the Panoche Grande should not be allowed, now submitted such report. Ordered printed.

THE LATE PROF. HENRY.

Mr. WITHERS, of Virginia, submitted a resolution providing that the Senate, instead of adjourning to-morrow afternoon, shall take a recess until 7:45 P. M., at which time it shall meet in the chamber and proceed to the hall of the House to take part in the memorial services of the late Prof. Henry. Laid over.

THE MILITARY ACADEMY BILL PASSED.

Mr. ALLISON, of Iowa, from the conference committee on the Military Academy Appropriation bill, submitted a report, and in explanation thereof said the differences between the two houses had been divided. The Senate appropriated $3,000 for electrical apparatus, and the committee determined upon $1,500. The salary of the clerk to the Treasurer had been fixed at $900 instead of $1,200. The report was then agreed to and passed. It now goes to the President for his signature.

THE FLIGHT OF THE CHEYENNES.

Mr. VORHEES, of Indiana, submitted a resolution "That the Committee on Indian Affairs be and is hereby instructed to inquire into the circumstances which led to the recent escape of Cheyenne Indians from Fort Robinson and the subsequent slaughter by the United States forces who were charged with their custody, and that said committee report its findings to this body." Agreed to.

NEW-YORK PETITIONS.

Mr. CONKLING, of New-York, presented a petition of merchants and shippers of New-York City in favor of the Nicaragua Canal bill. Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, a petition of persons who were privates in Company G, Thirteenth Regiment, New-York Volunteers, praying for the passage of a bill authorizing the payment to them of a bounty of $100 each. Referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE PAY OF MEXICAN WAR SOLDIERS.

The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of bills on the calendar not objected to under the five-minute rule.

The House bill for the payment to the officers and soldiers of the Mexican war of three months' extra pay,

THE BANKING DEPARTMENT.

REPORT OF SUPERINTENDENT LAMB.

THE FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS OF THE STATE AND THEIR CONDITION—PAPER CURRENCY AND THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—NATIONAL AND STATE BANKS—PROPOSED CHANGES IN THE BANKING LAW.

The annual report of the Superintendent of the Banking Department, showing the condition of the banks and banking associations of the State during 1878, has been transmitted to the Legislature. The more important parts of the report are given below:

The number of banks and banking associations organized under laws of the State, and reporting to the Bank Department on the 30th of September, 1878, was 75. The total number which reported at the close of the previous fiscal year was 81. During the last fiscal year one new banking association, the New-York State Banking Company of Syracuse, was formed. Seven banking associations were closed; Brewers' and Grocers' Bank, Bull's Head Bank, and Commercial Bank, New-York; Bank of Chenango, Norwich; Commercial Bank, Rochester; State Bank, Olean, and Bank of Wappinger's Falls. Five of these voluntarily closed their business, and two closed as State banks and reorganized as national banks. Eleven trust, loan, and mortgage companies reported to the Superintendent on June 30, 1878. During the fiscal year one company, the National Trust Company, New-York, failed, and is in the hands of a Receiver. During the same period the Equitable Trust Company and the United States Mortgage Company of New-York made their first report to this department. Following are tabulations of the two quarterly reports of all the reporting banks and banking associations for the dates respectively stated, which were near the close of the last two fiscal years:

Thirteen banking associations have reduced their capital during the year. The aggregate of such reduction is $1,348,400. Such reduction is the result in part of losses in business, and in part is a withdrawal of capital not active enough to pay the excessive taxes levied and earn any income. The aggregate results of the reports of the examinations of State, national, and trust and mortgage companies for the past two years are as follows:

	Resources.	Liabilities.	Surplus.
1878	71,547,372	64,616,731,090 52	6,950,687 97

The outstanding aggregate of the circulating notes of the State banks was $535,821 50 Sept. 30, 1878. At the close of the previous year it was $662,912 50. The reduction during the year was $127,091. The circulation outstanding and secured on Sept. 30, 1878, was $101,575; the unsecured circulation, $434,246 50.

The securities held by the Superintendent in trust on Sept. 30, 1878, amounted to $1,169,697 86. The net decrease in securities was $171,400 59.

During the year four incorporated banks advertised the final redemption of their notes. Of 42 incorporated banks whose circulation accounts were open when the act of 1873 was passed, but one remain which have not availed themselves of the provisions of the law that provide an easy way to finally close their affairs. The retirement of some State banks from business, the reduction of capital in others, and the passing of dividends in some, are all expressions of the difficulties which surround the banking business. Check upon these reductions will be made when all banking is reduced to the minimum, if any is made—and it is a matter of fact that in a great many of the banks, both State and national, none, or very small profit, has been made upon the currency. The reason is the onerous and inequitable taxation imposed upon the banks. To show how deep this demand of the tax-gatherer enters the income, or the profit and, gathered from the banks, I have obtained the amount of taxes paid by each of the State banks from Jan. 1, 1873, to Jan. 1, 1878. The statement embraces the taxes paid the United States, the State of New-York, including local taxes. The capital stood at $21,916,600. The taxes paid during the five years aggregate $4,773,867; that is, in five years a sum between one-fifth and one-fourth of the capital of the State banks has been taken from them in taxes and duties. The fact is apparent. It is a problem whether any kind of business could bear it. The State, too, discriminates, either in law or in the administration of the Tax Laws, against the banks when compared with the individual capitalists and other corporations. The banks are lenders of money. For the last few years they have been losers of money to a large extent. The business has been attended with great risk. The banks are seriously crippled by losses resulting from the failure of debtors once solvent, but the State refuses to take anycognizance of the consequences that result to the banks in enforcing taxes.

Of the new forms for reports adopted in December, 1877, the Superintendent says: "Their employment has demonstrated their advantage. They have shown in several banks a very different condition of affairs from that exhibited in former reports. And the Superintendent has found, through them, not a few points of weakness in banks, errors in the conduct of some that have been corrected, and, I regret to say, instances of officers of corporations duped by apparently criminal acts, done with the purpose of concealing the actual state of affairs of the bank from the Superintendent."

Under the new mode of publishing had been in use a year, the legal power of the Superintendent to require such reports from the banks was questioned by the officers of one of the banks. The Attorney-General sustained the right, and the only objection the banks have welcomed the change, because it enables the Superintendent to ascertain more fully and clearly the condition of the banks, and thereby avoid conditions, including banks, from possible loss by the continuance of a weak or insolvent bank in business.

During the last year 30 of the banks were examined, and of only a very few were found in such position of financial strength and prudent and lawful administration that the necessity for examination was not plain. Referring to the bill that failed at the last session, providing for the periodical examination of the banks, the Superintendent favors its re-introduction, and says some of the banks opposing the bill formerly will not resist such legislation again.

In recent years some of the State banks have assumed that they had the right to make any investment of money which the discretion of the Directors or officers approved. The Superintendent could not find authority for such investments, and the decision of the Attorney-General was in harmony, that such unlimited investment is illegal.

The Revised Statutes contain a system of prohibitions and restrictions to prevent the insolvency of moneyed corporations. Sound reasons require that material portions of these general statutes should be made applicable to the banking associations. As borrowers, and as other corporations, the debtors to depositors, they should be surrounded by such limitations as will restrain officers of them from reckless conduct of them, and will subject such officers to certain and exemplary punishment if they violate the law by the commission of felonious acts.

As to paper currency, the report says: "It is a popular notion that it will be economical and beneficial, as respects the people, for the National Government to furnish the paper currency of the country. Among all the fallacies which prevail respecting banking and the currency, I think none would prove more mischievous, practically, than this one. If it were made operative. In our country, on account of the frequency of elections and the changes in Administration, to make the paper currency depend on the mutations of politics would be one of the most disastrous events that could befall.

The paper currency should be secured, redeemable in real values, and elastic, naturally contracting and expanding with the shrinking or swelling volume of business. For this reason Government cannot well manage it. The paper currency issued by banks, if backed by the substantial value, the real property which secures its payment or redemption, is the safest which can be made, because it does not violate the natural principles and rules of business and trade.

The national banks have a secured circulation redeemable in lawful money. If the Government had not hindered resumption by the great amount of its notes, I think the banks would have resumed before this time, for the banks of the country have always favored early resumption after a financial crisis.

The mistake made against the national banks is calculated to do nothing but harm. But I expect to see such aggressive ideas prevail, and to see attacks more or less formidable made upon the banks, until there shall be more freedom in banking than at present.

The national bank franchise is a monopoly, as compared with that of the State banks, on account of the prohibitive tax imposed upon the issue of circulation by the State banks. It is claimed that national bank circulation has some great advantages for the people. I concede the force of this. That is the reason why the national banks can now be put upon their merits, and should not be longer protected and guarded by the grant of special privileges denied to State banks. Corporate banking under any proper and well-regulated system, like that of New-York or of the national system, is surrounded with checks, limitations, and safeguards which are intended to render the banks safe and to protect the people against loss through them. As some compensation for these restrictions and safeguards, circulation of notes has been permitted to them. But the National Administration has arbitrarily robbed the State banks of this compensating benefit for the restraining laws and regulations to which they are subjected. As a consequence, private banks have largely multiplied, to the advantage neither of the people nor of the Government. Suppose the case of circulation for these to be removed. State banks may then issue notes, as they did for 80 years, without question in regard to their legal right to do so. The national bank currency would come into competition with the State bank notes. The people would, as the users of currency, find out which one best served them, which one was the best representative of the value that it purported to stand for. The best currency would run out the other, where there was free competition.

Such a course would afford the only infallible test of the comparative value of the two kinds of currency.

After free trial, the national currency would be approved for many uses, and would stand then, as it does not now, secure in the approbation of the calm, practical judgment of the great body of people, and would rest in the permanent stability that would follow such a popular verdict.

Corporate banking would, in this way, be absolutely free. Such banking would be as nearly safe as it can be made, for the organization of the national banks and of the best State banks would compel all corporate banking to fulfill the same conditions in order to live. The circulation of all corporate banks would be somewhat restricted, so the people would have no hesitation in using it. The currency would be elastic, for there would be no forces to control the volume of it, except those of legitimate and normal business. The banks might issue unnumbered notes; one would have to hold them till the men who use currency and could give security for them borrowed them. The volume would expand and shrink just as the commercial transactions of the country did, and not as the needs of the public Treasury might demand or the exigencies of political parties might prompt.

A larger experience confirms the conviction in my mind that the Banking laws of the State need complete and thorough revision. Legislation is required for several purposes, to wit:

1. To define and fix the liability of stockholders in State banks for the debts of the banks.

2. To regulate deposits of stocks in the Bank Department by the banks.

3. To amend the law to organize the Bank Department in order to attain greater equity in assessments upon corporations for the expenses of the department and the utmost economy in the expenses of the department.

4. To define precisely the powers of the Bank Superintendents and the duties of the bank officers in making quarterly reports.

5. To make some provisions of the Revised Statutes relating to moneyed corporations applicable to banking associations.

6. To prevent private bankers from assuming corporate titles, either new ones or those of closed State banks, and doing a banking business under such misleading and deceptive titles.

7. To repeal all laws which place mutual aid, loan, and building fund associations under the supervision of the Bank Department. The reasons for this recommendation have been stated in former reports.

FAILURES LAST YEAR.

AN INCREASE OVER 1877—THE CAUSES WHICH LED THERETO—THE OUTLOOK FOR THE FUTURE.

The annual circular of Dun, Barlow & Company's Mercantile Agency gives the total number of failures in the United States during the year 1878 as 10,478, with total liabilities amounting to $234,383,132. In 1877 the total failures were 8,872, with liabilities reaching $190,669,936. This increase of 1,606 failures in the past year is accounted for by the fact that circumstances during the year were "peculiarly influential in encouraging casualties of this character." These circumstances are given as six in number: (1.) 1878 was the fifth year of a depression unparalleled in character, extent, and duration. (2.) Unseasonable weather during the first quarter of the year materially restricted sales and collections, causing a good deal of embarrassment? (3.) Business was materially restricted during the first half of the year by the monetary discussions in and out of Congress, together with a possibility of changes in the tariff, which created doubt and uncertainty as to the future. (4.) An enormous shrinkage was caused by a general and permanent decline in values all over the world, greater than ever before in a similar period. (5.) The yellow fever epidemic in the South caused a vast material loss from the forced suspension of labor and business. (6.) The abolition of the Bankrupt law, and the long delay permitted to elapse before its repeal, had more to do with the increase of failures than any other circumstance. Regarding the outlook for the future, the report says: "It is significant that out of the six leading circumstances enumerated as contributing to failures during the year five no longer exist. In the room of these disturbing elements other favorable conditions are present, year ahead. The immediate future, to so much improve business as to make the decrease of failures in 1879 much more marked than the increase in 1878." The most important of these conditions is found in the return to specie payments without a ripple of disturbance in the business world. Another is the fact that values have now reached a level lower than the gold standard in normal times, without which no marked prosperity would have been possible. A third indication of the approach of better times is the prosperity of the vast class who till the soil, while a fourth favorable feature is the changing character of the industries of a large number of persons, as indicated in the increased amount of land taken up for actual settlement.

The large liabilities of the past year's failures are adjudged only by the figures for 1873, when they reached $228,589,000. This sum, however, was divided among only 5,163 failures, less than half the number in 1878. The distribution of last year's failures over the country is shown in the following table, with the percentage, average, &c.:

States.	No. in Business.	No. of Failures.	Per-centage of Failures.	Amount of Liabilities.	Average Liabilities.
Eastern States	79,765	1,734	1 in 46	$35,294,026	$20,354
Middle States	229,385	3,199	1 in 71	95,293,466	29,788
South'n States	96,297	1,435	1 in 68	26,322,961	18,602
West'n States	240,933	3,436	1 in 70	64,309,503	18,716
Pacific St. and Ter's	28,361	691	1 in 41	13,163,176	18,967
Total for the U. S.	674,741	10,478	1 in 64	$234,383,132	$22,369

The gradual growth of failures during the past seven years is shown in the following table:

Years.	Number.	Total Liabilities.	Average Liabilities.
1877	8,872	190,669,930	21,491
1876	9,092	191,117,788	21,020
1875	7,740	201,060,389	25,977
1874	5,839	159,239,089	27,313
1873	5,183	228,589,000	44,086
1872	4,069	121,056,000	29,750

The failures in the Dominion of Canada during 1878 numbered 555, with liabilities amounting to $9,100,929.

THE QUESTION OF THROUGH FREIGHTS.

Notwithstanding their assurances that they could not be persuaded to do such a thing, the representatives of the various steam-ship lines met the committee on through freights, appointed at the recent conference of Eastern and Western railroad managers, in the office of the North Atlantic Steamship Company, No. 29 Broadway, yesterday. There were present on the part of the railroads George R. Blanchard, Vice-President of the New-York, Lake Erie and Western Company; E. T. Hopkins, foreign freight agent of the same company; O. J. Grear, foreign freight agent of the Pennsylvania Company; William H. Mellhany, foreign freight agent of the New-York Central and Hudson River Company; Thomas H. Stamford, acting on behalf of the Baltimore and Ohio Company, and Commissioner Albert Fink; and, on the part of the steam-ships, John G. Dale, of the Inman Line; A. B. Small, of the same line; Andrew Underhill, of Williams & Guion's Line; F. W. J. Hurst, of the National Line; R. F. Cortis, of the White Star Line; Messrs. Coverly and Henderson, of the Anchor Line, and Ratcliffe Baldwin, of the State Line. The resolution adopted at the other meeting to equalize through rates of freight from the West to Europe by way of all lines from the seaboard cities was presented, and at once met with general opposition from the steam-ship men. They offered as an alternative, a resolution that all the railroads should agree not to ship by way of any line not represented at the meeting, but this was immediately rejected by the railroad men. Both bodies then held separate conferences, as a result of which they appointed committees of four to confer with each other to-day, and endeavor to reach some settlement of the question.

THE GERMANS AND BAYARD TAYLOR.

It is proposed by some of the German singing societies of this City to have the late Bayard Taylor's body lie in state in the Governor's Room upon its arrival here. Alderman Morris received a communication on the subject from the Gesang-Verein, Franz Abt Schueler, in which the use of the Governor's Room was requested for the purpose. The German singing societies propose to have a solemn dirge sung in the City Hall Park, by representatives from the different organizations, while the body is lying in state.

MURDERED IN NEW-MEXICO.

Eberhard Focke, an old and esteemed merchant of New-Brighton, Staten Island, left home last Fall for a tour on business through Texas and New-Mexico. Information has been received by the friends of Mr. Focke that the latter was murdered recently while attempting to detain one of his customers, who was taking flight after disposing of a stock of goods for which he had not paid Mr. Focke.

WHY HE CHANGED PLANS.

RIVERSIDE DRIVE IMPROVEMENT.

THE REPLY OF ENGINEER FRANKLIN TO THE CHARGES—HE SAYS THE WORK WAS PROPERLY DONE.

The contractors Desker and Quintard, to whom was committed the task of laying out and completing Riverside-avenue, complained some time ago that the Park Department's Superintending Engineer, James C. Aldrich, was requiring them to do work outside of the contract. This resulted in the removal of Aldrich by the Commissioners, and the appointment of Thomas Franklin in his place. In December last charges similar to those preferred against Aldrich were brought against Franklin, and a committee consisting of Messrs. Haswell, Worthen, and Bogart were appointed to investigate the work as carried on under Engineer Franklin. Majority and minority reports were presented on Dec. 27, Bogart offering the minority report.

At the meeting of the Park Commissioners yesterday, Franklin was called upon to answer the charges contained in the majority report. He offered a long written defense, which was laid over for future consideration. He argues that the whole matter about the avenue has been placed in a false light before the public, and intimates that the signers of the majority report conspired to secure his removal. After describing what Riverside-avenue is, and its general plan, which includes what is known as Riverside Park, he says that the specifications he received to guide him in the construction of the improvement, in March last, were crude and incongruous, comprising 224 paragraphs, 65 of which were left to his own judgment and discretion in respect to their interpretation and execution. He says, further, that the topographical surveys upon which the plans and specifications were based were inaccurate, rendering it a matter of impossibility to make the work itself conform with the plans, the details of which, he says, were in a large measure undefined and obscure. The contract, as a whole, could not, he argues, have been carried out at all were it not for a saving clause, providing that the engineer in charge of the work should in all cases determine the amount or quality of the work, and that he should determine all questions relative to lines, levels, and dimensions. His predecessor had modified the work to a certain extent, and he [Franklin] could not but follow an example that was dictated "by ordinary common sense." He then passes to a definition of the duty of the investigators, under the resolution appointing them, and declares that they did not compare the work with the specifications, as they should have done. Instead of this, they took testimony from discharged employes, were addressed by Smith E. Lane, and expended but a few hours of time in their rest duty of personal examination of the work. Mr. Franklin next proceeds to consider seriatim the charges of the majority report. This report shows, he says, that the investigators left nearly 200 paragraphs of the contract unnoticed, and considered only 27 of the remainder. Of these 27 they give to about half their unqualified approval, praising the most difficult and costly portions of the work as having been done in a manner superior to that called for in the specifications. He says that in filling over the line of the avenue he did not overfill, and indulged in no needless felling of trees. He preserved all top-soil that was worth preserving, employing it as filling. He says the shaping of the slopes could not be charged with more or less than the estimate, as this portion of the work is still unfinished. He denies that he did not pay proper attention to the filling in of the interstices between the stones on the embankment, and declares that though some of the edging of the embankment may have settled, it will be properly completed in the final adjustment of the embankment. He defends his action in increasing the parapet wall, before the specifications in regard to it, to height, and claims that the increase will result in the prevention of accidents to life and limb by protecting persons against falling over the high retaining walls. Further on in the report he says that in the construction of the parapet wall was due to the impossibility of obtaining the proper stones in the time specified, but, he says, where two stones were used instead of one, the two were as securely bound with iron anchors as to render them equal in strength to a single stone, and, in all respects, they comply with the spirit of the specification. The filling of the rear wall, he states, was among the matters left to his discretion, and is not properly a subject for adverse criticism on the ground that stone was used where it ought not to have been. With reference to the criticisms on the pavement of the roadway of the drive, the effect of which, he says, he used a heavier roller than was named in the specifications, because a heavier one was necessary. The roadway, he argues, will be as good as any in existence when completed. He claims to have given satisfactory answers all three of the criticisms. In reply to criticisms as to the faulty condition of the gutters and stone edgings, he declares that all defects will be found to have been remedied as the work is completed. Instead of this defense, he intimates that the condemnation passed upon himself in the report is an outgrowth of the signers' desire for his removal from a place "which, he has been informed, they have solicited with great earnestness." He also submits the minority report of Mr. Bacon, which declares that the work was well planned, and is being well done, considering the latitude allowed under the specifications. Engineer Bacon's claim is based on a report from Messrs. Julius W. Adams and William J. McAlpine, of the American Society of Civil Engineers, who say they have examined the work, and deem the changes in the original plan "wise, prudent, judicious, and are of the opinion that the materials employed were well suited to secure good and permanent work, in accordance with the spirit of the contract.

MR. BERRIAN'S SINGULAR CONDUCT.

The contestants in the Berrian will case closed their testimony yesterday, and the further hearing was then adjourned over until Feb. 15. The testimony taken yesterday was mainly corroborative of that already brought forward, showing that the testator for some two years before his death indulged habitually and to excess in the use of intoxicating liquors, and that his conduct was irrational and his conversation frequently incoherent. Mary Bouton, a young girl, who said she had acted as nurse to Mrs. De Zea when she was ill at a hotel in Passaic, described the scene that took place between Berrian and the woman shortly before her death; he rushed into the room intoxicated and crying, and said: "Yen are going to die," and "You don't know me, but I am Daniel Berrian;" then he gave way to an exhibition of grief, knelt beside the bed, and began to repeat the Lord's Prayer, but when he was about half way through with the recitation he arose, and, going to the adjoining room, called aloud for a "brandy smash;" Mrs. De Zea died the same day; when she was prepared for burial the testator came into the room in his night-clothes and threatened to open the coffin-lid, and, after gazing lying in her coffin, and just before the burial, he came into the room, struck the coffin-lid, and exclaimed "She's not dead;" on all of these occasions he was under the influence of liquor.

A SWINDLER SENT TO STATE PRISON.

James Levy, alias James Ross, alias J. H. Florence, a Hebrew, who gave his address as No. 98 Third-avenue, was called up by Assistant District Attorney Rollins, in General Sessions, yesterday, to answer four charges of forgery, obtaining money by false pretenses, and violation of the Hotel act. The accused is a most expert swindler, who, by his insinuating manner, succeeded in making an easy living. His favorite mode of swindling the public was by representing himself as an agent of St. John's Guild, and by this means he collected several sums of money, ranging from $20 to $50, from charitable citizens. On Christmas Eve he put up at the Albemarle Hotel, ordered a fire in his room, partook of supper, and made himself generally comfortable. He left without announcing his departure, and it was then discovered that the valise which he had "forgotten" was filled with bottles and stones, nicely packed in rags. On being placed at the bar, Levy pleaded guilty to one of the four charges against him, and he was sentenced to the full penalty for one indictment—five years in State Prison at hard labor.

AN AGED CRIMINAL.

Mr. Bergh's society won a victory in the General Sessions yesterday in the conviction of Aaron Harris, the aged proprietor of a dairy at Nos. 195 and 197 Stanton-street, who was charged with torturing six cows by milking them while they were suffering from terrible burns received in a fire. The case for the prosecution was conducted by Assistant District Attorney Herring. Counsel for the prisoner moved for a new trial, and Judge Gildersleeve postponed sentence to give him an opportunity to argue the matter. Harris is 72 years old.

THE PROPOSED FEDERAL PRISON.

As a fact going to strengthen his advocacy of the erection of a Federal prison, Assistant United States Attorney Fiero cites the cost to the Government of the maintenance of Connors, Peckham, and Burckhardt, the counterfeit money dealers, recently sentenced to imprisonment in Albany Penitentiary. The aggregate time of their service will be 22 years, and the State will receive about $1,000 for boarding the men, besides reaping the profits of their labors while in prison.

THE CASE OF DR. CLARENCE M. BAKER.

The case of Dr. Clarence M. Baker, indicted for misdemeanor in having given a false certificate of death in the case of the girl Sarah Victoria Conners, who is alleged to have fallen a victim to the malpractice of Dr. Bradford, was called by Assistant District Attorney Rollins, in General Sessions, yesterday. Mr. Rollins said he had intended to proceed with the trial of the case at once, but found himself unable to do so in consequence of being still in the midst of the McKenna murder case. Counsel for the accused said that inasmuch as the disease by which Miss Conners had come to her death would be the point to be decided on the trial, he was most anxious that Dr. Baker should be tried by a jury of physicians. He was not aware that such a jury could be impaneled, but hoped, if it were possible, that the accused could be tried by a jury of his peers. Judge Cowing said the case of the accused should take the ordinary course, and be tried by a petit jury. They would be just as competent as any jury of physicians to render an intelligent verdict. Indeed, he did not see how any 12 physicians could ever agree upon anything. [Laughter.] Assistant District Attorney Rollins said there was no possible method of obtaining a "struck" jury in the case, and, finally, the trial was set down for Monday next.

THREATENING A LAWYER.

A CONTEMPT OF COURT WHICH WAS NOT PUNISHED—AN EXCITED WITNESS.

Legal proceedings before Judge Freedman, in the Trial Term of the Superior Court, were interrupted yesterday afternoon by an uproar caused by an attempt of a witness to assault a lawyer. The witness was Mr. J. B. Bidgood, Superintendent of the Sixth-Avenue Railroad Company, and the lawyer E. Y. Bell, counsel for Mortimer Hendricks in a suit for $15,000 damages against the corporation mentioned. Mr. Hendricks alleged that on June 4, 1874, while riding on a Sixth-avenue car, he was attacked and beaten by a drunken man, and he claimed that as the drunkard should not have been permitted to board the car, the company was responsible for his violent acts. The case was tried some time ago, and a verdict for $1,000 damages was rendered. The defendants appealed, and yesterday the plaintiff's counsel accused them of inducing a material witness for Mr. Hendricks to hide himself. Among the witnesses for the defendant corporation was Superintendent Bidgood, who was subjected to a rigid cross-examination. In summing up, Mr. Bell spoke severely against Bidgood, distorting his name at the same time into "Bildd good." When the jury had retired to deliberate, Mr. Bidgood approached Mr. Bell, and angrily asked him if he knew who he was talking about when he spoke of Bidgood. Bell replied that he was not talking about his questioner. Mr. Bidgood advanced threatningly toward the lawyer, but a court officer grasped him and pushed him toward the door. He struggled to reach Bell, and several officers took hold of him. He then made a movement which was interpreted as evidence of an intention to draw a revolver and shoot Bell. He was hurried into the corridor, still struggling, and he continued for a long time to contend with his captors. Mr. Bell appealed to the court for protection, and was told that he would be protected while he remained in the courtroom, but the court could not provide for his safety outside. Mr. Bell accordingly did not venture into the corridor until after Mr. Bidgood had been conveyed to his home. The jury returned a verdict of $200 damages for the plaintiff, Hendricks.

THE KILLING OF WILLIAM B. WILLSE.

TESTIMONY FOR THE DEFENSE—THE PRISONER'S VERSION OF THE AFFRAY.

The rough element in the Fourteenth and Sixth Wards was well represented at the trial of Frank McKenna, in General Sessions, yesterday, for the murder of William B. Willse. Judge Cowing presided and Assistant District Attorney Rollins conducted the prosecution. The defense called several witnesses to disprove the allegation that Frank McKenna carried a pistol on the night of the shooting, and showed that deceased had threatened to "fix" him for having his [Willse's] brother "Ike" indicted for a stabbing transaction. A number of witnesses testified that the prisoner had always borne a good character.

The prisoner testified in his own behalf that on the night of the "muss" in which Willse received his death wound, he was struck with a brick by deceased, and subsequently knocked on the ground by deceased's brother, "Ike." Willse and McKenna scuffled, heard a shot fired, and thought he himself had been fired at. He denied that he had shot Willse, but said the latter's brother had good reason to shoot him [McKenna] to prevent his being a complainant against him in a case of felonious assault. "Ike" Willse was now serving a term in State Prison for stabbing witness, having pleaded guilty to the charge. In answer to Mr. Rollins, McKenna examined heard a shot fired, and thought he himself had been fired at. He denied that he had shot Willse, but said the latter's brother had good reason to shoot him [McKenna] to prevent his being a complainant against him in a case of felonious assault. "Ike" Willse was now serving a term in State Prison for stabbing witness, having pleaded guilty to the charge. In answer to Mr. Rollins, McKenna examined his pistol, and showed that it was a self-cocker, and that it required a pull of 10 pounds to discharge it. He had a shooting "scrape" with a German lager-beer saloon keeper, a stabbing affray with one Peter Reynolds, and a "growl" at Owney Geoghegan's, in which he was fined $10. In the other cases he had been discharged. Assistant District Attorney Rollins will cross-examine the prisoner to-day.

SUFFICIENLY PUNISHED.

On the night of Oct. 27 Mary E. Perkins snatched a diamond pin from George S. Lynch, who resides on Woodruff-avenue, Morrisania. Lynch pursued her, and in endeavoring to escape, Mary slipped on the sidewalk and broke her leg. She was taken into custody on a charge of larceny, but had to be sent to hospital for surgical treatment. After her discharge from hospital she was sent to the Tombs to await the action of the Grand Jury. That body yesterday dismissed the complaint, and when the case was called by Assistant District Attorney Rollins, the accused hobbled to the bar on crutches. Mr. Rollins announced to the court that the case had been dismissed, and Judge Cowing discharged the prisoner. Mary bowed her acknowledgements for the leniency she had been treated with, but said she thought she had suffered enough for her crime, having broken her leg and suffered three months' imprisonment.

Cameron, No. 23 South William-street, has been delegated full power by the Secretary of the Agricultural Society of New South Wales to act on behalf of the Council of that society in the United States and Canada, in connection with the Australian International Exhibition, to be held in Sydney, opening on the 1st of August, 1879, and continuing for four months. The Signal Service Bureau report indicates for to-day, in this region, north-east, veering to southerly winds; cooler, followed by slightly warmer, cloudy weather, with snow or rain; falling barometer.

After its foolish waste of time the day before, the House yesterday recovered enough good sense and energy to pay some attention to the business laid before it by the Committee of Ways and Means. After passing the bill authorizing the issue of 3 per cent. certificates, it also passed the bill authorizing the payment of Customs dues in legal-tender notes, and ordered the previous question on that for the exchange of 4 per cent. bonds for 6 per cents, paying the holders of the bonds three months' interest. The animus of the House, as well as that of Mr. Wood, was very well shown in the refusal to allow Mr. Garfield to offer an amendment limiting the reception of legal tenders to such time as they were maintained at par with gold. Without such limitation, the bill is, in effect, the repudiation of an important pledge by the Government, and an agreement had been made in committee, as Mr. Wood acknowledged, that the amendment should be offered. That gentleman preferred that the House should decide the matter. Mr. Garfield will probably be more careful in the future how he trusts to promises whose observance is to be left to the decision of a body in no wise bound by them.

The bill for the issue of the 3 per cent. certificates in sums of $10 was passed in the House yesterday by a vote of 117 to 71, all amendments being rejected. The defeat of Mr. Kelley's amendment making the certificates convertible into lawful money after six months, necessarily deprives the bill of much, if not of all, of its value as an encouragement to savings among the poorer classes. The objection urged by Mr. Hewitt that the amendment would enable capitalists to deposit large sums with the Government is only partially valid, as the requirement that the money should be left for six months was in a considerable degree a protection against this abuse, and further protection could have been afforded by limiting the amount to be issued to any one person, after the principle now adopted by the larger savings banks. In its present form, the bill, should it become a law, may, however, promote somewhat the funding of the bonds, which is declared to be its chief purpose.

The President seems unable to take any step in regard to the New-York Custom-house without stultifying himself. Secretary Sherman explicitly states that it was "by direction of the President" that he adopted the extraordinary course of sending to the Senate a communication on a subject which was not before it. The thoroughly undignified, not to say tricky, device of heading off the report of a committee by charges which could not be replied to when the report was presented is not calculated either to improve the President's reputation for frankness or to help him to the end which he has in view. If the manner of influencing the action of the Senate in regard to the Custom-house nominations be objectionable, the subject matter of the charges is contemptible. It is inconsistent with previous statements made by the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to Collector Arthur's administration, and with the tenders made to him of other responsible positions. It is also, as will doubtless be made apparent, inconsistent with the facts. If, after months of anxious investigation, a few ridiculous and easily-disproved allegations of incompetency and carelessness are all that the President can urge against Collector Arthur, his official record must be clear indeed, and the duty of the Senate in the premises must be exceedingly plain.

In his annual report, the Superintendent of the Banking Department gives some interesting facts regarding the condition of the banks still doing business under State laws. The year—closing Sept. 30—has not, on the whole, been a profitable one. The number of the banks is now reduced to 75, with a capital of $20,568,200. Thirteen banks have reduced their capital, in all, by $1,348,400 during the year. The loans and discounts have fallen off from $57,906,952 to $51,626,029, and the deposits from $54,002,718 to $50,540,621; but the resources of the banks have been strengthened more than their liabilities have increased, and the net surplus has advanced from $6,100,041 to $6,950,697. Apart from the general depression in business, the Superintendent calls attention to the onerous taxation to which the banks have been subjected. During the past five years this has amounted to 21.7 per cent., or an average annual tax of 4 1-3 per cent., which is certainly oppressive, as compared with the taxation of other forms of business. The Superintendent takes occasion to condemn the taxation of State circulation by the Federal Government, and advocates free competition between State and national banks, declaring that in that case "the best currency would run out the other." This is plausible, but fallacious. Uniformity and safety of circulation are absolute under the National Banking act, and State banks ought not to be allowed to try to induce the people to use any inferior currency.

The General Term of the Supreme Court has promptly set aside the decision of Judge Barrett in regard to the issue of the City's quota of bonds for the construction of the Brooklyn bridge, and has granted the petition for a peremptory mandamus on Controller Kelly. The case will, of course, go to the Court of Appeals, where its merits are likely to be as correctly appreciated as they have been by Judge Davis and his associates. The entire proceeding originated merely in the petty political malignity of Mr. Kelly and his obedient nominees in the Board of Aldermen. Its sole result will be the waste of a great deal of money and valuable time, for which, it is to be hoped, the responsibility will not be forgotten.

The usual compilation of statistics concerning failures in the United States and Canada, made by Dun, Barlow & Co.'s mercantile agency, is given for 1878 in another column. Its general features are as follows: The number of failures last year reached the unprecedented figure of 10,478, or 16 per cent. more than the previous year. The liabilities were also unprecedented, being $234,383,132, or very nearly 19 per cent. more than for the year before. The average amount of liabilities was increased from $21,491 to $22,369. The average was the largest in the Middle States, $29,788, and smallest in the Southern, $18,602. The failures were much the most numerous in the first quarter of the year, and though they were more in the third, in consequence of the repeal of the Bankrupt act, than in the second, in the last quarter they fell to 1,800, with liabilities of only $37,172,003. This relation between the different periods of the year is certainly encouraging. But as the agency very properly points out, the outlook for business men is still far from cheerful. Expenses are large, insolvent laws are confused and uncertain, competition is severe, and the trades are overcrowded. Against this, the most encouraging facts are the resumption of specie payments and the very large increase in the number of persons engaging in farming, as shown by the amount of land taken up for cultivation. There are specially interesting figures given in regard to this latter point.

MUNICIPALITIES AND CREDITORS.

The question of municipal indebtedness is already beset with so many difficulties that a deliberate attempt to create fresh ones, with the view of defeating justice, has an obvious interest for the whole body of creditors. There are cases in which inevitable bankruptcy looms up to reconcile creditors to default and loss. It is not necessary to travel to Illinois in search of a town whose indebtedness so nearly approaches the total appraised value of its taxable property as to leave no probability of payment in full. We may find examples sufficiently ominous without going beyond suburban cities in New-Jersey. Thus, while the taxable property of Elizabeth is estimated at $13,579,650, its debts, bonded and floating, amount to $5,808,500,—much more than could be realized if the entire place were offered for sale at auction to-day. Rahway, again, owes $1,690,000, while the total value of its property is but $3,093,275. There can be no hope of relief for these so-called cities, and none for their creditors, save that which the enforced settlement of bankruptcy affords. These, however, are exceptions. The great majority of municipalities, though sadly overburdened, may preserve a reputation for both solvency and honesty, if they act upon the prudent counsel addressed by Gov. Robinson to the grumbling tax-payers of bonded towns in this State. They must resolve, first, to pay what they owe, however great the sacrifice; and, secondly, to rely upon economy and taxation, and not upon help from any extraneous source, for the means of maintaining their credit unimpaired.

We fear that the advice will in many instances prove as inoperative as that given by Gov. McClellan to the tax-payers of New-Jersey. Repudiation is not peculiarly a Southern vice. There are Northern and Western municipalities which are as indifferent to the opinion of the financial world as New-Orleans, and are as fixed in their resistance to taxation as the majority of Tennesseeans or the readjusters of Virginia. The State of New-York has its full quota. The failure of the Oswego Savings Bank is attributed to default on county and town bonds; and the De Ruyter attempt at repudiation is an example not unlikely to be followed by most of the towns that have asked the State to transfer their burdens to its back. Litigation is sure to follow. Eastern holders of Western bonds, county and municipal, have had plenty of experience of the law as applied to collections on account of interest and principal. Iowa has been prolific in law cases of this character. Missouri and Illinois still yield more than their share. The time is at hand when this class of creditors will have the same melancholy story to tell of cities, towns, and counties in this State and New-Jersey, in Pennsylvania, and probably Vermont. Here, in fact, legal proceedings have been begun. People who lent the money are not inclined to allow the municipalities that got it to escape repayment on the ground that taxation is heavy, and the expenditures have not yielded the expected returns. If there is not honesty enough in a municipality to repay money borrowed, there is law enough to sustain the creditor in his struggle for redress.

But litigation is at best an unsatisfactory proceeding, especially when the issue is between an individual and a town or county. It would be a tedious if not a hopeless proceeding, in many localities, if the sole dependence were upon the action of local courts. In Missouri, Illinois, and other parts of the West Judges are known to have been elected with reference to their course on this subject of indebtedness. Candidates for judicial offices have been pledged, and the more shameful the avowal of a dishonest intent the greater the chance of election. Justice would be unattainable where this condition of things exists if the Federal courts could not be made available. On them alone the holder of dishonored bonds, county or municipal, must rely for redress. So it was in Iowa when a disposition prevailed to shake off debts; so, more recently, it has been in Missouri, where rascally efforts have been made to cheat the creditors. In this State also Federal courts are being brought into requisition to obtain quicker redress than could be hoped for in dealing with the defaulting towns. The interminable delays which are the bane of local practice, and which knavish debtors know how to profit by at the expense of creditors, may thus be prevented. The De Ruyter class of towns will have some of their calculations upset by the prompt appeal to Federal administrators of justice.

Bills are pending in Congress, however, intended to deprive these creditors of the relief now assured to them. Senator Garland, echoing a resolution adopted in convention by the Arkansas Democrats, proposes to wrest cities, towns, villages, counties, and public corporations from the jurisdiction of Circuit Courts of the United States. Mr. Townshend, of Illinois, has a similar measure before the House; and both the Grangers of his State and the Democrats of Missouri have declared themselves in favor of its purpose. There is no immediate danger of the enactment of such a law. But the proposition simultaneously presented in the two houses, taken in conjunction with the demands urged in the West and South-west, indicates a determination to facilitate repudiation on the part of counties, municipalities, and corporations, and to leave its victims at the mercy of tribunals created by those against whom the law is invoked.

IS GOLD BECOMING DEARER?

The last number of the London Economist (Dec. 28) contains an interesting article on the "Fluctuations and the Purchasing Power of Gold." This is a subject which has engaged the close attention of some of the ablest economists of England and the Continent for many years. The view taken ten years ago by Prof. Jevons, of Oxford University, was that at that time gold had very considerably depreciated during the twenty years previous. He said: "I cannot help reasserting with the utmost confidence, that a real rise in prices to the extent of 18 per cent., as measured by fifty chief commodities, has been established since 1849. * * * This is an undoubted depreciation of gold, because it represents a real diminution in the purchasing power of gold. Nor can we avoid attributing it to the gold discoveries. Indeed, as Prof. Cairnes has so distinctly pointed out, the effect of those discoveries is probably much greater than we can prove, because the course of prices in previous years was decidedly downward, so that the new gold has both prevented a further fall and occasioned a rise in its stead."

The Economist is of the opinion that since 1873 a process directly the opposite of the one above described has been going on. To establish this conclusion, it takes the average prices of 22 articles in 1845 to 1850 at 100, and makes a comparison, of which the following are the principal points: From 1850 to 1857 there was a rise from 100 to 136; to 1859, a fall to 115; to 1864, a rise to 172; to 1869, a fall to 121; a temporary advance in 1870 to 122; and in the succeeding years fluctuations as below: 1871, 118; 1872, 129; 1873, 134; 1874, 131; 1875, 126; 1876, 123; 1877, 123; 1878, 116; 1878, (December,) 104. From these facts the Economist draws the conclusion that there has been since 1869 a fall in prices to the extent of 16 per cent.; that this is an undoubted appreciation of gold, because it represents a real increase in its purchasing power, and that there are reasons why an important increase of late years in the actual worth of the unit of value should afford the real clue to the problem.

Of these reasons, the first and most important is that there has been a decided falling off in the world's production of gold. Some estimates are given, of which the mean is as follows:

Average 1873, 1874, 1875	19,350,000

We confess that this method of demonstrating a fall in the production of gold seems to us very far from conclusive. In the first place, to take a mere mathematical mean of estimates does not give a result any more likely to be true than either of the estimates averaged. Unless it can be shown that the higher estimates erred just as much in one direction as the lower estimates did in the opposite one, the errors do not balance, and the mean may be more delusive than one of the factors. In the next place, according to the Economist's own estimate, there was no fall in the average annual production from 1863-5 to 1873-5. On the contrary, there was a rise of £700,000, or 3½ per cent. Finally, according to the mean estimates, the fall in the production of gold was less than 5 per cent., while the fall in prices was 16 per cent.

The Economist next sets forth the increased demand for gold in Germany and the United States for currency, estimating the two since 1871 at about $70,000,000. To this it adds the increase in bank reserves, and arrives at the conclusion that during the past seven years the world has actually drawn about £1,200,000 from its previously accrued stock. If this conclusion is correct, it must be admitted that the remaining deduction of the Economist, stated with characteristic caution, is equally so, namely, that "probably gold has risen." But it must not be forgotten that the solution is far from complete, and that the most important factors employed are in the highest degree indefinite. We have already referred to the variation of the estimates of the gold product. That in the estimates of the increased demand for gold for coinage is hardly less, and for the amount employed in the arts, and that for wear and tear is certainly as great. Then to the effect of an increased demand in some directions, and the decreased supply, there is the offset which seems almost incapable of even approximate calculation, arising from the use of bank-notes and of other forms of credit to facilitate exchanges. Other things being equal, it is undoubtedly true that prices vary according to the amount of gold, where gold is the currency, or the basis of the currency, employed in exchanges. But it is a matter of great uncertainty at all times whether other things are or are not equal, i. e., whether the variations in one direction are or are not balanced by variations in the opposite direction. The discussion has a practical value, principally so far as it is likely to affect the course of public opinion in regard to the fitness of gold as money, as opposed to gold interchangable at a fixed ratio with silver. But the conclusion of the Economist that gold has probably risen, cannot fairly be made to sustain the cause of silver. Whatever may be the fluctuations of gold, they are far less than those of silver, and there has not yet been discovered any method of harnessing the two together in a way to make the fluctuations of the one counterbalance those of the other.

MASSACHUSETTS RETRENCHMENT.

Gov. Talbot, of Massachusetts, in his Message to the Legislature, upon his induction into office, recommended radical retrenchment in the expenses of the State. He said that the cost of the State Government was too great, and that a considerable saving should be made in the compensation of State officers, clerks, and miscellaneous employes. The Legislature has promptly responded to the Governor's suggestions, and a bill has been prepared by a special committee to reduce salaries and emoluments. As the Governor notified the Legislature that he should waive his constitutional right to receive his salary without abatement during the term for which he was chosen, the committee took him at his word, and reduced his salary from $5,000 to $4,000. The Lieutenant-Governor's pay is reduced from $2,500 to $2,000. Members of the Governor's Council are now paid $1,200 each; it is recommended that they be paid $800. Other recommendations would reduce the salary of the Governor's Secretary from $2,500 to $1,500, the pay of members of the Legislature from $650 (for the session and without mileage) to $450. The reductions proposed in the cost of the Legislature are quite sweeping, the pay of doorkeepers, for example, being cut down from $5 per day, and "$100 extra," to $4 per day. Chaplains are to receive $200, instead of $400, and the number of doorkeepers, messengers, &c., is to be kept at twenty; there now are twenty-five or thirty of these employes.

The total amount to be saved by this retrenchment is about $69,000 a year—not a very large sum, it must be admitted. But it will be observed that the number of officials required to govern Massachusetts is not large. Moreover, their present salaries are not princely. The committee, in their report, say that they would not recommend this apparently radical change, if, in their opinion, it would impair the quality of the service to be rendered. They believe that "the salaries recommended are not so small as to deter the best men in all the walks of life from accepting service in the Legislature, nor so large as to lend a temptation to unfit men to seek the office for the sake of its compensation." In Massachusetts, where we look for practical illustrations of the best political theories, seeking office for the sake of its emoluments ought not to be common. In New-York, we pay $10,000 a year to the Governor, $5,000 to the Lieutenant-Governor, $1,500 (and mileage) to each member of the Legislature, $3,500 to the chief clerks of each house, and $6 per day to doorkeepers. Most of these salaries are fixed in the Constitution, and no change could be made in their amount without much time being consumed. In Massachusetts the Legislature controls the whole question of salaries, and it was accustomed to fix its own annual pay, from time to time, until an act was passed in 1858, providing for the compensation of members. In 1865 this law was repealed, and the matter was left for each successive Legislature to adjust at its own pleasure.

Considering how much money is wasted in extravagant salaries in some of the States of the Union, the schedule of Massachusetts salaries seems almost primitive in its frugality. And there is a certain sternness of virtue in the proposition to save $69,000 a year from this modest disbursement. But we have been long accustomed to regard the Governors of Massachusetts with a respect which does not take into account the amount of their official salary. People remember Edward Everett, George N. Briggs, John A. Andrew, and other eminent men who have governed Massachusetts, and we may presume that the standard of official honor is yet maintained in that State so loftily that their successors will never "seek the office for the sake of its compensation." These recommendations of the Committee on Retrenchment, however, do not end their labors, we may suppose. The Governor has asked the Legislature to consider the expediency of consolidating some of the State boards and commissions and abolishing others. If this suggestion is acted upon, there will be yet additional retrenchment in the cost of the State Government.

The example of Massachusetts is certainly worthy of general imitation. Taxes are everywhere burdensome; and, although counties and municipalities outrun the States in their extravagance, the State may fix a standard of official compensation which the county or the town cannot lightly disregard. There is no reason why the people of Massachusetts should be governed more cheaply (considering the sum of their population) than the people of any other State. Present salaries in Massachusetts are not large, and the proposed reductions ought to satisfy the most economical of tax-payers. Certainly, the prompt and business-like manner in which the Legislature has addressed itself to the subject of retrenchment is worthy of all praise. This is a time of searching for the financial leaks of Government, and it is necessary that the examination should extend through all branches of State, county, and municipal administration. If the work of retrenchment were honestly undertaken, there are very few States in the Union which could not save more than $69,000 a year.

"THE ERA OF GOOD FEELING."

As is well known, the Loafers' Club is a representative institution. Its membership gives a literary varnish to young men about town, and keeps literary men well up in the newest slang of Wall-street. Its title is a happy reminder of the fact that there is in the world too much of motion and of action, and that it is sweet to have a place where the overtasked broker and the fagged contributor to the daily press can forget sublunary cares in a common devotion to the ennobling game of "seven up." But even in the Loafers' Club it is not "always afternoon." The club is presided over by an alleged literary gentleman, whose intellectual greatness has passed into a proverb, and the restlessness of whose mind is not surpassed by its power. To this guiding spirit of the institution is invariably telegraphed the arrival of any English novelist, from the second to the seventh rank, as soon as he is signaled off Sandy Hook. A private wire communicating with the club kitchen at once conveys the order to prepare a frugal banquet, and to the illustrious stranger are promptly extended the hospitalities of the "Great Republic," so far, at least, as the Loafers are competent to represent that comprehensive entity.

Sometimes the club finds an apology for dining in honor of native greatness. Next to imported novelists and Western journalists, it has a weakness for Mayors. It dearly loves an ex-Mayor, without respect to antecedents or previous condition, it has a kindly indulgence for those who have tried to be Mayors and failed, but it may be seen at its best when duty calls it to devote copious libations to the entertainment of a Mayor-elect. So scrupulous are the Loafers about "honoring" Mayors that a gentleman who became, by accident, chief magistrate for a month was invited to partake of their hospitalities. It was "perfectly natural," therefore, as the President of the club remarked, that no time should be lost in reminding the gentleman whom the people elected last Fall that he had really become Mayor of New-York. Nobody had thought of that before, and it might have occurred sooner to him of the "powerful mind" presiding over the club had his massive energies not been absorbed in penning agonizing appeals to the rural population to accept a Webster's Dictionary as a slight mark of his appreciation of their efforts to read the Weekly Trombone. It is a well-known characteristic of great intellects to seek rest after one occupation by engaging in another, and it was while the President of the Loafers was finding recreation in looking after the election of a Speaker at Albany, that he remembered he had forgotten something. Calling the telegraph in requisition, as his manner is, the great man supplied the heedless omission by summoning the new Mayor to dinner.

It occurred to him, moreover, even amid the pressure of cares of State, that it would be "a pleasant thing and a good thing to bring the late antagonists together." Not having been entirely certain, either before or after election, as to who had run against the new Mayor, the directing spirit of the Loafers and of the Trombone invited both the defeated candidate and the rejected dummy for Mayor to do "honor" to their successful opponent. To an ordinary mind there might have occurred the somewhat awkward reflection that the political twins who had aspired to occupy the Mayor's chair had stigmatized their opponent and his chief supporters as "tricksters," "traitors," "dead-beats," or in terms to that effect, and that this enterprising pair had been, by the popular verdict which elected the new Mayor, set down as the representatives of organized corruption, spoliation, and misgovernment. But the Trombone had lent itself to no such discords—had, in fact, droned out a very soothing tune about one candidate being quite as good as another. Indeed, if a brazen instrument could be held capable of moral sentiments, it would have been very ungrateful to have emitted anything to the prejudice of a person who had kept it bright with liberal friction of corporation advertising in the past, and equally impolitic to have maligned one who might be induced to repeat the operation in the future. It will thus be readily understood how the President of the Loafers "wanted to show that in this country men of the most vehement political antagonisms could recognize sincerity of purpose in opponents, and respect as gentlemen those whom they abhorred as politicians."

From the point of view of the Loafers, the dinner was a great success. The gentleman who was the guest of the evening may have inwardly marveled at the company he found himself in, but he gave no hint either of his amazement or amusement. The politicians were, of course, equal to the occasion. The very "honest" person who had just been detected in a rather scurvy attempt to pack the membership of another somewhat notorious club, ventilated afresh some characteristically "honest" statements about his share in reducing debt and taxation, and magnanimously declared his readiness to co-operate with the new Mayor, whom he had, perhaps erroneously, regarded as a weak-minded dupe of traitors, tricksters, &c. And all his organs took up the chorus. The Evening Squeaker and the Daily Blatherskite, which had been found on the wrong side after election, waxed tuneful and eloquent over the era of conciliation which had been ushered in by the dinner with the Loafers. The new Mayor was informed that the people who had elected him did not know what they were about, and that, instead of dealing summarily with his "late antagonists" and all their works, he was expected to make them his trusted friends and to adopt their methods as his own. "The brain that suggested the dinner" with the Loafers has outweighed eighty thousand votes, and Tammany Hall is to receive a new coat of whitewash preparatory to being made the permanent abode of Reform. The "silly season" cannot be upon us in midwinter; it must, as the organs say, be "the era of good feeling," "the Municipal Millennium"—for the thieves.

The savings banks in the country generally made a much poorer exhibit during the year just closed than they have made usually. For example, the 59 banks of Maine showed a decrease of 10,683 in the number of depositors, and a shrinkage of deposits to the extent of $2,743,565 29, exclusive of the marking off of $1,035,481 03 by legal decrees. In Massachusetts, the banks showed a reduction of near 80,000 depositors, and of some $28,000,000 in deposits. Apart from the augmented need by depositors of their money in the dull, hard year, the loss of confidence in the banks, and the withdrawal of large sums in consequence, has no doubt materially affected the exhibit. There have been so many rascally failures, the dishonesty of officers has been so plain and inexcusable, that years must pass before savings banks can regain the credit they have once enjoyed.

A somewhat remarkable tribute to the virtues and graces of the late Father Cummings, of St. Stephen's Church, in this City, appears in the New-York Observer, this week. Dr. Cummings died Jan. 4, 1865, and the recurrence of the anniversary of his death incites Dr. S. I. Prime to recall some of the most striking reminiscences of that good man. Dr. Cummings, as many of our City readers know, was not only beloved by members of his own communion, but by multitudes of Protestants. And the publication, at this late day, of another tribute to his memory, in the columns of a Presbyterian newspaper, is a good sign, as well as a striking testimony to the catholicity of the deceased priest. St. Stephen's Church, under Dr. Cummings' pastorate, was famed, as now, for its beautiful music, and several anecdotes of the Pastor's love of the divine art are related in Dr. Prime's sketch of his friend. He says: "Mr. W. A. Seaver was in the habit of seeing him almost every day, [in his last illness,] and each visit was now, apparently, to be the last. One day, as the end was very near and the two friends were parting, the dying said to the living, 'Come to the funeral, the music will be splendid.'"

The wedding of Princess Thyra and the Duke of Cumberland, which took place in Copenhagen Dec. 21, seems, according to the reports of the Danish papers, to have been a magnificent pageant, a spectacle "never to be forgotten by those who saw it." The programme is, at all events, a very remarkable document. It was elaborated by the Grand Master of Ceremony, then laid before the King for approbation, and finally published in the newspapers. It regulated the most minute details of the proceedings; who should walk first in the procession and who second; when these should be turned to the right and when to the left; what there should be said and what there should be done. Thus, it told the young couple to arise from their kneeling position before the altar immediately after the pronunciation of the benediction, and then, while the salute of one hundred guns was firing, to turn first to the right, tendering their "humble submission and filial gratitude to his Majesty the King, and her, Majesty the Queen," and then to the left, receiving the "heartfelt congratulations and well-wishes of the other royal persons present." It appears from this programme that the Danish rank-order is a rather intricate affair. Some people in that country are "high and well born;" others are "high-well-born," and between these two kinds of people there is a tremendous difference. Again, offices confer one kind of rank, titles another; and very perplexing complications may arise from one kind of rank overlapping the other. It happened, in the beginning of this century, that one Sunday during service there arose a great clamor in the Church of Our Lady, in Copenhagen, among the maid-servants of the Professors of the university, because the girls could not agree upon who should sit first and who should sit second in the pew accorded to them. The clamor ended with some hard fighting, and the question had to be settled by a royal rescript, which ordered all servants to take rank according to the rank of their masters. In order to avoid any such disgraceful disturbance, the wedding programme of Princess Thyra ordered that, when the bridal procession was about to form, every single name should be called out by the Grand Master of Ceremony according to the place its possessor was to occupy in the pageant; but what tremor and heart-burnings were there not during that roll-call!

Among the wedding presents which Princess Thyra received, the most costly was a complete garniture of diamonds from the Emperor of Russia; the most beautiful a jewelry case from Danish ladies; the most curious an enormous kringle, or wedding-cake from the baker apprentices of Copenhagen. The jewelry case consists of a rectangular box, made of silver inlaid with gold and emaille, mounted with bands of sapphires, and bearing on the top of the lid the name of the Princess in large diamonds. The box rests on the necks of four dragons with diamond eyes and teeth, and ugly enough to frighten away any thief who might approach the shrine. The kringle was brought to the palace an hour before the wedding by a deputation of five young bakers, who were most cordially received by the Queen, and shown the other wedding presents. Meanwhile, the young bride entered the room in her bridal attire. The subdued but nevertheless audible exclamations she answered with a quick little laugh, and promised the bakers that the kringle should be served the next morning at her breakfast-table and, according to old Danish custom, every one belonging to her new household should have a piece of it.

The experience of the last few years has shown that the cultivation of great farms in the West, where they are almost entirely owned, has been anything but lucrative. They have proved in the main both injurious to individuals and the country; the failure of the colossal farmers in Illinois being examples of the untoward fate attendant upon gigantic enterprises of the kind. Farming on a grand scale, even with the assistance of improved machinery and implements, is a dangerous experiment here, and usually terminates disastrously. The majority of agriculturists who have made money on small farms have lost it on large farms, and this experience has been repeated in Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Nebraska, and Dakota. The trouble is that our big farmers undertake far more than they can accomplish, and their grand ambition ends in partial or slovenly cultivation. It is estimated that the money sunk by large farmers during the last 10 years amounts to more than $100,000,000, and it is thought that their failures have taught them a valuable and much-needed lesson. Much of the success of France has been ascribed to the subdivision of the country into small farms, which, thoroughly tilled, support a large population. Although we do not usually regard France as agricultural, she produces more wheat, it is said, than the whole of the United States. Her crop for 1868 is represented at 350,000,000 bushels, while ours for the same year was only 240,000,000 bushels. Wines, silks, laces, oil, and fine fabrics of divers kinds are not her sole exports; she sends enormous quantities of grain, butter, eggs, and other household products to Great Britain. Two-thirds of the entire area of France is under cultivation, while little over one-third—if so much—is under cultivation in this country, and her farms yield on an average, per acre, three or four times what the broad regions of the West do.

The cause of the trouble between the Bey of Tunis and the French Republic, about which so much has been said lately, and which has resulted in Ben Ismail tendering a full apology, arose about an apparently very small matter. It appears that the Prime Minister of Tunis declined to recognize certain obligations contracted by his predecessor in office, in which assistance was promised a French nobleman in the establishment of a stud farm. The success of the venture being thus hampered, the French breeder of Arab horses was finally obliged to reduce his stud. Availing himself of this breach of the contract, the Minister determined to cancel the arrangement altogether, and to take possession of the ceded lands. But the breeder appealed against such arbitrary proceedings, and M. Waddington, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, before whom the matter was laid, invited the Tunisian Government to institute an official inquiry, in order to determine how it came about that the contract broke down, and, pending this investigation, he declared that he would not allow the property of a French subject to be touched. To this the Bey's Minister replied that he would not have an investigation, but that on a certain day his men would take possession of the lands and breeding establishments. The French Consul warned the Bey that the execution of this threat would be considered as an insult to the French flag; and that he would send an officer and the janissaries of his department to the breeder's assistance, with orders to oppose, by force, any violation of French property. The following morning a number of Tunisian Generals and officers, accompanied by the Austrian Consul-General, arrived at the establishment, and with drew only upon a formal declaration being made to them that the troops of the Consulate would only yield to force. The French Government then demanded an explanation and an apology, which was given on the 10th inst.

GENERAL NOTES.

Hon. Columbus Delano, of Ohio, who has been very ill of gastric fever, is reported to be convalescent.

The Cincinnati Enquirer speaks of Potter's alleged investigation of election frauds as the champion fraud of the day.

A West Virginia Democratic paper alludes to Thurman and Hendricks as members of the present House of Representatives.

The Union League of Philadelphia is wrought up to a high pitch of excitement over the question whether card-playing shall be permitted in the club-house. A vote is to be taken Feb. 4, and each member will be required to vote personally.

W. B. Merchant, the "Independent" Republican candidate in the Third District of Louisiana, now says that he, too, will contest Mr. Acklen's seat in the next Congress. Mr. Hebert, regular Republican, has already commenced his contest.

Gen. Longstreet's salary as Postmaster of Gainesville, Ga., will be $1,100 a year, which sum, the Petersburg (Va.) Index-Appeal says, is more, allowing for the difference in currency, than he received as Lieutenant-General of the Confederate States.

The colored people of New-Orleans celebrated Emancipation Day on the 6th inst., the 1st having been stormy. There was a procession of military companies and others, and an oration was delivered by Hon. J. J. Wright to a large concourse of citizens.

An Onondaga County jury gave a woman $8,000 damages in a suit for breach of promise of marriage, whereas she had sued for only $6,000. Her counsel came to the rescue, and informed the court that his client would be satisfied with the original amount asked, and the verdict was so recorded.

The Denver (Col.) Tribune says that there is a universal feeling of gratification among the Republicans of that State over the selection of Prof. Hill as United States Senator to succeed Mr. Chaffee, and that no one indorses his candidacy now more heartily than those gentlemen who, but a few days ago, were his competitors for the position.

The Trenton Gazette thus describes a bit of youthful New-Jersey grit: "Dr. E. C. Baker's little son, only 12 years of age, coming home to Franklin Park on Friday, Jan. 3, got off the cars at Princeton instead of at Dean's Pond, where his father was to have met him, and walked to Franklin Park alone, a distance of 10 miles, through the snow and cold. He froze his left ear badly, but otherwise did not feel the cold."

Mr. Charles Selden Douglas, formerly a merchant in this City, and for several months past totally blind, was found dead in the bath-room in his house in New-Haven on Monday night, upon the return of the members of his family from the theatre. He had told the servants not to disturb him, as he wished to be sure of sleeping soundly, and his attendant, therefore, did not visit his room until the family came home.

The contest for United States Senator is causing no end of trouble and bad feeling among the Democrats of North Carolina. Chairman Ashe, of the State Committee, even, has found it necessary to come out in a vigorous card, denying that he prostituted his position to promote the interests of Senator Merrimon before his withdrawal, and denouncing all such statements as falsehoods, and their authors as base slanderers.

A Scranton gentleman, who had discovered that some sparrows had built their nests between the folds of the closed awnings on his office windows, shook them down. "About 5 o'clock," the Scranton Republican continues the story, "we saw the sparrows looking for their beds, and no one need try to convince us now that they haven't words in their bird language equivalent to those which we usually express by dashes and other equivocal symbols."

The Vicksburg (Miss.) Herald is not satisfied with the sounding words of Gov. Nicholls, of Louisiana, but says: "We should have been rejoiced if Gov. Nicholls had taken this spirit of bull-dozing that he says exists in some parts of Louisiana by the throat and choked the life out of it, even if it necessitated the free use of hemp to do it. He, his courts, and his Legislature must do this, or confess that the Republicans are fully excused for interfering to protect voters in their rights."

The United States Local Inspectors at San Francisco have suspended Capt. H. Z. Howard, of the wrecked Pacific Mail steamer Georgia, for two years from the date of its loss. They say: "From the testimony of several of the passengers and officers, and from Capt. Howard's own statement, we find that he did not navigate his ship on this occasion with the care that a master of steam vessels should have exercised, thereby causing the steamship Georgia to be run ashore and lost, and endangering the lives of all on board through his negligence."

The Union soldiers of Wisconsin, who met in Berlin, that State, on New Year's Day, organized the Wisconsin Reunion Association, and a circular has been sent out by it requesting all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the State to send by postal card their names, letter of company or companies, and number of regiment in which they served, and their present occupation and Post Office address, to Griff. J. Thomas, Secretary of the association, at Berlin. That gentleman is to endeavor to prepare a complete roster, in alphabetical order, of company and regiment, for record and publication. The sailors are asked to send the names of the boats on which they served.

The Kansas Historical Society has lately received from Col. E. B. Whitman, of Cambridge, Mass., the original flag which was carried to that State by a company of South Carolinians in the tumultuous early days of its history, and figured conspicuously in Lawrence during the burning of the "Free State Hotel," and the destruction of the press and types of the Herald of Freedom, May 21, 1856, by a posse under command of Sheriff Jones. It was captured by Capt. James A. Harvey, of Chicago, who commanded the "Free State boys," in an engagement near Oskaloosa on the 11th of September following. It is a crimson banner, of cotton stuff, in size 4 by 6 feet, having in the centre, and shown on both sides, a large white star; and on one side the inscription, "South Carolina," and on the other side the words, "Southern Rights."

MRS. COBB'S TRIAL ENDING.

CLOSING ARGUMENTS ON BOTH SIDES

MR. THRESHER'S ANALYSIS, FOR THE DEFENSE, OF THE EVIDENCE—MR. WALLER'S PLEA FOR A CONVICTION—NO HOPE FOR BISHOP—THE FINAL ARGUMENT FOR THE PRISONER BEGUN.

NORWICH, Jan. 15.—The point at which Mr. Thresher resumed his argument for Mrs. Cobb this morning was the question whether, even if it should appear that Cobb died of poison, poison was administered by the prisoner. He discussed the credibility of the arsenic-eating story, and claimed that it was conclusively proved by the vast number of authorities which the defense had consulted and introduced in evidence. The expression of Taylor that this practice had not been proved, the speaker said had been wrested from its original meaning, and was contradictory of his previous characterization of Roscoe's statements. Cobb's leanness was dilated upon as the reason why he should take the poison himself. Moreover, it was unlike a woman to administer such diminutive and continuous doses as the deceased man must have taken. If Mrs. Cobb had poisoned her husband she would have given him enough at once to finish him. Mrs. Cobb's remarkably brave, calm bearing, and her clearness when on the stand, were cited as the strongest evidence of her innocence. They could not be accounted for in any other way. Her mother's testimony as to Cobb's taking arsenic strongly corroborated the prison-r's story. Cobb's assurances that he was taking only small doses, and medicinally, might naturally allay all suspicions and alarm on the part of the devoted wife.

The speaker resented the remark of counsel for the State, to the effect that Mrs. Cobb had only the support of the testimony of her own family, as ungenerous, to say the least. The falling out of Cobb's beard, years before the alleged conspiracy against his life began, conclusively showed that his taking of arsenic began long ago. No other cause is assigned for that phenomenon than poison. But even if this explanation be rejected, there was, nevertheless, this vital question to ask, whether Mrs. Cobb administered the poison. The State rested its own case on this point on the testimony of a self-confessed murderer, adulterer, seducer, and perjurer; a man who had betrayed the confidence of a friend and brother Mason. The contradictory nature of his several confessions in jail, and their contradiction of his testimony on this stand, showed how little he was to be trusted. It was as easy to understand Bishop's motive in perjuring himself as it was to understand the motives of the father of all evil, yet easier, for it was useless to deny that Bishop entertained a hope of prolonging his life in telling this story. But for Bishop's testimony no one would suppose for an instant that these cases would be seriously heard in this court. Would not a man who had tried to seduce the wife of his bosom friend and failed be wicked enough to try to dispose of her now that his purpose had failed? It was a maxim that when a man had been proved to be a liar the only safe thing to do was to reject all he said.

"In the first place," said the counsel, "not one of the many letters said to have been exchanged have been produced. The only evidence of their existence is the presentation of some pieces of poetry, which have no significance except such as is criminally attached by Bishop. The absurdity of her addressing any of these poems to such a miserable fellow as Bishop was too manifest to this intelligent jury for even the eloquent State's Attorney to overcome. Now, as to the visits, rides, and so forth. All that has been proved is perfectly consistent with innocence. Perhaps, as Mrs. Cobb looks back on it, she may regret all this intercourse as exposing her to suspicion, but there does not appear to have been anything criminal. The calls were made for business, both according to his and her statement. It is no uncommon thing in every community for ladies of culture, influence, and devout character, to seek the attentions and admiration of other men than their husbands, and for people to talk about them. Yet, not once in a thousand instances do these relations ever extend to criminality. In the present case there is no evidence but Bishop's of any criminal conduct, and this is the more improbable when one considers what a noble husband the accused woman had, and what a worthless fellow Bishop is. As for the only significant present alleged to have been given—the cup marked 'Pet'—the State has failed to offer it in evidence, and neither the child nor any members of the family assert ed that they had seen it. It is improbable that these meetings abroad should be held when Bishop was seeing the accused woman four or five times a day at home, alone and unmolested. Another improbable feature of these stories is Bishop's own assertion that he carried on this intercourse on such a package of strychnine, which he had bought for Mrs. Cobb, but did not give to her as they walked, because he wanted to write a note to go with it; yet that note never contained any suggestion of how the poison was to be used. The alleged incident of handing Bishop a book with the poison the next day after Cobb died is so utterly improbable as to make the prisoner appear a perfect fool, yet no one has ever attempted to question her intelligence."

The seeming inconsistencies between the statements of Mrs. Cobb before the Coroner's jury, and before this court were explained by her broken spirits and health on the former occasion. "Finally," the counsel said, "we have Mrs. Cobb's own narrative. She admits Bishop's visits to the house, but she denies all criminal intercourse. Her visits to friends and to the library were not a deep device of indifference to her husband's illness; because even the morning he died he said he felt no worse than usual. Bishop had innumerable opportunities to poison Cobb, by giving the drug in social drinks and in supplies he sent to the house for Cobb's exclusive use. He had the intent, too. And his refusal to answer the questions about his wife's death strengthens the suspicion that he is capable of committing such an act."

State's Attorney Waller, in his plea, following Mr. Thresher, said that Cobb's death could not be attributed to the murderer's desire for gain, as the dead man had saved little or nothing. All his earnings had been spent in dressing his little ones, adorning the woman he loved, embellishing the home wherein he lived, and providing, by insurance, against the future. Yet only his wife could have obtained this money had avarice incited his murder. The idea of suicide was absurd, for at all during his life, even through its last year, he was cheerful and devoted to society. Not a medicine that Cobb took could have caused death. The speaker could not believe it necessary to disprove the arsenic-eating theory; not a soul besides the prisoner knew that Cobb used this poison. Neither parent nor doctor ever caught a hint of it, nor had a doctor or druggist been put upon the stand to show that they had furnished him with arsenic. How long did Mrs. Cobb conceal her knowledge of this practice? Until there was no longer hope that the arsenic would not be found in his body. Hints started on the first day of illness from the effect upon Cobb himself, who daily grew paler and thinner, instead of gaining color and fatness. The testimony of Prof. Doremus was carefully reviewed. The smallness of the stains offered in evidence was not therefore an untrue sign. The delicacy of scientific tests was wonderful, but the tests were unerring. Prof. Doremus had made no less than 50 tests in the course of his examination of Cobb's body, and every one showed arsenic. No one expected to find arsenic in lumps, in ounces. It would only be found in this form, and here it was.

"Now, why," continued Mr. Waller, "was Cobb murdered? Here is a woman, to whom God has given a fair face and a fair form, stands accused of this crime. Was such a thing heard of before? Innumerable instances are known in this country. This method of committing murder has the advantages of secrecy and time. The counsel for defense has alluded to the presumption that women are always true to their husbands. Within a few years, under the shadow of many pulpits, a sad demoralization has been noticed, and crime has become awfully prevalent. And unless this crime be punished, the time will soon come when divorces will be fewer than now in our courts, and the separation will be affected by poison. The question now arises, Was this woman true to her husband? The small incident of that dance at the masquerade ball, in 1877, had been a seed from which grew the mighty tree under whose shadow we sit to-day. From that time Cobb was induced by the woman to change his usual method of getting his groceries himself and to allow her to get them in a way which brought Bishop to her door, and there he came daily, four or five times a day, staying more than an hour alone with a married woman, while her husband was away. What signifies it? Can this woman be honest and true? She is not, and Kate Cobb knows it! Cobb did not with her eye and tone have said to Bishop that he must leave, had she regarded him a nuisance. She knew her neighbors were talking about her, and yet she clung to this man."

The charge of unfaithfulness was further substantiated, Mr. Waller asserted, by the exchange of presents Mrs. Cobb had a well-to do husband, yet she accepted not less than a dozen presents from Bishop, a poor grocery clerk, with a salary of only $600. Stress was laid upon the coincidence between the dates of Bishop's buying a pencil from a local dealer and Mrs. Cobb's finding exactly a pencil in the pocket of the boat, and between his buying a cup marked "Pet" and her buying a tooth-pick marked "Pet," the only ones who ever heard Mrs. Cobb's husband call her by that name. To prove the adultery to which this all led, it was not necessary to rely solely on Bishop's word. When he was alone in his house one night in March a woman was seen to enter it. Mrs. Cobb admitted that she was there that night, but tried to explain it away. There could be only one explanation of it. Unfaithfulness was still further proved by her conduct just after her husband died.

Mr. Waller touched upon Bishop's motive in telling this story. "For that wretched man," he said, "there is now no hope. He stands upon the scaffold, the rope is about his neck, and in a few days the fatal noose their breath will solemnly pronounce upon him the sentence of death." The jury was urged not to let the woman off with "murder in the second degree." Women were entitled to the full protection of the law; they should have its full punishment. The argument closed with an appeal for the vindication of the wounded honor of the community.

Col. John T. Wait began the closing plea for the prisoner about 4 o'clock. After speaking of the wide-spread interest in this case, which had been ex parte, and calculated to bias public opinion, he said that suspicion never fixed upon the prisoner until "this miserable Bishop" began his contradictory and imperfect confessions. At first Bishop tried to escape by making it appear that Cobb had asked him to buy the poison; afterward he thought to save his neck by throwing the blame on this woman. Gossip and rumors followed, and public sentiment was arrayed against the woman before she had been tried. Yet she had remained calm and silent, resting on the love of her mother and her child, and confident of her innocence. Before proceeding to discuss the evidence, the speaker submitted a series of points, on which he asked the court to charge the jury.

The counsel drew a contrast between the character and appearance on the stand of Bishop and Mrs. Cobb—the one miserable, cringing, self-accusing, self-convicting; the other calm, unhesitating, courageous, and confident. Col. Wait then spoke of the analyses of Prof. Doremus. "Prof. Johnson says that he cannot satisfy himself," he continued, "that the processes adopted by Prof. Doremus were accurate. The State asks why these chemical authorities quoted by the defense are not brought forth. They were not able to get them. For eleven hours, after the trial had begun, the defense was able, by the courtesy of the State, to secure the services of Prof. Johnson. Prof. Johnson stands at the head of his profession in New-England. He came with no parade of professional machinery, and tells a simple tale. His testimony must shake the jury's confidence in the statements of Prof. Doremus. Bishop says arsenic was first bought March 18, and that it was given Cobb several times a day. Half an ounce was given him in 21 days; that is, an average of over 11 grains a day. Yet these doctors and scientific men say that two or three grains is a fatal dose. Pro. suppose half the arsenic was lost during the time Bishop swears it was being administered, even then Cobb was getting almost six grains a day. The highest amount which the Styrians are said to eat is about five grains a day. Either this witness swears to a deliberate and absurd lie, or else Prof. Doremus' testimony cannot be relied upon."

At this point Col. Wait pleaded fatigue, and the court was adjourned.

MULCTING A RAILROAD COMPANY.

THE ERIE COMPANY TO PAY DAMAGES FOR INJURIES TO TWO OF ITS EMPLOYES.

PORT JERVIS, Jan. 15.—The January Term of the Supreme Court of this district, now in session at Goshen, is the most important term for many years. The calendar comprises 149 cases, many of them having been taken to higher courts, and sent back for new trial. Among the latter cases are two which have caused much interest in this part of the State, as their decision settles the question as to whether a railroad company is responsible for deaths resulting from accidents to employes. These are the cases of Stevenson against Hugh J. Jewett, as Receiver of the Erie Railway, and Fuller against the same, to recover $5,000 damages in each case, claimed by the plaintiffs for the loss of their husbands, whose deaths occurred on July 23, 1875, by an explosion of a locomotive boiler on the Delaware Division of the Erie Railway.

The case of Stevenson was tried on Jan. 15, 1878, at a circuit court, before Judge J. F. Barnard and a jury. It was claimed by the plaintiff that the locomotive was unsafe, rotten, and condemned at the time of the explosion, and that the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully required her husband to labor on the locomotive after the same had been so condemned. After the proof on the part of the plaintiff had been submitted, the defendants moved for a non-suit upon the ground that the plaintiff had not shown any negligence on the part of the railway company or its employes, and upon the additional ground that the engineer or fireman had equal opportunities to discover any defect that the other employes of the defendant could have, and that this fact precluded the plaintiff from recovery. The Judge held that the Master Mechanic, J. A. Van Vechten, who had ordered the repairs of locomotives, was not an agent of the defendant or its representatives and that his employment was not superior to that of the deceased man. Hence, under the rule in regard to damages resulting to employes by the negligence of company employes of the same grade of employment, the court granted the motion for a non-suit.

The case was then appealed to the General Term of the Supreme Court, where it was held that Mr. Van Vechten was an agent and representative of the defendant, and the case was sent back to the Circuit for trial. On the trial of the cause at the Circuit, yesterday, the evidence as before was taken in detail. The case was given to the jury in the evening, and after a short deliberation they returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in the amount of $5,500, with six cents. An arrangement was finally entered into by opposing counsel that the Stevenson case should be a precedent for the Fuller case.

DEPOSITORS TO RECEIVE ONLY FIVE PER CENT.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 15.—The fourth general meeting of the Franklin Savings Fund Society, which closed its doors in January, 1874, was held here today. The report of the Assignees was read, showing a cash balance in their hands of $4,400. It says they found that the books of the institution had not been kept carefully; the investment account was in lead-pencil, and all the money of the depositors had been disposed of before the bankrupt, and not a dollar came into their hands. The mortgages were evidently manufactured for the purpose of making a show of assets, and two-thirds of them were subject to advances to be made to builders. Loans worth $200 were put down at $2,000, and many of the buildings were not half completed. An excited discussion among the depositors ensued. A motion to declare a dividend of 5 per cent. was adopted, and, without accepting the Assignees' report, the meeting adjourned, the Register stating that the 5 per cent. dividend would be paid within 10 days.

WINDING UP INSOLVENT COMPANIES.

ALBANY, Jan. 15.—On the petition of Superintendent Smyth, of the Insurance Department, Justice Westbrook has granted an order appointing Gunning S. Bedford Referee, to take proof and ascertain who is entitled to a share in the $111,990 of securities deposited in the department by the Security Life Insurance and Annuity Company of New-York, now dissolved. The company was organized Jan. 16, 1862, but on examination in 1877 was found to be insolvent, and William H. Wickham was appointed Receiver and wound up its affairs. The order also directs the Superintendent to appoint an actuary.

John F. O'Neil has been appointed Receiver of the Empire Mutual Life Insurance Company. This company has been out of business for several years, but its security deposit is still in the Insurance Department to be disposed of.

A TRUSTEE CHARGED WITH FRAUD.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Jan. 15.—A Nashville (Tenn.) dispatch states that witnesses have gone before the Grand Jury to procure an indictment against Charles J. Cohen for embezzlement. Cohen was at one time one of the most prominent Hebrew citizens of Nashville. Soon after Samuel Hicks was killed by the Baxter brothers last Summer Cohen was elected Trustee of the Masonic Lodge, of $1,000 settled upon the widow of Hicks by the Order of Foresters. It is charged that Cohen lost half the amount in gambling and stock speculation. He is now in New-York, from which place he has written that he is trying to get the money for the widow.

ICE-CUTTERS ON STRIKE.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Jan. 15.—The 200 men employed at the Knickerbocker Company's ice-house at Staatsburg, struck to-day for higher wages, and marched a mile north to the house of the Mutual Company, and compelled 90 men there to stop work. One of the Directors of the Mutual Company telegraphed to Sheriff Decker, of Dutchess County, for protection, but as yet no serious violence has occurred. The men demand an advance of 25 cents a day. The wages now paid are $1, $1 25, and $1 50 a day.

A WOMAN ELOPES WITH A YOUTH.

John Fiere is a cigar-maker, and lived, with his pretty wife Margaretta and their 6-year-old son, on the second floor of No. 314 East Thirty-fourth-street, where he carried on his trade. Three months ago Fiere hired an assistant named William Frank, a handsome youth, 16 years old, and boarded and lodged him in the house. Frank fell in love with Margaretta, and she reciprocated his attachment. Yesterday morning when Fiere woke up he found his wife missing from his side. He soon learned that she had deserted him and her child and fled with Frank. Fiere became almost heart-broken over the affair, and went out to look for his wife. After a long day's search he found her and her young paramour together in cozy apartments on the second floor of No. 720 Fifth-street. He entreated her to return with him. She refused, and young Frank put him out and kicked him down the stairs.

A TARDY TREASURY REGULATION.

Secretary Sherman has issued a circular, under the date of Jan. 12, which appears designed to legalize the action taken by Collector Merritt in the famous kid-glove cases, and to provide for a similar contingency in the future. The circular quotes section 2,930 of the Revised Statutes, which prescribes the mode of making reappraisements. The words of the statute are, "and if they [the General and Merchant Appraisers] shall disagree, the Collector shall decide so ween them." The Treasury regulation heretofore in force thus interprets the duty of the Collector in the premises: "In case of a disagreement they shall make separate reports to the Collector, who shall adopt one or the other." In the new interpretation of the law the following is added: "The Collector, however, is not bound by the values fixed in the report either of the Merchant Appraiser or of the General Appraiser, but will adopt such values as upon the testimony submitted may seem to him just."

TRYING OFFICIAL THIEVES.

BREAKING UP THE WARREN COUNTY PLUNDERING RING.

FOUR CONSPIRATORS PLEAD GUILTY—TWO MORE CONVICTIONS OF FORMER OFFICERS—ONE OF THEIR TOOLS ACQUITTED—ONE MORE MAN DRAGGED INTO THE TROUBLE.

BELVIDERE, N. J., Jan. 15.—A surprise was given to the large audience which gathered in the court-room here this morning to attend the continuance of the trial of Teel, King, Cox, and Givens, four late county officers, indicted for conspiracy. A short time previous to the hour for opening court it was rumored among a few that the prisoners had mutually agreed to withdraw their pleas of not guilty and throw themselves on the mercy of the court. The evening previous they had met with their counsel and agreed upon a line of defense, but a night's reflection weakened the hopes of one or more of them, and, the compact once broke, all had to go in the same boat. Previous to yesterday all the four were confident that the charge could not be proved against them. Dean, who was a co-conspirator, it was true, had turned State's evidence, but his statements were so frequently contradicted, and occasionally disproved, that they did not carry much force with them, and there was little or no other evidence against them. Osmun, who made the sixth conspirator, was thought to be true to the compact; Givens, the ex-attorney of the board, was supposed to have influence and ability to help himself and the others out of the mire, and the chances for their acquittal were really very good. But Givens yesterday was found guilty on another indictment, and his influence and ability had not availed him. Osmun made a clean breast of it to the Prosecutor, and stood ready to go on the stand and tell all he knew, and the opening address of the Prosecutor showed that he was in possession of minute particulars of their guilt which they little thought would ever come out. Consequently, to continue the trial was sure to result in their conviction.

When the court opened this morning, the Attorney-General and County Prosecutor, with the three lawyers for the defense, stood in front of the seat of the Chief-Justice, and held a whispered conversation with him. Great excitement prevailed in the audience while this was going on, and the word was passed from one to another that the prisoners would plead guilty. Consequently, when the prisoners' lawyers, one after the other, asked leave to withdraw the plea of not guilty and enter that of non vult contendere, there was not much astonishment. The Chief-Justice, in accepting the new plea, took occasion to explain the difference between it and that of guilty. The latter plea could be used against convicted men in civil suits, but not so that of non vult, and, as civil suits may be brought against all the indicted officials to recover the public moneys they misappropriated, it seemed proper that their present position should not be taken advantage of.

That case being thus disposed of, the Prosecutor moved the indictment of Samuel Frome, ex-steward of the County Poor-house, Dr. Mattison, and Charles S. Strader for conspiracy. Mattison and Strader both being in jail, and already loaded down with convictions, the Prosecutor only moved the case against Frome, but that person could not be found until an officer discovered him at the hotel, and when he was brought into court he begged for delay, not having yet engaged a lawyer. His case was therefore postponed for a short time. The crime for which Frome is to be tried consists in having allowed Dr. Mattison to raise one of his bills from $166 92 to $466 92. The county owed Frome the first amount, and he went to Dr. Mattison to get an order on the Collector for the full amount due Frome, as a favor to allow him to add $300 to the bill, as the County owed him that much salary, and it would be easier to draw the amount of the two bills in one order than in two. The consent of Strader and Mattison, as Director and Clerk, both approved and signed the order. Frome then drew the money, and gave Mattison his $300. For this conspiracy the three men are indicted, but there is some feeling that Frome should not be tried, as he received no money out of the fraud, and was simply an ignorant dupe in the hands of the two scoundrels.

The case taken up, after that of Frome had been laid aside, was that of Gershom Trimmer, ex-Freeholder from Oxford Township, Dr. Cox, ex-Freeholder, and John R. Silker, contractor. The last two have been convicted before. Trimmer is a carpenter by trade, a man of small means and limited education, and not thought specially bright. He, Cox, and other Freeholders were a committee to build a bridge over the Musconetcong River, near a hamlet known as Newbury. Silker received the contract to build the bridge and obtained an order, signed by Cox and Strader, for $150 on account, but they never deducted it from the final payment. For this two years ago were tried last week and convicted, and now Trimmer and Cox are tried for a second order of $199. This, also, they never deducted from the order which they gave Silker for the full amount of the contract, and that was not paid not only what was due him, but the advances of $150 and $199 as well. The Prosecutor proved his case by the orders and the evidence of Director Dean disposed of before the bankrupt, and not a dollar came into their hands. The mortgages were evidently manufactured for the purpose of making a show of assets, and two-thirds of them were subject to advances to be made to builders. Lots worth $200 were put down at $2,000, and many of the buildings were not half completed. An excited discussion among the depositors ensued. A motion to declare a dividend of 5 per cent. was adopted, and, without accepting the Assignees' report, the meeting adjourned, the Register stating that the 5 per cent. dividend would be paid within 10 days.

AMUSEMENTS.

STANDARD THEATRE.

Although the initial performance of Messrs. Gilbert and Sullivan's nautical opera bouffe, "H. M. S. Pinafore," last night, was, in many respects, unsatisfactory, yet the original and delightful merits of the work were indisputable, and we have no doubt of its success. Although classed as a comic opera, it really occupies a place by itself, partaking of the burlesque, the poem, and the opera; it is, in short, a very pretty little love story told in Mr. Gilbert's half-humorous and half-sentimental style, and framed in fresh and charming melody supplied by Mr. Sullivan. The libretto is a gem of its kind, written with extreme delicacy, and crowded with songs of all descriptions. Some of these songs are serious in feeling, and would seem curiously out of place in a F.ench work of a similar class. All of them are full of sweetness, as for instance this one:

"Sorry her lot who loves too well,
Heavy the heart that hopes but vainly.
Sad are the sighs that oven the spell
Uttered by eyes that speak too plainly:
Heavy the sorrow that bows the head,
When love is alive and hope is dead.

"Sad is the hour w'en sets the sun,
Dark is the night to earth's poor daughters,
When to the ark the wearied one
Flies from the empty waste of waters!
Heavy the sorrow that bows the head
When love is alive and hope is dead!"

As a rule, however, the verses are humorous, although humorous in that quiet and suggestive manner with which all readers of the "Bab Ballads" are familiar. In the second act occurs the famous song, "He is an Englishman:"

"For he might have been a Roosian,
A French, or Turk, or Prussian,
Or, perhaps, Italian."

This is the key-note of the entire piece, which in form and spirit alike is essentially English. Its characteristics are pure sentiment, refined humor, and a freshness which should be especially welcome to those in search of novelty. The music throughout, without ever aiming at pretentiousness, is thoroughly enjoyable, popular without being vulgar, and, in some instances, exceedingly original. It is a pity that the performance fell below the merits of this charming work. During the first act every one seemed more or less at sea—chorus, orchestra, and soloists. The audience scarcely knew whether to accept the love-making as serious or humorous, and in consequence some very pretty passages excited general hilarity. The chief performers were in a measure to blame for this state of affairs, for only Mr. Whiffin and Mr. Clarke were well equipped for their parts. Miss Eva Mills, evidently a novice, sang very sweetly, but acted disgracefully. Such a rôle as Josephine should have been placed in the hands of an experienced artiste, for it demands brilliant and vivacious treatment. Later in the evening Miss Mills did much better, and indeed the entire second act ran quite smoothly. As Sir Joseph Porter, Mr. Whiffin was excellent; his singing was pleasant, and when he was brought into court he begged for delay, not having yet engaged a lawyer. His case was therefore postponed for a short time. The crime for which Frome is to be tried consists in having allowed Dr. Mattison to raise one of his bills from $166 92 to $466 92. The county owed Frome the first amount, and he went to Dr. Mattison to get an order on the Collector for the full amount due Frome, as a favor to allow him to add $300 to the bill, as the County owed him that much salary, and it would be easier to draw the amount of the two bills in one order than in two. Miss Jessie Bond was very sweet as Josephine, and sang her music with much taste and expression. Miss Kate Forster was a capital Hebe, and Miss Alice Burnett was very good as Little Buttercup. Mr. Clarke was the best of the male performers, and sang and acted with much humor. Mr. Temple was a fair Dick Deadeye, and Mr. Ryley was very good as Bill Bobstay, were also satisfactory. Mr. Henri Laurent's affectations were exceedingly disagreeable.

The opera was preceded by a performance of the well-known comedietta, "My Uncle's Will," in which Mr. William Davidge, Mr. B. T. Ringgold, and Miss Davenport appeared.

"GLI UGONOTTI" AT BOOTH'S THEATRE

The performance of Meyerbeer's masterpiece last evening was not what might have been expected, and was, indeed, decidedly poor. None of the principal artists did themselves justice, and the general effect was that of a tame and ordinary performance, which degenerated as it progressed. Miss Kellogg was not in particularly good voice. Miss Cary did not appear, and her part of Urbano was sung by Miss Lancaster, who could hardly be expected at short notice to fill the place of this exceptionally good artist. Mr. Adams as Raoul and Mr. Conly as Marcel were the nearest approaches to artistic merit of the evening, but it cannot be said that in any respect the opera was well given, and the long waits between the acts made it decidedly tedious. "Rigoletto" is to be given to-night, and the performance ought to be an enjoyable one and an artistic success.

INCIDENTS OF THE CHICAGO OPERA SEASON.

CHICAGO, Jan. 15.—The third performance of the Mapleson company was given to-night, and was signalized by the appearance of Signor Galassi in "Le Nozze de Figaro." He achieved at once a most decided and flattering success. His magnificent voice won immediately the enthusiastic plaudits of the immense audience, and he has every reason to congratulate himself that he has added one more to the many musical-loving centres which have cheerfully testified to his wonderful capacities as an artist of the first rank. Mme. Marie Róze appeared as Susanna, and was very successful. Miss Minnie Hauk indulged in one of her peculiar fits of temper, because she could not be accommodated with a dressing-room to suit a fancy which had suddenly come upon her, and the result was she left the theatre in a rage, and returned to her hotel. The first act was given without her assistance, she having been cast for Cherubino. She at last returned to the theatre, however, and took her part in the performance.

GENERAL MENTION.

Mr. F. C. Bangs has been playing Virginius in Richmond, and has won far more than the good-will of the local critics. He is credited by the Richmond newspapers with a great success, and is especially praised for the dignity and nobility which he brings to the representation of Roman character.

A concert of more than common interest will be given this evening at Steinway Hall. The proceeds will be applied for the benefit of the German Emigrant Home, and the object being charitable, a number of artists of note have tendered their services. Among these are Mrs. Imogen Brown, (soprano,) Miss Lena Ashton, of St. Louis, (pianist,) Messrs. Alen Bischoff, (tenor,) F. Steina, (baritone,) R. Arnold, (violin,) T. V. Gogh, (pianist,) I. Ganzberg, (viola,) and E. Werner, (cello.) The choirs of St. Matthew's and St. Luke's Churches will also cooperate. An attractive programme has been arranged, and this fact, combined with popular prices and the charitable purpose of the entertainment, should bring together a large audience.

MARRIAGE BELLS AT ST. THOMAS'.

A large number of ladies and gentlemen gathered at St. Thomas' Protestant Episcopal Church last evening to witness the marriage of Dr. Lewis Hall Sayre to Miss Alice Pomeroy, the only daughter of Mr. W. L. Pomeroy, head of the well-known dry goods firm of Pomeroy & Plummer in this City. The groom is a son of Dr. Lewis A. Sayre, one of the prominent physicians of New-York. The interior of the church was decorated with evergreens throughout, there being no floral display. The old English custom of having the groom meet the bride at the altar was adopted, and when everything was in readiness for the ceremony the groom, with his best man, stepped in front of the chancel rail and awaited the coming of the bride. The latter, leaning upon the arm of her father, was preceded by the ushers and bridesmaids, who ranged themselves on either side of the chancel, forming a double line through which the bride and her father advanced to the chancel rail. The groom stepped forward and met the with the bride, as her father retired to one side. The marriage ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. Morgan, Rector of St. Thomas'. The latter was given away by her father. Immediately after the marriage Dr. and Mrs. Sayre held a reception at the bride's home, No. 27 West Thirty-ninth-street, which was attended by a throng of society's best-known members. The newly married couple are to spend the honeymoon in Cuba, for which island they sail to-day. The six bridesmaids were Miss M. H. Sayre, sister of the groom; Miss Pomeroy, cousin of the bride, and Misses Perry, Centre, Livingston, and Bradish. Dr. Charles H. H. Sayre, a brother of the groom, acted as best man and the ushers were Mr. Edward Baxter, Dr. C. Sayre, Mr. S. B. Pomeroy, the bride's brother; Messrs. Frothingham, Tyler and Johns, and Dr. P. B. Porter.

A FRACTURED SKULL.

P. Courtney, an employe of the New-York, New-Haven and Hartford Railroad, at 6:45 o'clock last evening alighted from a down train on the New-York Elevated Railroad at Twenty-third-street, and while descending the slippery stairway from the station to the street, fell and fractured his skull. He was removed to Bellevue Hospital in an insensible condition.

Many of the bills introduced into one house or the other are revivals of some of those defeated last Winter. Among these is Mr. McDonald's bill for the repeal of the act, passed two Winters ago, for the punishment of engineers who abandon their trains except at depots on the railroads. This is a reminder of the strike troubles on the New-Jersey Central in the Summer of 1876, when the locomotive engineers, at the stroke of midnight, stopped running their trains at whatever point they may have been. Mr. Robinson's bill making libel indictable only in the county in which it is published, and not, as now, a migratory offense, for which an indictment will lie in any county, occupied much of the attention of the House last Winter. It was defeated then, and again introduced to-day. Mr. Deac

THE BIG BROADWAY FIRE.

CROWDS VIEWING THE SMOLDERING RUINS.

THE FIREMEN POURING WATER ON THE BURNING DEBRIS—THE CAUSE OF THE FIRE NOT ASCERTAINED—THE MISSING MAN TURNS UP—LIST OF THE INSURANCES.

The smoldering ruins of Brooks Brothers' mammoth brown-stone building, at the corner of Broadway and Grand-street, were visited by thousands of sight-seers throughout yesterday and far into the night. The throngs were not permitted, however, to enter the block bounded by Grand and Spring streets and Broadway and Elm-street, details of Police from the Fourteenth and Eighth Precincts being charged with the special duty of preventing them from intruding beyond the prescribed limits. Wires were extended across the streets at all the corners surrounding the burned building, and additional barriers in the shape of fire ladders were placed across Broadway, opposite the Pacific Bank. Within the cleared space three battalion engines and Engine No. 11 were kept incessantly working, while a force of 30 firemen in command of Chiefs Klug and Shay played several powerful streams on the burning mass of debris and the heated fragments of walls still standing. The Broadway front of the building, which is almost intact, the only ruined part being the upper cornice work, was almost completely covered early in the morning with a coating of ice, the whiteness of which formed a strong contrast to the blackened interior. Up to 7 A. M. it was feared that poor John Reilly, of Engine No. 17 was not the only Fireman killed and crushed by the falling of the walls, but the calling of the rolls of all the companies which had participated in the work of attempting to stay the progress of the fire shows that the only men missing from their posts were Reilly and his comrade, Dennis Doran, who is lying in Bellevue Hospital, suffering from dangerous wounds. The latest reports as to Doran's chances of recovery were rather encouraging. While some of the firemen deluged the ruins, others were set to work digging and clearing the debris at the corner of Grand and Crosby-streets. In this way the heart and lungs of the disfigured body of Reilly were found near where he had fallen. They were tenderly gathered up, and, after being placed in a paper box, were sent in charge of an officer to the Fourteenth Precinct Station. The contents of the box were subsequently surrendered to the undertaker engaged to prepare the body for burial. Coroner Flanagan yesterday assumed charge of the case, and a jury viewed the remains.

Notwithstanding the vast volume of water poured into the interior of the building, the smoldering ruins, fanned by the wind, frequently burst into flame, so that the firemen were often called upon to redouble their efforts in order to prevent the entire ruins from rekindling and endangering the neighboring structures. The Fire Commissioners were present about an hour in the afternoon and consulted with Chief Bates and officials of the Department of Buildings as to the propriety of leaving the Broadway front standing. It was decided that there was no danger in allowing it to stand until to-day, when another examination will be made. Fire Marshal Sheldon during the day endeavored to ascertain the cause of the fire, but did not obtain any information that would justify him in forming a decided opinion on that point. He thinks, however, that it was of accidental origin, probably from carelessness on the part of some employe. The fire originated in the cutting-room on the fourth floor of Messrs. Naumburg, Kraus, Lauer & Co.'s establishment, and spread with frightful rapidity through an elevator shaft on the Grand-street side of the building to the upper and lower floors. Foreman Breslin, of Engine No. 33 on arriving at the building, in response to the first alarm, ascended to the head of the stairway leading to the fourth floor, but, owing to the dense smoke, could proceed no further. He stationed his men with the pipe at the head of the stairway, where they remained for nearly 20 minutes, until the stairs below were cool. They then escaped from the building, carrying their hose with them. They had scarcely gained the sidewalk when the flames burst forth from the windows on the third floor. Deputy Marshal Dodge will today commence to take testimony in the case.

Brian G. Hughes, who was reported as missing, and who it was feared had been killed by the falling walls on Tuesday night, reappeared yesterday at his place of business unhurt. The ruins were visited last night by large crowds, and an additional force of Police was detailed to keep them without the lines. Twenty firemen remained on watch, playing half a dozen streams on the still burning mass of debris.

The losses of the occupants of the building have not yet been accurately computed. Howard, Sanger & Co. estimate their loss on stock and fixtures at about $600,000. They say that owing to the dangerous character of the building insurance companies generally manifested a reluctance to take heavy risks, and that consequently they were obliged to divide the insurance among a great many corporations. Bates & Co., who were to have removed to Nos. 507 and 509 Broadway within two days, are believed to be nearly covered by insurance. Naumburg, Kraus, Lauer & Co. report that their stock was worth $450,000. They deny that $30,000 was deposited in their safe immediately before the fire, asserting that the sum deposited was in reality very small. The following is a full list of the insurances:

TEN DOLLARS APIECE.

WHAT SCHOOL COMMISSIONER WATSON SAYS ALL THE NEWSPAPERS RECEIVED FOR SAYING THAT THE SCHOOL-HOUSES ARE BADLY VENTILATED.

The Board of Education met yesterday, with President Wood in the chair. Superintendent Kidde reported that during December he had examined 201 classes in the schools of the Nineteenth Ward, of which classes 149 were found to be excellent in discipline and general management. The attendance numbered 11,086, which caused overcrowding of the school-rooms, and rendered more difficult the task of instruction. Mr. Lafayette Olney, on behalf of the Principals' Association, presented a petition calling attention to the marked distinction made between the salaries of the male and female departments under the 14 years'-service clause of the by-laws of the board. Now female Principals in Grammar Departments receive $200 more than the maximum salaries, $50 being allowed to Principals of primary departments, while Principals of male departments receive $500 less than the maximum salary. The number of Principals affected, if the salary should be equalized, would not exceed 10, the petitioners said. The petition was referred to the Committee on Salaries and Economy.

Commissioner Wheeler offered a resolution that a committee of three be appointed to prepare and present to the State Legislature an act authorizing and directing the Controller of the City to borrow on the City's credit $1,000,000, to be expended by the Board of Education during 1879 and 1880 in the purchase of new sites and the erection of additional school buildings. The resolution was ordered to be printed in the minutes.

A petition was received, signed by 14 Primary Department Principals, who asked to be allowed, in recognition of their having an annual attendance of 1,001 and upward, the salaries now paid to Principals of female departments who have served 14 years, namely, an increase of $50 on the maximum salary. Commissioner Wood addressed the board on the importance of proper ventilation in the 120 buildings occupied by the common schools. The schools, he said, needed an abundant supply of fresh air, without draught, and the removal of all foul air. It was due to both children and parents to spare no preferences, and urging upon Congress the passage of the amendments to the sugar tariff as adopted by the Committee on Ways and Means. The North River Sugar Refining Company refused to sign, but agreed not to oppose the amendments. A similar paper is now in circulation among importers, and, when a sufficient number of signatures have been obtained, both will be forwarded to Washington.

INSURANCE OFFICERS ON TRIAL.

A PRESIDENT AND A SECRETARY ARRAIGNED FOR PERJURY.

The charges which have been made from time to time concerning the management of the suspended Mechanics' and Laborers' Bank of Jersey City, and of the State Insurance Company, also of Jersey City, have finally taken shape. The two concerns were closely associated in a financial point of view. John Halliard was President of both, and James J. Reid, who is Secretary of the insurance company, was also a Director of the bank. When the rottenness of the bank was revealed, attention was drawn, naturally enough, to the condition of the State Insurance Company. The result was that, though it was ascertained that the company was solvent, the direction of its affairs had been marked by gross mismanagement. The outcome of the investigations is the indictment of some of the officials of the bank and insurance company. Soon after the opening of the Court of Quarter Sessions yesterday, District Attorney McGill called John Halliard and James J. Reid to the bar. Both were at once arraigned on a charge of having on Jan. 26, 1878, falsely made oath, in their statement of the condition of the insurance company, filed with Secretary of State and Insurance Commissioner Kelsey, four days later, that on Dec. 31, 1877, the company had in its safes Jersey City bonds of the face value of $16,000 and of the market value of $17,600; Bayonne bonds of the face value of $6,000 and of the market value of $6,100, and Harrison bonds of the face value of $5,000 and of the market value of $5,500; and that the company had in cash in its drawers, $512, and on deposit in the various banks of the city the sum of $12,525 43. The indictment alleges that the securities were not then in the possession or under the control of the company, and that the company did not have the cash amounts stated in its office or to its credit on deposit elsewhere. Both pleaded not guilty, and Judge Garretson fixed the bail to be furnished by each at $2,500. Daniel E. Cleary became bondsman for Mr. Halliard, and Hugh McKay for Mr. Reid.

Mr. Halliard was arraigned on a second indictment, charging him with having on May 14, 1878, abstracted from the assets of the State Insurance Company six $1,000 bonds of the City of Bayonne, and appropriated them to his own use. To this he also entered a plea of "not guilty," and Judge Garretson fixed the bail at $5,000. Mr. Halliard had no bail ready, and was permitted to leave, in company of Constable Keelie, to look for it. Soon after he had departed Judge Garretson left the court-room, and as none of the Associate Justices can accept bail for him, he will be unable to furnish bail till this morning.

A third indictment has been found against Halliard by Thomas C. O'Callachan, Jeremiah Sweeney, Patrick Sheeran, A. J. Ditmar, and J. W. Donelan. It charges them, as officers of the Mechanics' and Laborers' Bank, with conspiracy to defraud the depositors of that institution. Mr. Halliard was not arraigned upon it because, it is understood, the others against whom the bill was found have not yet been notified to appear.

ENCOUNTERING ATLANTIC GALES.

DANGERS OF THE DEEP EXPERIENCED BY INCOMING VESSELS — TORN SAILS, BROKEN RUDDERS, AND OTHER DAMAGE.

Nearly all the vessels which arrived at this port yesterday reported having encountered hurricanes or terrific gales during the past few weeks, and hardly any of them have passed through these storms unscathed. The schooner Delhi, from Old Harbor, Jamaica, met with very bad weather. On Jan. 3, while off Cape Henry, she was caught in a furious north-west gale, which continued without cessation for six days, and during the whole time the vessel was hove to. A heavy sea was running, and the huge waves frequently broke over her sides, washing everything movable from the decks and filling the cabin with water. The schooner labored so violently in the uneven seas that a leak was sprung, and the constant attention of the crew at the pumps was rendered necessary. The foresail was carried away and the sails were torn to ribbons. While keeping at work almost constantly, the crew suffered severely from the cold, and several of them were badly frost-bitten. When the gale died out it was found that the Delhi had drifted 300 miles off the coast.

The brig Favorite, which arrived from Guadaloupe yesterday, had some narrow escapes from gales in the west-north-west and north-west after Dec. 18 and was blown off the coast three times. It was 28 days after Cape Hatteras was passed before the vessel gained this port. Having run short of provisions, Capt. Higgins spoke the Austrian brig Draga, Capt. Vidinich, from Barbadoes, on Jan. 6, and obtained a fresh supply. The Draga arrived here on Tuesday last. During her last passage from the West Indies to this port, the Favorite was dismasted in a hurricane.

The brig Daniel Trowbridge, from Martinique, has been 13 days north of Hatteras, with north-west gales, and on Jan. 4, in latitude 36° and longitude 71°, a north-north-west hurricane of 20 hours' duration was encountered, during which the vessel's rudder-head was broken. The ship Niobe, from Calcutta, took a gale on Jan. 1, and, besides losing sails, had her cabin filled with water. Capt. Williams, of the brig Hyperion which arrived yesterday, reports having passed the last 13 days on this side of Cape Hatteras, with extremely heavy north-west gales to contend against, and that a leak was sprung, sails were lost, and the bulwarks were stove in. The schooner Sarah W. Hunt lost her head-gear on Jan. 2 in a gale, which blew her several hundred miles off the coast. Capt. Hogg, of the bark Carlvale, from Calcutta, reports that he was driven off the coast during the recent gales. A number of sails were lost and the bulwarks were injured. The steam-ship Rotterdam, which arrived from Rotterdam yesterday, experienced some westerly gales, which blew with hurricane force, and were accompanied by furious squalls of snow and hail. A tremendous head sea was running, and the vessel's decks were constantly flooded.

HULL HELD FOR TRIAL.

An exhaustive examination took place yesterday before Justice Otterbourg, in the Tombs Police Court, in the case of John W. Hull. The only new facts developed were that when Hull visited the office of Field & James on Dec. 26, and previous to giving his order for $30,000 worth of bonds, he expressed a desire to purchase $100,000 worth, stating that he had just invested largely in elevated railroad stock; that he owned 1,000 shares of Erie stock, and that he had three houses which brought in $6,000 per annum. Hull's lawyer reminded Justice Otterbourg that his client had returned nearly all the property in question, and asked that the bail in case the prisoner should be held, be placed at a small amount. Justice Otterbourg remarked that he had no information material with him whether a compromise had been made or not; he only had to deal with the charge before him. The cashier of the firm of Field & James was placed on the stand, and when asked why he did not retain Hull when leaving the office, stated that as it was such an unusual transaction, he was disconcerted at the moment, and he gave as a further reason for his remissness that he always acted in a routine manner. The examination, however, but in a comparatively simple manner. The grapes are laid on gravel-beds and are exposed to the sun for 10 or 12 days in August or September, when they are ready for packing, having turned from white to brown, and gradually changed to the familiar dark color of the raisins of commerce. The white sugar which is generally found attached to the raisins sold in the market is entirely a natural product of the grape, and comes on with age, first appearing, as a rule, when the raisins are about two years old. The packing, however, is an operation which requires great care. To properly pack a single 20-pound box the entire time of one man is needed for a day and a half, so careful is the manipulation of the raisin bunches, while at least as much time is required to select the pick over the bunches before packing. Mr. Whitney, believes, however, that raisins can be cured in California fully equal to the Malaga or any other raisin.

The chief difficulty with which the California raisin-raiser will have to contend in the effort to compete with foreign raisins is the cost of labor. The Spanish vineyardists can get all the laborers they need for from 15 to 25 cents per day, while the California producers must pay at least $1 per day. The very much greater productiveness of the soil, however, will do much to offset this disadvantage. But one scourge with which the Spanish producers have to contend, and which does not trouble the California regions, is the destructive phylloxera, a little parasite which attacks the grape-vines with peculiar ferocity, and saps their roots with certain fatality. It is said, on the authority of Mr. West, a prominent horticulturist of Stockton, Cal., that the whole Malaga region is infested with this pest. Several hundred thousand vines have already been destroyed, and Mr. West believes that in a few years the Malaga industry will be very seriously injured. The phylloxera have appeared in one or two instances in California, but they are not yet feared there, as they almost invariably attack vines only in very old vineyards. Mr. Whitney, who is an enthusiast on the raisin question, has located his vineyards at Rocklin, Cal., on the foot-hills of the Sierra Nevada range, 20 miles from Sacramento. The 40,000 pounds of raisins sent East this season were the product of about 45,000 vines, and he believes that when the 200,000 vines are all bearing he will be able to ship from 15 to 20 car-loads of 20,000 pounds each every season. Mr. Whitney's success has attracted the attention of several gentlemen in California, and a number of raisin vineyards have already been planted. Should these succeed, as they undoubtedly will, a stimulus will be given to the new industry, which will have a marked effect on the raisin market throughout the world.

APPROVING THE NEW SUGAR TARIFF.

A paper was signed yesterday by Havemeyers, Eastwick & Co., Havemeyer Brothers & Co., the Globe Refining Company, the Pacific Sugar Refining Company, C. W. Durant & Son, Dick & Meyer, Moller, Sinck & Co., and Wintjen & Harms—large sugar refiners of this City—waiving all individual

CALIFORNIA'S NEW INDUSTRY.

SUCCESSFUL ATTEMPT TO GROW RAISIN GRAPES—TWO CAR-LOADS OF GOOD NATIVE RAISINS SENT EAST.

To the already apparently unlimited agricultural and mineral resources of California, a new industry seems likely to be added—that of raisin-making. About four years ago Mr. J. P. Whitney, a gentleman widely-known in that State in connection with wool-growing and grain-raising on a large scale, began planting vines of the "Muscat of Alexandria" variety of white grapes, with a view to demonstrating that raisins can be made in America of as good quality as those from abroad. Since that time about 200,000 vines have been planted. As the first result of Mr. Whitney's experiment two car-loads of 20,000 pounds each of California-made raisins were recently sent East, one car-load coming to this City and the other going to Boston. In both cities they have been received with favor, selling equally well with the best imported Malaga raisins, with which they compare favorably as to size, color, skin, stones, and flavor—the latter being the most essential quality. The United States is the greatest raisin-consuming country in the world, and uses annually more raisins than the whole of Europe. The market is mainly supplied from Spain, the raisins known as "Malagas" being considered the best. They come from a comparatively narrow strip of country in the south of Spain, which has hitherto been regarded as surpassing all other regions for raisins of that character. The annual field of Malaga grapes averages 2,250,000 boxes of 20 pounds each. It sometimes reaches 2 500 000 boxes, and last season about 2,000,000 boxes were marketed. Of this enormous yield the United States takes fully one-half, on which it pays a duty—as on all other raisins—of 2½ cents per pound. An inferior raisin with which the market is largely supplied is known as the Valencian, and comes from a region further north in Spain.

The American raisins are made from a white grape—the "Muscat of Alexandria"—the raising of which the soil and climate of a large portion of California is well adapted. The vine begins to bear somewhat in the second year, although the full bearing capacity is not developed until it is five years old, and continues to bear for about half a century, and sometimes for 75 years. In the cultivation of raisin grapes American grape-growers have little to learn from Spain, but in the curing and packing of the raisins a lack of experience is still felt. The raisins are not cured by artificial heat, the process, however, but in a comparatively simple manner. The grapes are laid on gravel-beds and are exposed to the sun for 10 or 12 days in August or September, when they are ready for packing, having turned from white to brown, and gradually changed to the familiar dark color of the raisins of commerce. The white sugar which is generally found attached to the raisins sold in the market is entirely a natural product of the grape, and comes on with age, first appearing, as a rule, when the raisins are about two years old. The packing, however, is an operation which requires great care. To properly pack a single 20-pound box the entire time of one man is needed for a day and a half, so careful is the manipulation of the raisin bunches, while at least as much time is required to select the pick over the bunches before packing. Mr. Whitney, believes, however, that raisins can be cured in California fully equal to the Malaga or any other raisin.

VOL. XXVIII.....NO. 8534. NEW-YORK, FRIDAY, JANUARY 17, 1879. PRICE FOUR CENTS.

THE SENATE POLITICALLY.

WILL THE REPUBLICANS CONTROL THAT BODY IN 1881?

CORBIN'S CONTEST AGAINST HAMBURG BUTLER TO BE PUSHED TO AN ISSUE—THE DEMOCRATS ALARMED—FIGURES SHOWING THAT THE COMPLEXION OF THE SENATE IN 1881 HINGES ON THE SOUTH CAROLINA CASE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections has prepared a report in the Corbin-Butler contest for the South Carolina Senatorship, now held by Butler, which awards the seat to Corbin, and will, at the first opportunity, present it to the Senate. Of course, there will be a minority report in favor of Butler. The fact that this case is to be presented and pushed is causing considerable uneasiness in Democratic circles, and Democratic Senators assert that it is part of a well-digested Republican plan to regain control of the Senate in 1881. A prominent Democratic Senator, in conversation to-day upon this subject, said that on the 4th of March of next, the Senate would stand 42 Democrats, 33 Republicans, and David Davis, of Illinois, Independent. "If," said the Senator, "these figures are analyzed, it will be found how the majority in the Senate in 1881 may turn on this disputed seat. Suppose Butler's seat is given to Corbin; that would make the Senate stand after March 4, 41 Democrats, 34 Republicans, and 1 Independent. The Democrats would then have 6 majority. The terms of Senators Bruce, of Mississippi, Randolph, of New-Jersey; Eaton, of Connecticut; Wallace, of Pennsylvania; Kernan, of New-York, and Thurman, of Ohio, will expire March 4, 1881. One of these is a Republican and five are Democrats. The States which will elect Senators to succeed these five Democrats were carried by the Republicans at the last election, and are likely to remain Republican in 1880, when the Legislatures are to be chosen which will fill the vacancies that will occur in the Senate in 1881. The Democrats are sure of only one seat out of the six, and that is the seat of Senator Bruce. The Republicans, if they hold the five States named, which they are likely to do, will return five Republicans to succeed the five Democrat, whose terms will expire with the next Congress. Then the Senate would stand 38 Democrats, 37 Republicans, and 1 Independent. If Corbin gets Butler's seat, it would make the Senate a tie, even if David Davis should cast his lot with the Democrats, and in the event of the election of a Republican Vice-President to succeed Mr. Wheeler, that party would again assume control of the Senate in 1881."

The Democrats profess to believe that Corbin cannot be seated, but it is plain that they feel some alarm upon the subject. They rely upon Messrs. Patterson and Conover to maintain Butler in his seat, but do not feel entirely sure of the continued support of those two gentlemen. The seating of Corbin will depend upon the votes of Conover and Patterson. Now, as the admission of Butler will depend upon their votes in March, 1878, it will be seen that the political control of the Senate in 1881 will hinge upon this Corbin-Butler contest.

GEN. ARTHUR'S SUSPENSION.

SECRETARY SHERMAN'S CHARGES SENT TO THE ACCUSED GENTLEMEN—MR. SHERMAN'S EXCUSE FOR SENDING THEM TO THE SENATE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—By general consent of the Senate Committee on Commerce the Sherman charges against Collector Arthur and Naval Officer Cornell were forwarded to those gentlemen last evening. The committee met to-day, but the New-York Custom-house cases were not referred to during the formal proceedings, and it has been determined that no action shall be taken upon them until the answers of Messrs. Arthur and Cornell have been received. A prominent Democratic Senator stated to-day that if the answers were satisfactory, as he had no doubt they would be, not more than 15, and perhaps not more than 10, Senators would vote for the confirmation of Acting Collector Merritt.

It seems that no request was received by the President or Secretary Sherman from the Senate or from the Committee on Commerce for a statement of the causes for the suspension of Messrs. Arthur and Cornell. In conversation to-day with THE TIMES' correspondent, Secretary Sherman said that he had prepared the communication sent to the Senate yesterday some time ago, in anticipation that a request would be made for the causes that induced the President to suspend the New-York Custom-house officials, and in view of the fact that announcement had been made in the newspapers that the Committee on Commerce would consider and finally dispose of the nominations to-day, (Thursday,) he did not feel authorized to withhold it longer from the Senate. The Secretary further said that had the Committee on Commerce asked for the causes they would have been sent to that committee, but as such a request was not made, the communication could only be sent to the Senate.

ARREARS OF PENSIONS.

THE ARREARAGE BILL PASSED BY THE SENATE, WITHOUT AMENDMENT—ITS PROVISIONS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—The Senate to-day passed the bill known as the Arrearage Pension bill, which was passed by the House under a suspension of the rules during the closing hours of the last session. The bill provides that all pensions which have been granted under the general law regulating pensions, or may hereafter be granted, in consequence of death which originated in the United States service during the rebellion, or in consequence of wounds received or disease contracted in such service, shall commence from the date of death or discharge. It further provides that the rate of pension for the intervening time for which arrears are granted shall be the same per month for which the pension was originally granted, and repeals section 4,715 Revised Statutes, which provides that no claim for pension not prosecuted to a successful issue within five years from the date of filing, shall be admitted without record evidence from the War or Navy Departments of the death, injury, or disease of the person on whose account the claim is made. The bill also provides that no claim agent or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for service in making application for arrears of pension. This bill was passed by the House during the Forty-fourth Congress, but was lost in the Senate by a motion to lay on the table, made March 3, 1877, the last night of the session. It is estimated by the Commissioner of Pensions that at least $20,000,000 will be required to pay the arrears authorized by the bill.

CONGRESSIONAL TOPICS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—The Mississippi Levee bill occupied the time of the House to-day, but its friends were unable to push it to a vote. This bill provides for a large appropriation of money, and is not likely to pass in its present shape. The opposition to making an appropriation to begin so vast an enterprise, in advance of surveys and settled plans, is too decided to be overcome, and unless the friends of constructing levees on the Mississippi will consent to a measure simply authorizing surveys and estimates, with a view of determining upon a feasible and comprehensive plan of improvement, nothing will be done in the matter. It is admitted that something should be done by the Government to improve the Mississippi and establish and maintain a system of levees, but such a work is too important and comprehensive to be disposed of in an immatured bill and in the absence of proper information upon the subject. It is probable that a bill will be passed providing for a commission of engineers to examine the subject and report plans and estimates at the next session of Congress.

The House to-day passed Mr. Wood's bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange directly at par 4 per cent. bonds for 5-20 bonds now outstanding and uncalled, and in making the exchange to allow three months' interest on the bonds surrendered. In passing this bill the House practically directed the Secretary of the Treasury to extend the system of refunding now practiced by the Treasury Department in dealing with the national banks. The purpose and effect of the bill is to give to any individual holder of 5-20 bonds the same privilege that is now extended to national banks which are designated depositories, and its passage is a virtual approval of Secretary Sherman's refunding operations.

The House Committee on Commerce will to-morrow hear arguments for and against the Free Ships bill now pending before that committee. Several gentlemen from the principal cities, representing commercial exchanges, boards of trade, ship-builders, and vessel-owners, are now here, and will appear before the committee to-morrow.

THE TELLER COMMITTEE'S WORK.

EVERY ALLEGATION OF MR. BLAINE'S RESOLUTION SUBSTANTIATED—RESULT OF THE WORK THUS FAR.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 16.—The Teller committee will adjourn on Saturday, and a sub-committee will proceed to South Carolina. The evidence taken here has referred chiefly to the Parishes of Natchitoches, Tensas, Caddo, St. Mary, Point Coupee, Concordia, and Orleans. Every allegation of Blaine's resolution has been demonstrated as far as these parishes are concerned. There was not a general reign of terror in Louisiana, as there was no State Republican ticket in the field. It was only in the two Congressional districts which the Republicans were sure to carry, and in one district that an Independent could have carried, that the bull-dozing was organized and perpetrated. In the parishes where the Republicans carried, not only was their local organization the terrorism was enforced and effective. Some testimony has been taken as to the frauds in New-Orleans. The city election seems to have been a family quarrel between the "short-haired" and the "kid-gloved" Democracy, in which the "short hairs" were successful. There were probably frauds perpetrated in every ward, but there was no violence. It was not the Mississippi plan, but the "Tweed Ring" method that was adopted here.

TENNESSEE'S NEW GOVERNOR.

INAUGURATION CEREMONIES AT NASHVILLE—A LARGE AUDIENCE PRESENT.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 16.—Long before the hour appointed for the inauguration of Gov. Marks to-day, crowds began to assemble in the galleries and halls of the House of Representatives. There was a large number of ladies present, with many prominent persons from abroad. By 12 o'clock the hall and galleries were full; even standing room was at a premium At noon, Speaker Fowlkes called the House of Representatives to order, and the Clerk was directed to give notice to the Senate that the House was ready to meet it in convention, for the purpose of inaugurating the Governor-elect. A few minutes after 12 the members of the Senate, the Governor, the Governor-elect, and the inaugural procession, appeared at the bar of the House. They were announced by the Sergeant-at-Arms, invited within, and assigned seats around the Speaker's stand. They marched up the centre aisle in the following order, while the band played: Sergeant-at-Arms and officers of the Senate, Committee on Inauguration, members of the Senate, Speaker of the Senate and Rev. Thomas A. Hoyt, D. D., ex-Gov. Neill S. Brown, Gov. Porter and Governor-elect Marks, arm in arm.

President Neal called the convention to order, and the clerks of the respective bodies called the roll of the two houses. The Clerk of the House read the resolution convening the General Assembly to conduct the inaugural ceremonies. Prayer was delivered by Dr. Hoyt. Gov. Marks was introduced by Mr. Neal and delivered a short speech, after which he took the oath of office, administered to him by Chief-Justice Deaderick.

LOGAN'S NOMINATION PROBABLE.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 16.—Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Hawley announced publicly that his visit here had no political significance. He concluded his business in the Supreme Court to-day and will start for Washington to-night. The fact that Collector Smith came to the capital on private business did not entirely divest his visit of political significance, as it was not possible for so prominent a man to come in at this juncture and not have a political reason assigned for his visit. It has been announced that his presence was not intended to convey the impression that the Administration is opposed to Gen. Logan, though it was so construed. There is no change in the situation to-night, and unless there is a change to-morrow Logan will probably receive the caucus nomination to-morrow night.

VIRGINIA CONVICTS DEAD FROM NEGLECT.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 16.—The report of the Senate Committee on Public Institutions in relation to the treatment of convicts employed on the James River and Kanawha Canal, which resulted in the mortality of nearly 10 per cent. of over 300 men so employed, attributes the principal portion of the deaths to insufficient hospital accommodations during the early part of last year, neglect of cleanliness of clothing, &c. Half of the deaths resulted from disease contracted on the canal and the remainder from other causes. The committee is satisfied that convicts will not be properly cared for when placed at the disposal of corporations or persons not pecuniarily responsible to the State for them and for the manner of their treatment.

A NEW RAILWAY PROJECT.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., Jan. 16.—A meeting of leading business men, manufacturers, and city officials was held here to-day to consider a proposition of Gen. Wilson, of the St. Louis, Evansville and South-eastern Railway, to construct 10 miles of railroad between this city and Henderson to complete the connection with the Southern net-work of railways. The sentiment of those present was unanimously in favor of the project, and a proposition will be submitted to the City Council at a called meeting to-morrow night. Gen. Wilson proposes to close the 10-mile gap within the next four months, if the city will change its bonds bearing 6 per cent. interest and running 20 years, for first mortgage bonds of the gap railway bearing a like rate of interest and running the same length of time.

MEMPHIS CITY DEBT.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Jan. 16.—At a meeting of a number of home creditors of the City of Memphis, held this afternoon, to take action for securing the funding of the old debt of the city, it was agreed to deposit the amounts held by them respectively in the German National Bank, which has consented to act as agent or Trustee without charge to the parties, to be funded into new or compromise bonds if the charter is not repealed. If the charter is repealed the amounts so deposited are to be returned to the parties depositing them. It is believed that this movement will accomplish a settlement of the question of repeal of the charter, which just now is threatened by legislative action, and the holders of city indebtedness are urged to deposit promptly their bonds or other securities. Already $100,000 have been deposited.

OBJECTING TO TOO MUCH CONVICT LABOR.

ROCHESTER, Jan. 16.—The National Convention of Stove Manufacturers to-day passed a resolution that "it is the sense of this association that the Legislatures of the various States should enact laws preventing more than one-tenth of the total number of able-bodied convicts in any State being employed in any one line of manufacturing business." Petitions embracing the resolution were ordered drawn and sent to the various Legislatures. The next meeting of the association will be held in New-York.

THE REPUBLIC OF FRANCE.

DISQUIETING POLITICAL FEUDS.

THE DECLARATION OF THE MINISTRY COLDLY RECEIVED IN THE CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES—GAMBETTA'S OPPOSITION TO THE NEW WAR MINISTER—PROPOSED ARMY CHANGES—THE SITUATION REGARDED AS VERY CRITICAL.

VERSAILLES, Jan. 16.—In the Chamber of Deputies this afternoon M. De Marcere, Minister of the Interior, read the Ministerial declaration. It says that the Senatorial elections are a striking indication of the adhesion of the people to the Republican policy. It alludes favorably to the work of the Berlin congress, and hopefully to the execution and results of the treaty of Berlin. It refers to the pardons of Communists already granted, and promises a further extension of clemency. The declaration announces that the Government will vigilantly supervise the observance of the law regulating the relations between civil and religious society; be inexorable toward officials attacking the Republic, and will not use the freedom of action gained by denouncing the treaties of commerce to depart from the principles which recently so developed the commerce of the country. It asserts that it is necessary to complete the reorganization of the Army, especially by a law relating to the general staff and gendarmerie, and that the law relative to great military commands will be rigorously applied except where necessary to deviate from it in the interests of the service. The declaration also expatiates upon the satisfactory financial position of the country; promises reform in the Colonial Administration, and concludes with the statement that the Government will ask the Chamber that the granting of university degrees be entirely confided to the State, and that primary education be made obligatory.

The declaration was very coldly received. The Left Centre alone uttered a few cheers. M. Senard presented an interpellation relative to the declaration, and the debate thereon was fixed for Monday.

In the Senate, where M. Dufaure read the same declaration, it was warmly cheered by all the fractions of the Left.

LONDON, Jan. 17.—A dispatch to the Standard from Paris states that M. Gambetta declares that the Cabinet distinctly promised him to appoint Gen. Farre to the Ministry of War.

It is said that the freezing silence with which the Ministerial declaration was received in the Assembly was due to a mot d'ordre issued by Gambetta.

LONDON, Jan. 16.—The political situation in France is the leading topic discussed by the morning papers. A special dispatch from Paris to the Daily News says: "The Ministerial situation is full of difficulties, but I need not repeat the conflicting rumors, which will lose their interest after the declaration which M. Dufaure, President of the Ministry, is expected to make in Parliament to-morrow (to-day.) The extreme Left object to Gen. Gresley, the new Minister of War, as a satellite of the Duke d'Aumale, and think the compensation awarded to Gen. Borel—an enemy of Republican institutions—of the command of the Rouen Corps, too pregnant evidence that the Ministry has not shaken off the shackles of unconstitutional and irresponsible power."

The Daily Telegraph's Paris dispatch says: "Gen. Gresley's republicanism is not denied, and I do not think that Englishmen will approve the action of the Liberals in opposing the appointment of a man whose only fault is that he is not the Minister of their choice. There is even some talk of upsetting the Cabinet, but I cannot imagine M. Gambetta permitting the party to tempt him into such unreasonable conduct."

The Standard's Paris correspondent telegraphs the following as the opinion of a French military contributor: "The Left have fully made up their minds to have the Ministers, and are determined to remove all but Republicans from office, and to carry out the wishes of the electoral body, especially as regards the Ministry of War. M. Gambetta's speech at Romans left no doubt as to the magnitude of the reforms that would be insisted upon. Foremost among these is a change in the Generals in command of the Army corps, most of whom are regarded as hostile to republican institutions. These changes and reforms cannot be expected to take place if there shall be at the head of the War Office a man so undecided in character as Gen. Gresley. His past, the company he keeps, and his general skepticism in all things, rank him among the members of that most unmeaning of parties, the 'Constitutional-Orleanist.' The Left would have liked to have had Gen. Faidherbe, but his physical infirmities induced them to select Gen. Farre, and it was Gen. Farre, whom M. Dufaure proposed for the office; but President MacMahon refused to sanction the appointment, and threatened to resign if it was insisted upon. M. Dufaure yielded, and assented to the appointment of Gen. Gresley. All persons acquainted with the relations between President McMahon and Gen. Gresley are aware that the appointment is equivalent to a refusal to allow the Chambers to have the proper constitutional control over the War Office. As long as Gen. Gresley is in office there will be no reforms and no changes in the great military commands. The Marshal retains his hold over the administration of the Army, which the Chambers claim for themselves, and which they are determined to have."

The Paris correspondent of the Times regards the situation as very critical. The overthrow of the Cabinet, he says, would lead to President MacMahon's retirement, and a government by the extreme Left with a revolutionary programme which would profoundly derange society throughout France. The correspondent condemns the principle and theory involved in the attack by the Republique Francaise on Gen. Gresley. The Republique Francaise declares that no fault can be found with Gen. Gresley's capacity, reputation, or liberal opinions; his only fault is that he was not M. Gambetta's candidate.

The Times' Paris correspondent says: "To judge from the attitude of the Chambers, the Dufaure Cabinet is doomed." The correspondent considers the question to be mainly one of patronage, the Left desiring that not only the avowed adversaries of the Republic, but all non-Republican officials, be replaced by Republicans.

A Paris dispatch to the Daily News says that if Gambetta ultimately decides on a vote of censure, the Senate, no less than the Deputies, will certainly concur.

In the Chamber of Deputies hints in the Ministerial declaration that exceptions were possible in regard to the abolition of the presidential grand military commands, and the bare announcement that more members of the Council of State would be appointed, a step which will only tend to dilute the conservatism of the Council, caused distinct murmurs, and the tone in the lobbies was unfavorable to the Cabinet.

THE FLEEING CHEYENNES.

THE PURSUIT TO BE CONTINUED—FEELING AMONG THE SIOUX AT PINE RIDGE AGENCY.

FORT ROBINSON, Neb., Jan. 15.—There has been a temporary lull in military movements the past 10 or 12 hours. The fleeing hostiles intrenched themselves on a mound on the White Clay, foiled the troops, and at night, there being no adequate force either to compel them to submit or to keep them from running away, they escaped. When the troops next came up with the desperate band, the latter had taken possession of natural mounds of protection on the North Fork of Indian Creek. Here the troops abandoned pursuit yesterday, returning to Fort Robinson to-day. Gen. Crook sent positive orders that the pursuit of the Cheyennes should be continued, and Company E, Capt. Lawson commanding, started for the front. To-morrow Company H, Capt. Wessells commanding, will go forward, join the forces, and, under the command of the last-named officer, the pursuit will be resumed. The troops will be supplied with six days' rations.

There are 52 warriors, two squaws and children in the fort prison. Of these there are 14 wounded. One old squaw is dying to-night from the effects of six gun-shot wounds. The captives state that, while the Indians were planning the outbreak, they were not yet opposed to returning to the hated southern reservation. Here, they claim, they were told when surrendering they could remain, and here their parents are buried and their children were born. Five soldiers have been killed or have died from their wounds, and eight were wounded at the time of the fight. Thirty-two Indians, of which 23 were men and the remainder women and children, were killed, and 26 were buried in one common grave. It is believed that about 50 Indians, including Dull Knife, have escaped. Wild Hog, Old Crow, and one other savage are in irons in the guard-house one mile from Fort Robinson. The Sioux at the Pine Ridge Agency have as yet made no demonstration other than in the indulgence in an exhibition of grief over their slain relatives. It is not believed among the officers that an outbreak will be made, but if no better management prevails in restraining the Sioux from an indulgence in a war-dance than was exhibited in the capture of the Cheyennes, there can be no safe predictions as to the result. The Sioux say they can feed the Cheyennes, if the Government cannot. Companies B and D, of the Third Cavalry, started for Laramie this morning, commanded by Capt. Johnson. They are accompanied by a pack train. They will endeavor to intercept the Cheyennes.

RENO'S CONDUCT DEFENDED.

A WITNESS' DESCRIPTION OF THE BATTLE—RENO'S RETREAT CONSIDERED WISE.

CHICAGO, Jan. 16.—Lieut. G. D. Wallace, of the Seventh Cavalry, who was examined yesterday in the Reno inquiry, was placed upon the witness-stand again to-day and cross-examined. A more complete story of the battle with the Indians than had before been elicited from this or any other witness, was brought out in detail by Major Reno's counsel. In the opinion of Lieut. Wallace, and basing that opinion upon his experience and knowledge as a soldier, Major Reno did the best thing that could have been done in retreating before the savages. To have remained there longer in the woods where his skirmish line rested would have been to court death for the entire three companies. Not a man could have got out alive had they remained there longer. Neither then, nor later when they had intrenched themselves on the hill, did the witness see any signs of weakness or fear on the part of Major Reno. On the contrary, he displayed courage and fortitude. The command of Reno, officers and men, expected that Custer would support it, and there was a great deal of feeling manifested over what was supposed to be his desertion of the commands of Reno and Benteen. It was thought that he might have engaged the Indians, been repulsed, and then, instead of returning as he should have done, pushed forward to join Terry. The witness described the battle-ground and the position of Custer's men very minutely. He heard no firing from the direction of Custer. The witness thought there must have been 9,000 Indians engaged in the fight.

ALABAMA INSISTING ON STATE RIGHTS.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 16.—In the Senate of Alabama the following resolutions were adopted yesterday:

Whereas, Interference by officers of the United States in popular elections is justly regarded by the people of this State as an evil of great magnitude; and

Whereas, The manifest purpose of such interference, in part at least, is to influence and control the action of the State in selecting Electors for President and Vice-President of the United States; therefore

Resolved, That the Committee on Federal Relations be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the selection of Electors for President and Vice-President by the General Assembly until the acts of Congress authorizing interference by Federal authority are repealed.

A DISCARDED GIRL COMMITS SUICIDE.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Jan. 16.—A dispatch says Miss Rose Solomon, of Hopkinsville, Ky., while visiting Mr. Bessinger, of Nashville, received a letter from her betrothed, a gentleman of wealth residing in Cincinnati, which stated that he had changed his mind and declined to marry her. She committed suicide soon after by taking strychnine.

INFANTICIDE IN DETROIT.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 16.—A dispatch from Detroit says there is some excitement there over the number of cases of infanticide brought to light recently. In one case a dead babe was found in a snow-bank in the principal street.

PARDONED WHEN DYING.

MRS. COBB'S LIFE GIVEN HER

A VERDICT OF MURDER IN THE SECOND DEGREE.

CLOSING APPEAL OF THE PRISONER'S COUNSEL, COL. WAIT—THE JUDGE'S IMPARTIAL CHARGE—SCENES WHILE WAITING FOR THE VERDICT—THE PRISONER RECEIVES IT CALMLY.

NORWICH, Conn., Jan. 16.—No such crowd beset the court-room to-day as that of yesterday. Then women forced their way into the jurors' chairs, and upon the bench beside the Judges, and the overpowered janitor was trodden under foot by a throng which forced an entrance like a herd of frightened cattle. Greater precautions were taken by the Sheriff's deputies this morning, and the snow-storm kept away many auditors.

Contrary to general expectation, Col. Wait, who began the closing argument for the defense yesterday at least an hour before adjournment, spoke to-day for five hours or more, thus occupying more time altogether than both of the attorneys for the State. It was a feature of Col. Wait's argument that he kept recurring to certain vital points of his reasoning and reiterating them, apparently all out of the natural order and after he had already done them full justice. He elaborated at great length the necessity for giving the prisoner the benefit of any reasonable doubt, and strove vigorously to open up other possibilities as to the cause of Cobb's death than that assigned in the indictment. One was that he might have doctored himself to death with patent medicines. Another was the continuous, voluntary, and secret use of arsenic by the deceased man to fatten himself. A third was that Bishop might have improved the opportunities which he had of furnishing tea, whisky, brandy, and tomatoes to dispose of this impediment in the way of the gratification of his desires. A great variety of opprobrious epithets was applied to Bishop in the course of the argument. "Black-hearted villian," "Damnable liar," "Cringing perjurer" "Seducer of the wife of his bosom friend," "Monster of lechery," and "Eminent saint," are only a few of the expressions used.

The speaker's efforts were then directed to breaking down the essential features of Bishop's testimony, beginning with the various visits he made to the house. These were explainable by lawful business and proper social intimacy. None of the relatives or scrutinizing neighbors ever saw anything out of the way, except the mother-in-law on one occasion, and her very conduct then showed that she attached no importance to it at the time. A great deal of time was devoted to each of the presents exchanged. The perfect propriety of some was asserted, and the want of evidence of certain others was dilated upon. Much effect was produced on the audience, if not on the jury, by calling attention to the fact that the initials "M. A. H." were inscribed on the pencil case, strengthening the probability that Mrs. Cobb found it instead of receiving it from Bishop. A slip of the tongue or memory by which Bishop placed the date of his giving Mrs. Cobb the cup marked "Pet" after, instead of before, receiving the tooth-pick similarly inscribed, was turned to great account, the dates at which the two dealers sold the articles, respectively, to Bishop and Mrs. Cobb being read from the stenographer's notes with frequent reiteration. It was asked, too, why Bishop, with a purity altogether too great for earth, gave these presents to express his regard. He should deem it necessary to practice concealment, and Mrs. Cobb need not also.

Next in order, the series of alleged improprieties, caresses, and assignations was taken up, and each statement was either denied or explained. This offensive phase of the story was handled with great plainness of speech and ingenuity. A conspicuous feature of this part of the argument was that, although Cobb's house had a street gas-light shining on both floors, and although on the nights when Bishop claims to have visited her the moon lit, no one ever saw him coming and going in the neighborhood, nor passing in and out of the door. The alleged correspondence and letters received much attention, and the speaker called upon the court to make a number of charges to the jury favorable to his client. These were in regard to the want of witnesses satisfactorily to prove the sale of poison; that no motive is assigned to Mrs. Cobb, and the administration of it. Col. Wait's closing remarks were very brilliant and affecting, the speaker himself shedding tears. Mrs. Cobb wept silently, but freely.

There was a recess of 10 minutes, and then Chief-Justice Park began his charge to the jury, which lasted one hour and thirty-five minutes. The charge was impartial and able. The door was left open for a verdict of murder in the second degree, if the first degree could not be agreed upon. He held that arsenic was the cause of death, and the great question was, Who administered it? The question how far Bishop's story was corroborated by credible witnesses and the value of circumstantial evidence was very delicately, but clearly, treated. During the forenoon Judge Park received a telegram from New-Haven announcing the very serious illness of a brother, but he withstood the summons until his duty should be performed, and was still in town to-night. At the commencement of the delivery of the charge the jurors were fresh, but soon growing weary, one after another sat down.

At the close of the charge, at 5:15 P. M., the jury was ushered to its room. The court did not formally adjourn, but the crowd partially dispersed, and when, at 6 o'clock, the jury sent out for something to eat, the Judges quietly left the bench, and went to supper.

When the jury went out the prisoner, instead of being taken back to jail, retired to the County Commissioners' apartment, in the same building as the court-room, where her supper was served. Mr. Thresher, of her counsel; her mother and brother, and Bishop's friends sat with her. During the long evening the comparatively orderly throng in the large court-room sat quietly, conversing or reading books and papers. Col. Wait, exhausted by his efforts, had gone to his home, two miles distant, but the Public Prosecutor sat within the bar, chatting with his friends. Occasionally the door of the Judges' room would open for the Clerk of the Court or a deputy, and a momentary hush of expectancy would ensue. Soon after 11 o'clock the sheriff knocked at Judge Culver's door, and announced that the jury were ready to report. They filed into their places once more, as the Judge took his place. The question was put to the jury whether they had agreed, and the foreman answered, "Yes." A hasty glance showed that the prisoner was not in court. Chief-Justice Park was also absent at his residence on Laurel Hill. A carriage was sent for him hastily, and he arrived two minutes after midnight. The prisoner was then brought in, accompanied by the friends who had attended her during these last trying hours. The jurymen came in with very solemn faces. Being polled, they were asked once more if they had agreed on a verdict. The foreman answered promptly, "We have."

The prisoner was then bid arise and face the jury, and they were told to look upon her, a direction with which they did not comply. Mrs. Cobb raised her veil with a steady hand, and showed an unmoved countenance. The clerk asked, amid a most oppressive silence, the question as to their verdict, and the answer came back, "Guilty in the second degree." Not a muscle moved, nor was the faintest trace of emotion visible in the woman's countenance as the jury took their seats. She also resumed her chair, and calmly lowered her veil while the court was being adjourned until morning.

The prisoner gave her ungloved hand to her mother, who stroked it gently. The court-room was quickly cleared. Mrs. Cobb was taken back to jail, and the jurymen dispersed to their several boarding-houses until they are formally discharged to-morrow. They refuse to disclose the secrets of the jury-room. A universal expression of satisfaction was heard from the people as they poured out of the Court-house to the street.

A juror has been led to divulge the fact that 10 stood for murder in the first degree, and two for murder in the second. It will thus be seen that the woman has narrowly escaped hanging. Only her sex saved her. Not one man of the 12 had the slightest doubt of her guilt.

UNSUCCESSFUL RAILROAD NEGOTIATIONS

CHICAGO, Jan. 16.—The managers of the Illinois Central Railroad, who have just returned from the East, confirm the rumors that they had been unable to effect an arrangement with the Wabash which would not make it necessary for the two roads to build additional lines between this city and St. Louis. Although they have been unsuccessful in their efforts, yet they have not given up all hope of bringing about an amicable arrangement in the end. They claim that a majority of the Directors of the Wabash are opposed to the extension of their road to this city. The Illinois Central people say they will certainly extend their line to St. Louis, if the Wabash insists on accepting the terms of the Construction Company.

MURDERING A FELLOW-WORKMAN.

CHICAGO, Jan. 16.—Irondale, in South Chicago, was the scene about 4 A. M. to-day, of a drunken and heartless butchery. The victim, Martin Hanston, and the murderer, Donoghue, were employed at Brown's mills at Irondale, and boarded at the same house and slept in the same room, but in different beds. What was the motive, if any, for the murder is not positively known, but it is said that Donoghue harbored a grudge against Hanston and threatened that he would have his life. About the hour mentioned Donoghue got out of bed, and before his victim had warning attacked him with a pocket-knife, stabbing him 15 or 20 times in the head. Hanston ran down stairs and died before any relief could be given to him. When the arrest of the murderer was effected he attempted to stab the officers. Hanston had a wife and family at Youngston, Ohio. Donoghue is 26 years old, and was born at Trenton, N. J.

ANOTHER MOLLIE MAGUIRE HANGED

BERGIN MEETING HIS DEATH WITH A SMILE—THE CRIME FOR WHICH HE WAS EXECUTED.

POTTSVILLE, Penn., Jan. 16.—While a furious snow-storm was raging outside the prison walls last night, Martin Bergin, the nineteenth man to expiate on the gallows the crimes of the infamous Mollie Maguire order, was busily engaged in his cell preparing for death. Up to midnight he passed the time in conversation with his priests and his guards. At that hour he retired, but slept little, and was up again at 4 o'clock. During all the hours spent in preparation, while the gallows was being erected in the prison-yard, while the priests were praying for him, and his weeping wife was clinging to him, Bergin remained cool. He raised his head and calmly surveyed the surroundings, as he was led to execution, and he literally went to death with a smile on his lips. An admiring spectator exclaimed, "He is the gamest man that ever was hanged in Schuylkill County." Mass was celebrated in his cell at 6 A. M., his wife and half a dozen friends and relatives being present.

The condemned man ate a light breakfast, said good-bye to all his prison friends who were near, and at 10:35 A. M. the little procession left the cell and walked to the scaffold, along a path cleared through the new-fallen snow. Bergin mounted the platform with a firm step, smiled slightly as he bade the priests farewell, smiled again pleasantly as he shook hands with the Sheriff and his Deputy, and when asked if he had anything to say, responded, with another smile, "No, Sir; I have nothing to say. I will die a game man. That is all I have to say." After the noose was about his neck, the white cap over his head, and his hands, arms, and ankles shackled, he exclaimed to the Warden, "Shake my hand again, Mr. King." This was done. Then from the muffling-cap came his last words, "Good-bye," and a moment later, at 10:40 A. M., the drop fell. Death was easy, and apparently painless, though the medical authorities were divided in opinion as to whether or not his neck was broken. Fifteen seconds after the drop fell, Bergin's pulse ran up to 160; then the pulsations became so rapid that it was impossible to count them. Respiration ceased in 4½ minutes. In 7 minutes the man was pronounced dead, and in 10 minutes the body was cut down, placed in an imitation rosewood coffin, and delivered to an undertaker, who at once started with it in a two-horse sleigh for Shenandoah. Half an hour afterward the scaffold was taken down, and by noon the prison had resumed its wonted calm, and nothing remained to tell of the morning's work but the trampled snow in the yard.

At Shenandoah a wake will be held over the corpse for two nights, and it will be buried at that place on Saturday. Bergin left a statement for publication, but it proved to be merely a card of thanks to all who have befriended him during his imprisonment.

The victim of the Mollie Maguires in this case was a clerk in the Swift Creek Colliery, Patrick Burns, who incurred the enmity of one John Kane, a mine boss. Kane connived with James McDonnell, who was living at Mauch Chunk, with regard to the feasibility of doing away with Burns. McDonnell then, for the sum of $5, went to St. Clair and employed Thomas O'Neill to do the killing. Bergan offering to go as a companion. They obtained a supply of whisky and hid in the woods waiting for the victim who was to pass in that direction. One of the party proposed to confine their operations to a severe beating, which McDonn sharply about the matter, and, in order to quiet her, Weber gave her $500 of the $1,000 paid to him on account by Maddox, in order to "fix" St. Martin, who could expose his villainy, and, no doubt, in accordance with the plans of the Democratic managers, Weber next visited that gentleman with the purpose of securing his co-operation, or, failing in that, to place him in such a position as to neutralize any testimony he might give against the conspiracy. Weber related to St. Martin his experience in Washington, detailing his business arrangement with the Democrats and the result of his visit to his sister-in-law, who, he explained, could not be forced to testify, for the reason that Congress was not then in session. He explained that his allusion in his testimony to St. Martin would not compromise that gentleman, and that he [St. Martin] would not be called upon to take the stand. He informed St. Martin that he wanted him to go to New-Orleans to meet the Democratic members of the sub-committee, representing that such a visit would be to his interest. St. Martin consented, and upon reaching New-Orleans he was taken to the room of George W. Carter, where he met J. H. Maddox and George W. Carter. An appointment was made for the next day, and on going to Carter's room, St. Martin met Carter, Maddox, and Weber. At this time the Stenger sub-committee was in New-Orleans. After some conversation, Maddox handed St. Martin an appointment as Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms of the sub-committee, and at the same time placed in his hands a number of subpœnas to be served, with instructions, as set forth in the published affidavit of St. Martin.

The manner of St. Martin's appointment and the character of the instructions given him furnish proof that the plans of the sub-committee were arranged before their arrival at New-Orleans. Those conversant with the Presidential contest in Louisiana will remember that several witnesses were examined by the Returning Board, in 1876, relative to the conduct of the election in that State. In consequence of their testimony before the Returning Board, a large number of colored and some white men were not permitted to return to their homes, and are refugees to this day. Many who did return were murdered. It was upon these refugees that the Democratic plenipotentiaries decided to operate. All of them had families residing in distant parishes, and many of them owned property which was depreciating in value by reason of their exile. It was natural that they should desire to return to their homes in safety, and the plenipotentiaries richly conjectured that they would not hesitate to make some sacrifice to be furnished a guarantee from the Potter committee which would be respected by their Democratic neighbors and persecutors. This was the basis of operations, and the plans were to be carried out regardless of the amount of money and perjury that would be required, and those were the elements which were solely relied upon for success. All the subpœnas given to St. Martin to serve were for witnesses who had testified before the Returning Board to the commission of fraud and outrages at the election of 1876, and he was instructed to persuade them to appear before Stenger's committee and recant their former testimony. If they would agree to commit perjury, they were to be furnished with a guarantee that they would be permitted to return to, and remain at, their homes in safety, and were to be paid a certain sum of money ranging from $50 to $300, according to the importance of their testimony.

The plan of this campaign of perjury was systematic and ingenious, and worthy of the skilful politicians by whom it was devised and carried out. Maddox was supplied with printed volumes of the testimony taken by the Returning Board in 1876, and in these volumes the names of Republican witnesses known to be refugees were selected, and subpœnas issued for them and placed in the hands of St. Martin, as an officer of Stenger's committee. If they could be induced to recant their former testimony they were brought in and lodged in the same house with Maddox and Carter, and placed under the care of Weber and St. Martin, in whose room they were literally confined day and night. With the Returning Board testimony before him, Maddox prepared the recantations, which were carefully written out for the witnesses and given to Weber. With such a recantation, Weber would take each witness in hand and drill him until he was thoroughly trained. So thorough was this training that even such questions as would suggest themselves for the cross-examination were propounded and the proper answers taught the victims. When a witness was considered ready for examination, Mr. Stenger was informed by St. Martin, and the deluded victim was brought forward to swell the record of perjury developed by this most remarkable committee. If the work was satisfactorily performed, the money consideration was given by A. M. Gibson to Maddox or Carter, who conveyed it to the witness through the agency of Weber.

In his published affidavit, St. Martin is made to say that he received from Mr. Stenger certain instructions in reference to the serving of subpœnas. In a conversation with THE TIMES' correspondent, St. Martin said that that portion of his affidavit was a mistake. He received no instructions from Mr. Stenger. All of his instructions were given him by Maddox and Carter, and if those names had been inserted in place of the name of Mr. Stenger, his statement would have been correct. St. Martin said that it was unreasonable to suppose that Mr. Stenger was ignorant of the nature of his work, for the reason that he called upon Stenger almost every day and related to him how he had succeeded in seducing the victims. Some of St. Martin's experiences with the negro witnesses were very funny, and their narration afforded Mr. Stenger great amusement.

Carter, being a native of Louisiana and a Republican, was assigned to ascertain the plans of the Republicans, obtain the names of such witnesses as they proposed to call, and find out, if possible, the facts to which they were expected to testify. He was enabled to perform these duties successfully in many instances by loitering about the Custom-house, mingling with Republicans, and discussing the proceedings of the sub-committee.

Gibson performed the part of director-general of the sub committee, commander of the operating forces, and paymaster-general. All requisitions for money were made upon Gibson. The board bills of the negroes, "coached" by Maddox and Weber, as well as their expenses, while under charge of the plenipotentiaries at New-Orleans, were paid by Maddox with money believed to have been furnished by Gibson.

In his published affidavit, St. Martin swears that he was induced by Mr. Gibson to go upon the stand for the purpose of contradicting the testimony of Dula, who had agreed to repeat the testimony prepared for him in consideration of being paid $500. When upon the stand, Dula, instead of fulfilling his bargain, exposed the conspiracy. At Gibson's instigation, St. Martin took the stand and denied the statements sworn to by Dula, and for this service Gibson handed to St. Martin the package of money intended for Dula. There is where St. Martin was trapped and placed in a position which must inevitably damage him in the public estimation.

A few days before the departure of the sub-committee from New-Orleans, St. Martin was aroused to a realization of the position in which he had placed himself by committing perjury, and, meeting Maddox and Carter at the St. Charles Hotel, he upbraided them for assisting in drawing him into the conspiracy, and told them that he would avenge his wrongs by exposing the whole business. Maddox reminded him of his recent perjury, and threatened that if he revealed their transactions they would have him indicted in the Louisiana State courts, which, Maddox said, would be swift to punish, as they were then fully under Democratic control. Carter was more politic than Maddox. He took St. Martin aside, and, after expostulating with him upon the folly of making an exposure, tried to induce him to go to Atlantic City and testify before the committee which was in session at that place. St. Martin rejected the proposition, and reaffirmed his determination to expose the conspiracy. Before the sub-committee left New-Orleans he was discharged from his position as Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms, and his connection with all the parties concerned ceased from that time. This is the inside history of the proceedings of Mr. Stenger's committee at New-Orleans as related by Mr. St. Martin, and which he will be willing to substantiate by certain proofs that will convince fair-minded men of its correctness.

Mr. Stenger claims to be in possession of certain telegrams from St. Martin to Gibson, which will show that he has been instigated to make this exposure in consequence of his failure to have his alleged demands for money complied with. Mr. Stenger has no such telegrams. The plenipotentiaries of the Potter committee failed to carry out their contract with Weber, and in consequence he was threatened with the school fund suit. An offer was made to settle the case upon the payment of $1,500 by Weber, and it was to induce Mr. Gibson to guarantee that sum that the telegram was sent which is now in Mr. Stenger's possession. Suspecting that he was to be defrauded out of the wages for his perjury, Weber, for prudential reasons, induced Representative Acklen to send Gibson a telegram from New-Orleans about the means with which to settle the school fund case. To this Maddox made a reply which was not satisfactory, and a day or two following Weber wrote a dispatch, which was sent to Gibson, requesting that $1,000 be forwarded to him, which dispatch St. Martin signed at Weber's request. This is the only dispatch from St. Martin possessed by Mr. Stenger or his coadjutors.

On the other hand, St. Martin has documents that will put the plenipotentiaries on the defensive—documents showing that overtures have been made to St. Martin since his arrival in Washington. At one of the interviews sought by Maddox with St. Martin since he has been in Washington, an offer was made that if St. Martin would sign a statement withdrawing his affidavit, which was then in possession of the committee, Maddox, Carter, and Gibson would withdraw the counter-affidavits made in their own defense, and would pay St. Martin $1,000 and his expenses from and to New-Orleans, together with his personal expenses while in Washington. This attempt to negotiate with St. Martin shows that the plenipotentiaries are not so strongly intrenched as they wish the public to believe.

THE POTTER COMMITTEE DISCUSS ST. MARTIN'S AFFIDAVIT.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—The Potter committee, which, on Tuesday, adjourned to 10:30 this morning, did not begin proceedings until nearly 12 o'clock. Mr. Morrison, in the absence of Mr. Potter, who is detained in New-York on account of his brother-in-law's illness, took the chair, and mentioned that the witness St. Martin was present, and could be called if the committee desired it.

Mr. Cox said he had received no notification from Mr. Shellabarger as to whether he desired the witness to be called or not. Perhaps it would be as well to wait and hear what Mr. Shellabarger had to say about it.

Mr. Reed observed that, as a matter of fairness all around, the fact that St. Martin's affidavit was presented to the committee ought to appear upon the printed record.

Mr. Morrison—There were no reporters present at the time.

Mr. Springer could not see that anything had occurred which did not appear in the report.

Mr. Reed—Why, this very affidavit was printed in the newspapers, and yet does not appear in the report of the committee's proceedings.

Mr. Cox suggested that the date of Mr. Shellabarger's letter and the offer of the affidavit be inserted on the minutes, at the same time observing: "I understood that we were to print all the testimony and papers that came before the committee, and nothing else. I am rather doubtful if this is being carried out."

Mr. Cox's suggestion was agreed to, and as Mr. Shellabarger did not arrive, the committee adjourned subject to the call of the Chairman.

THE COLONELCY OF THE NINTH.

A FIERCE CONTEST FOR THE OFFICE—COL. RYDER ELECTED BY A MAJORITY OF ONE.

Ever since Col. Hitchcock died, in April last, the Ninth Regiment has been searching for a commanding officer who could combine tactical knowledge with other qualities which are necessary to make that regiment what its officers are ambitious to see it—the equal of any regiment of the National Guard. It had been decided to look for a Colonel outside the regiment, and the commission was tendered to Gen. Aspinwall, who, after long consideration, declined the offer. Gen. F. J. Herron was next offered the post, and he also declined the office. Mr. Henry Clair was then suggested. He declined at first, but under great pressure allowed his name to be used in canvassing the regiment. Just when it had been ascertained that he could be elected by a large majority he peremptorily withdrew his name. During the past fortnight Stephen Oscar Ryder, ex-Lieutenant-Colonel of the Seventh Regiment, and Albert Rogers, ex-Lieutenant-Colonel of the Forty-seven'h Regiment, were prominent as candidates for the position. With the canvass narrowed between the two, electioneering brought out the bitterness and personality of a city charter election. Only field and line officers were qualified electors, and these were quickly divided in their preferences. Every company-room became the theatre of caucus meetings, at which whatever was defamatory that could be raked up against the opposing candidates was set afloat. The strength was evenly balanced when Gen. Vilmar's order to hold the election last night was promulgated. At 8 o'clock last evening Gen. Vilmar, Col. and Chief of Staff Van Wyck, Major Clark Bell, and Major Ira Shumway, of the staff, took their places in the field officers' room of the armory, and declared the polls open. The work of canvassing the unpledged voters went on steadily. The principal effort was directed at Lieut. Aymil, and the wheedling he received from Ryder accepted the office, and said he hoped to put the regiment in the front rank of the National Guard. Lieut.-Col. Montgomery followed in a speech in which he asked the officers to forget the bitterness of the canvass, and work heartily together with their new Colonel in advancing the interests of the regiment.

This pacific advice was thrown away, apparently, upon some officers. Rogers' friends, who believed that their candidate had been beaten by unfair means, and declared openly that they would resign rather than serve under Col. Ryder. Nevertheless, it is the opinion of the old officers that when Col. Ryder shall have had time to make himself acquainted with his subordinates their hostility will vanish.

Col. Ryder enlisted in the Eighth Company, Seventh Regiment, 22 years ago. He was enthusiastic in military affairs, and soon was promoted to the commission rank. He accompanied the regiment to Baltimore, and was promoted to the Second Lieutenancy of the Fifth Company for good conduct at Fort Federal Hill. Shortly after the war he was made the Captain of the Fifth Company, from which he was promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel. While he served in the latter office he was highly spoken of for his skill as a tactician, and his executive ability in managing the entertainments for which the Seventh is famous. He resigned his commission two years ago and enlisted in the company which he had commanded. Col. Ryder has long been a member of the Produce Exchange. He is regarded as one of the best tacticians and disciplinarians in the National Guard, and these qualities, added to great generosity and regimental pride, are thought to be just what the Ninth Regiment needs.

THE ACADEMY OF MEDICINE.

ADDRESSES BY THE RETIRING AND THE INCOMING PRESIDENT.

At the meeting of the New-York Academy of Medicine last evening a valedictory address was delivered by the retiring President, Dr. S. S. Purple, and an inaugural address by the new President, Dr. Fordyce Barker. Dr. Purple said that experience had shown that the immediate discussion of papers read before the Academy was unsatisfactory, and in order that Fellows might be better prepared to speak he suggested that the discussions take place one week after the reading of papers. He recommended the increase of the initiation fee to $20, and the addition of a circulating department to the library. Speaking of the proposed extension of the building now occupied by the Academy, he announced that a friend had promised to subscribe $5,000 toward defraying the expense, which would not exceed $7,000, and he suggested that the remainder be subscribed by the Fellows of the Academy. Dr. Barker, on taking the chair, said that 32 years ago the best men in the profession had united in organizing the Academy, the necessity for which grew more apparent every year. Its objects, he present, were such as to enlist the hearty support of every honorable member of the profession. In referring to the progress made by the Academy, he said that it had made rapid and important strides in adding many works to the literature of medicine, having published as many as 5,000 pages, including many of remarkable merit. To the Academy was largely due the mental activity of the profession in this City at the present day—activity which was continually bringing forth abundant fruits. Four years ago it had in its library only 8,000 volumes, now it had 9,000—an increase largely due to the liberality and industry of Dr. Purple, the late President. In conclusion, Dr. Barker expressed the hope that the Academy would set an example to the churches by paying off the indebtedness. The sum of $7,000 was subscribed toward the amount needed to defray the expense of the proposed extension. A resolution thanking Dr. Purple for his contributions to the library, and his faithful performance of his duties while President, was adopted.

THE BULLION CLUB.

The Bullion Club, an organization specially devoted to the development of American mining interests, gave a dinner at their club-rooms, in West Twenty-fourth-street, last night. D. G. Croly, Vice-President, presided, and speeches were made by a number of gentlemen, among them being Mr. Christiansen, New-York agent of the Nevada Bank; Brayton Ives, President of the New-York Stock Exchange; G. B. Satterlee, President of the New-York Mining Exchange; John Swinton, J. W. Simonton, Gen. Horace Porter, Isaac H. Bailey, Chief-Justice Daly, and Gen. Clinton B. Fisk. Letters were read from Secretary Sherman and Assistant Treasurer Hillhouse, the accomplishment of the resumption of specie payments being the theme of their communications. Secretary Sherman alluded pointedly to the folly of attempting to keep in permanent circulation an irredeemable currency which was designed to serve its mission only during the crisis of a great war. Many of the speeches, though characterized by acute references to current financial topics, were highly humorous, and the occasion was a most enjoyable one.

A PLEA FOR DUMB ANIMALS.

At the entertainment given by the Young Men's Hebrew Association at Chickering Hall last evening Mr. Henry Bergh delivered a lecture on "Humanity and Civilization." He divided his subject under three heads—moral, material, and political—and made a plea for kindness to dumb animals. He said that it was astonishing that the question of humanity to dumb animals had been so long neglected in this country, and that the clergy showed so little interest in it. He thought that Christians might take profitable lessons from the Turks and the old Jewish laws bearing upon the subject.

CHOOSING THEIR SENATORS

CAMERON AND HIS OPPONENTS.

THIRTY PERSONS NOMINATED FOR SENATOR IN THE PENNSYLVANIA LEGISLATURE—CAMERON'S RE-ELECTION CONSIDERED CERTAIN.

HARRISBURG, Penn., Jan. 16.—The Legislature met to-day after an adjournment for a week. Sone routine business was transacted, after which nominations were made for United States Senator, and the vote of last November for State officers was counted and the result declared. Thirty persons were nominated as candidates for United States Senator, 6 in the Senate and 24 in the House. In the Senate, Senator J. D. Cameron and Edward McPherson were nominated by the Republicans, Mr. McPherson being named by C. S. Kauffman, of Lancaster, an anti-Cameron Senator. Democratic Senators nominated Hiester Clymer, C. R. Buckalew, and John Latta, the present Lieutenant-Governor. Senator Nelson, of Wayne County, a Greenback Democrat, nominated Daniel Agnew. In the House the following nominations were made by the Republicans: J. D. Cameron, Glenni W. Scofield, Governor-elect Henry M. Hoyt, Elias B. Phips, Nathan Spering, Galusha A. Grow, Thomas M. Marshall, John F. Hartranft, Harry White, M. S. Quay, William S. Stokley, J. L. Hull, James K. Moorhead, J. P. Wyckersham, J. P. Everhart, Senator from Chester; M. S. Humphries, and Edward McPherson, the latter by C. S. Wolfe, the head and front of the anti-Cameron faction. The Democrats nominated seven persons, as follows: Hiester Clymer, Charles R. Buckalew, Jere S. Black, Henry P. Ross, R. Milton Speer, S. P. Wolverton, James H. Hopkins, A. C. Harmer, William Bigler, A. G. Curtin, and the notorious bully, William McMullen, the leader of the gang of ruffians which dominate the Fourth Ward, Philadelphia. Daniel Agnew was also nominated by the Greenbackers in the House.

The spectacle of 30 candidates for United States Senator is not novelty in Pennsylvania politics, but it indicates nothing in particular, except that a second ballot, at least, will be required to elect Mr. Cameron—that is, if each one placing a candidate in nomination votes for his nominee on the first ballot. In that event Mr. Cameron will lack three votes of a majority, the number required to elect being 126. He may have less than 123 on the first ballot, but will undoubtedly be elected on the second ballot, after the gentlemen placing candidates in nomination have given their friends the benefit of a nomination and complimentary vote. Mr. Cameron's friends do not anticipate the slightest trouble in electing their favorite. In fact, it is difficult to find any one, even among the few anti-Cameron Republicans, who believes that Cameron will fail of re-election. The "dog in the manger" spirit which animates this very small clique of Republicans is put to shame by the feeling entertained and expressed by Democrats toward Mr. Cameron. They are almost unanimous in saying that as the Senator must be a Republican, they prefer Mr. Cameron—an open, manly, and able political opponent, a gentleman, and a practical business man—to any other member of his party. The sincerity of these expressions of good will is proved by the fact that the anti-Cameron men have not been able to form a coalition with the Democrats for the election of Agnew. The two houses will vote separately for Senator on Jan. 21, and will vote in joint convention on the day following.

NO CHOICE IN CONNECTICUT.

THE REPUBLICAN CAUCUS IN SESSION—MANY BALLOTS WITHOUT A RESULT.

HARTFORD, Conn., Jan. 16.—The Republican Senatorial caucus was held in the Representatives' hall this evening, all members being present excepting nine, three of whom were absent in consequence of illness. E. H. Bugbee, of Killingliy, presided. A resolution offered by Senator Hoyt, that an informal ballot be proceeded with without debate, was opposed by Speaker Wright and Mr. Robinson, of Hartford, but was adopted, and the ballot was taken with the following result:

Hawley	49	Harrison	14
Jewell	35	P. T. Barnum	14
Platt	6	Gen. Andrews	1
Miner	14	Benjamin Douglas	1

The next ballot was a formal one, but was not declared, because of one more ballot than the number of members present. It was understood, however, that Hawley's vote went up to 59, and Jewell gained 1. The formal balloting was continued, as follows:

THE WISCONSIN SENATORSHIP.

THIRTEEN BALLOTS TAKEN WITHOUT A CHOICE—THE RESULT UNCERTAIN.

MADISON, Wis., Jan. 16.—The Republican Legislative caucus for the nomination of a United States Senator met in the Senate Chamber this evening. Senator D. E. Welch was elected Chairman, and A. C. Allen was chosen Secretary. Representatives of the press were admitted. The first formal ballot stood: Keyes, 28; Carpenter, 24; Howe, 25; Sawyer, 5; Rublee, 5; Tweedy, 1. On the second formal ballot Keyes received 28; Carpenter, 26; Howe, 26; Sawyer, 4; Rublee, 4. Third formal ballot—Keyes, 32; Carpenter, 26; Howe, 24; Sawyer, 3; Rublee, 3. Fourth—Keyes, 31; Carpenter, 24; Howe, 25; Sawyer, 5; Rublee, 3. Fifth—Keyes, 33; Carpenter, 24; Howe, 24; Sawyer, 5; Rublee, 3. This ballot was declared illegal on account of 89 votes being cast, there being only 88 present. The sixth ballot was also illegal for the same reason. Seventh—Keyes, 30; Carpenter, 26; Howe, 26; Sawyer, 5; Rublee, 1. Eighth—Keyes, 32; Carpenter, 26; Howe, 25; Sawyer, 5. Ninth—Keyes, 32; Carpenter, 28; Howe, 24; Sawyer, 4. Tenth—Keyes, 27; Carpenter, 28; Howe, 25; J. T. Lewis, 4; Sawyer, 6. At this stage a motion to adjourn was lost—yeas 32, nays 53.

Eleventh formal ballot—Keyes, 31; Carpenter, 26; Howe, 23; Lewis, 2; Sawyer, 5; Washburn, 1. Twelfth—Keyes, 30; Carpenter, 26; Howe, 24; C. E. Dyer, 3; Sawyer, 3; Washburn, 5. Thirteenth formal ballot—Keyes, 30; Carpenter, 25; Howe, 25; Sawyer, 2; Dyer, 3; Washburn, 4. At 11:30 P. M. the caucus adjourned until 2 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

Thus ends the first skirmish in the Wisconsin Senatorial battle. The advocates of several candidates have had head-quarters established here for the last 10 days. Large delegations of politicians from all portions of State have been keeping the city in a state of ferment almost unparalleled in the history of the commonwealth. The wildest speculations have been rife. The managers of the fight have been wholly at sea from the very beginning. E. W. Keyes, of Madison, Matthew H. Carpenter, of Milwaukee, and Timothy O. Howe, of Greenbay, are the leading candidates. Their forces are well organized, and to-night's balloting in caucus showed that unless there is a speedy "pooling of issues," none of the three can possibly be elected. To-night, after the balloting, the friends of the candidates are as much befogged as ever, each waiting for others to withdraw, but unwilling themselves to make concessions. The several factions are stubborn, but if a coalition is formed at all, it will be between Keyes and Carpenter.

At this time, midnight, the dark horses are beginning to show some spirit. Bublee is now out of the question, and Sawyer's open advocacy of Howe has spoiled his chances. C. C. Washburn and Judge Luther S. Dixon are the most likely of the compromise candidates, the former being decidedly ahead. The caucus will meet to-morrow afternoon. It is expected that it will continue voting at the present rate without material change until midnight to-morrow. It is thought that an adjournment will then be effected until Monday. Possibly Keyes may be chosen before that time, but if he is not, the winner, it may be safely predicted, that neither Carpenter nor Howe will be. In such an event, Washburn is probably the coming man.

MISSOURI'S NEXT SENATOR.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 16.—The following was the first ballot for United States Senator in the Democratic caucus at Jefferson City to-night: George G. Vest, 61; Samuel Glover, 42; John S. Phelps, 11; ex-Gov. Hardin, 8; Thomas Allen, 6; Laws, 1.

George G. Vest was nominated on the second ballot for the long term.

THE LOUISIANA SENATORSHIP.

NEW-ORLEANS, La., Jan. 16.—The Legislature balloted to-day for United States Senator, but without result. A caucus to-night was also unsuccessful in making a choice.

OBITUARY.

EDWARD MATTHEW WARD.

A cable dispatch announces the death in London of the artist, Edward Matthew Ward, in his sixty-third year, from the bursting of a blood-vessel. Mr. Ward was born in 1816, at Pimlico, and, on his mother's side, was related to the authors of the celebrated "Rejected Addresses"—Horace and James Smith. His talent lay peculiarly in the direction of artistic realism, and his faculty of reproducing on canvas or paper with brush or pencil the many things he saw about him was tenderly trained by his mother, to whose artistic taste and judgment he ever, in after life, attributed the success and eminence he attained in his chosen profession. His precocity as a juvenile won him the attention, and subsequently the kind regard, of Wilkie, and in his eighteenth year he was admitted to the Royal Academy through the latter's influence. The young artist's imagination was of a kind that was restive if confined within the limits of the formal academic studies, and discovering this, his patron trained him in the course for which the young man showed his preference—composition and coloring that was distinctively original. In his 24th year at the Academy he painted a picture, "Portrait of Mr. O. Smith in the Character of Don Quixote," which had a place in the exhibition of that year. After two years' study in England he showed a desire to familiarize himself with the art treasures of Rome, and departing thither remained in the Holy City for three years pursuing his studies. Here he painted "Cimabue and Giotto," which he exhibited on his return to England, and then remained a year or more in Munich, to study fresco under Cornelius, receiving, before he departed from Rome, the silver medal from the Academy of St. Luke, which was presented in 1838. Mr. Ward painted other pictures later, but with the exception of a work, entitled "Napoleon in the Prison at Nice," which was admired and purchased by the Duke of Wellington, they were not equal to the standard his previous work had established for him, and although he entered as an aspirant for honors in the "cartoon competition" of 1843 his work "Boadicea," failed to gain anything more than an approval from the Council, who awarded the premium to another competitor. In the same year, however, he again came prominently before the public with a fine drawing in oil, "Johnson Reading the Manuscript of the Vicar of Wakefield," and further increased his popularity and fame by a companion work, entitled "Goldsmith as a Wandering Musician," which he produced in 1843, following it with "La Fleur's Departure from Montreuil." The following year, however, he attained still greater reputation by a masterpiece bought by Mr. Vernon, which represented "Dr. Johnson in the Ante-room of Lord Chesterfield." This peculiar line of historical studies he made a characteristic feature of his work thereafter, producing in succession "The Fall of Clarendon," a duplicate of which is in the Vernon Gallery; "The South Sea Bubble," also duplicated; "Highgate Fields During the Great Fire," "Interview of Charles II. and Nell Gwynne," "De Foe and the Manuscript of Robinson Crusoe," "Young Benjamin West Sketching the Baby in the Cradle," "James II. Receiving the Tidings of the Landing of the Prince of Orange," "The Royal Family of France in the Prison of the Temple," and "Charlotte Corday Led to Execution." These were produced from 1846 to 1852. During the latter year he received a commission to paint eight pictures in oil for the ornamentation of the then new House of Commons. Three of the pictures were painted in oil, but had subsequently to be executed in fresco, as the darkness of the corridor rendered the coloring almost invisible. He continued to produce historical subjects of great merit on a great variety of striking scenes and events in French and English history, very many of which were afterward executed in fresco. The deceased artist married the grand-daughter of the late James Ward, of the Royal Academy, who died in 1860. The lady was herself an artist above the average ability, and frequently exhibited in the Royal Academy.

REV. HENRY FLOY ROBERTS.

Rev. Henry Floy Roberts, who had been for 16 years the incumbent minister of the West-Street Chapel of the Protestant Episcopal Seaman's Missionary Society, died on Wednesday last, after a protracted illness. The deceased clergyman was a native of this City. His father, a native of Waterford, Ireland, became a master of American ships, and was drowned in New-York Harbor nearly 50 years ago. His son received no better schooling than the public schools afforded, but despite the close occupation of mercantile apprenticeship, he contrived to acquire a knowledge of the dead languages that gave him high reputation for scholarship when he entered the ministry. Prior to taking holy orders he became an effective lay preacher in the Williamsburg Methodist churches. His zeal and eloquence marked him speedily for the license of an itinerant preacher, in which capacity he presided over several of the immigrant missions on Staten Island. He had been preaching 10 years in the Methodist connection when he sought affiliation with the Protestant Episcopal Church. His self-acquired scholarship rendered him eligible to priestly orders, and with the consent of his then bishop received orders he was presented to the Rectorship of a Connecticut church. Soon afterward he accepted a call to an Ohio congregation, and after 10 years' absence he returned to Williamsburg as the Rector of Calvary Protestant Episcopal Church in that city. While Mr. Roberts was earnest and eloquent to an exceptional degree, his efficiency as a Pastor was greatly impaired by deafness, which latterly compelled him to confine himself to mission work, and he became the incumbent of the Chapel of the Holy Comforter, at No. 814 Greenwich-street. Mr. Roberts' later years were chiefly devoted to study. A short time ago he published the chief work of his life, a translation of the Greek Testament, with original notes and comments. This was favorably received by his fellow-ministers. He leaves a widow, three sons, and a daughter. His oldest son was lost at sea many years ago. Daniel, his second son, is the Rector of the Protestant Episcopal church in Clermont, N. H., and Gracie Roberts, another son, is a Professor in the School of Mines of Columbia College. The Board of Managers of the Seaman's Mission have been requested to attend the funeral, which takes place this morning at 10 o'clock at St. Luke's Church in Hudson-street.

ALPHA DELTA PHI DINNER.

BOSTON, Jan. 16.—The annual dinner of Alpha Delta Phi took place to-night at Young's Hotel. About 35 gentlemen were present, including representatives from Harvard, Amherst, Bowdoin, Dartmouth, Brown, Williams, and Manhattan Chapters. Prof. James B. Thayer was the President of the evening, and speeches were made by Rev. Edward Everett Hale, Prof. H. L. Eustis, Prof. Francis Tiffany, and others. Letters were read from George William Curtis, Rev. O. B. Frothingham, Hon. H. N. Twombley, of New-York, and others, and telegrams were received from Hon. John Jay, the New-York graduate association, and the Middletown Chapter. The speeches consisted mostly of reminiscences. At the business meeting, just before dinner, Prof. Thayer was re-elected President, with the following Vice-Presidents: J. W. Preston, of Amherst; Rev. John O. Means, of Bowdoin; S. C. Eastman, of Brown; Lorenzo Fairbanks, of Dartmouth; Charles Hale, of Harvard; J. M. Ela, of Middletown; Rev. C. P. H. Nason, of Williams, and D. A. Goddard, of Yale. Rev. E. E. Hale was made Chairman of the Executive Committee; A. O. Treat, Secretary, and J. H. Reed, Treasurer.

HANGING TWO MEN WITH ONE ROPE.

CHEYENNE, Wyoming, Jan. 16.—A passenger on the coach from the north to-day reports that on Tuesday a party of soldiers found the bodies of two men near the Fort Laramie and Fort McKinney road. One was hanging to a tree, and the other was lying on the ground. It is supposed they were horse or cattle thieves who had been hanged by vaqueros, who, being short of rope, hanged one, and when dead cut him down, and then hanged the other.

TWELVE INCHES OF SNOW.

THE STORM IN THIS CITY.

LARGEST FALL OF SNOW IN TWO YEARS—TRAVEL ON RAIL AND HORSE CARS IMPEDED—DETENTION OF MAILS—THE ROUTE OF THE STORM.

The snow-storm which began in this City on Wednesday night, and continued without a break until after 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, was the heaviest that New-York has been afflicted with since the night of Jan. 1, 1877. On that night 15 inches of snow fell, accompanied by a high north-east wind. The gauge at the Signal Service station on the Equitable Building showed that 12 inches of snow had fallen yesterday. The storm originated in Texas early on Wednesday, and in the afternoon its centre was over Fort Sill. It traveled in the usual north-easterly direction, and reached this City at 9:30 o'clock Wednesday night. About 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon the storm passed beyond New-York, and two hours later it was raging violently throughout the New-England States, where over one foot of snow had fallen up to 9 o'clock last night. If the storm follows the usual track it will lose itself to-day somewhere in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The 12 inches of light and dry snow which fell in this City during the continuance of the storm was sufficient to cause very great inconvenience to all the lines of local travel, while pedestrianism was a thing of no little discomfort and difficulty. The snow was too dry and powdery to pack, and each step that one took was made with an effort. The storm made a harvest time for the broom and shovel brigade of sidewalk-cleaners, who made many a quarter dollar before the snow ceased to fall. Along the sidewalks each iron coal-hole cover became a man-trap for the unwary, and their slippery surfaces caused innumerable unpleasant falls. Travel on all the street-car lines was considerably impeded all day. Before midnight on Wednesday enough snow had fallen to make the use of snow-plows necessary, and the cumbrous machines were kept constantly in use from that time on, drawn by 8, 10, and 12 horses. Each car was drawn by a double team, with two drivers, and in consequence only from one-half to two-thirds of the usual number of cars were kept running on any of the lines. Their progress was painfully slow, for as fast as the snow-plows cleared the tracks the snow would be thrown back again by passing trucks, making the track almost as badly blockaded as before. The chief trouble experienced by the street-car lines, however, was from blockaded trucks. The drivers of the latter seemed to make no allowance for the snow in the streets, and tried to carry as heavy loads as they would on a Midsummer day. The teams were, consequently, unable to pull through the deep snow, in many instances, and long lines of cars were frequently kept waiting until extra help was obtained to move the blockade.

After the storm had passed away the snow-plows and shovelers made better headway against the snow, and cars were run with some degree of regularity later in the evening. Crowds of people sought the elevated railroads, and on the Metropolitan line were whisked up or down as often as every two minutes without any delay. Those who patronized the New-York Elevated Railroad's East Side line, however, were treated to a repetition of the disgraceful mismanagement of the road during the recent "cold snap." Trains were run with all the usual irregularity, while the cars were as cold and cheerless as possible. No visible attempt has yet been made to fulfill the promises of the managers to "have the cars heated in a day or two more," made weeks ago, and oft repeated since. The car windows were thickly coated with the frozen breath of the passengers, who stamped their feet to keep their blood in circulation, while they covered the icy glass with finger-nail inscriptions expressing their benumbed feelings, such as "More steam wanted," "Use Patent Refrigerator Cars," and others equally suggestive.

The railroads were all more or less troubled by the heavy snow-fall, and trains were delayed from one to six and seven hours. All the mail trains were behind time yesterday. The greatest detentions were experienced by the mails from the West. The mails due there at 6:45 and 7:15 P. M. on the New-York Central road came in together at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon. The mail over the Pennsylvania Railroad due at 10:35 A. M. did not arrive until 6:15 o'clock last evening, and all trains on the New-York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad were six hours late. All the regular local fire-engines in the City were dispatched, but were closed half an hour earlier than the schedule time.

The snow upon the Boulevard avenues was too deep for pleasant sleighing yesterday, and only a few sleighing parties ventured out. In consequence of the street blockade the canvass of the City for charitable donations was temporarily suspended, a committee spent the day in assorting the packages previously received. The Fire Department "doubled up" the teams of each engine and hook and ladder truck, so that no delay might be experienced in responding to fire alarms. The steam-ships State of Pennsylvania and Adriatic did not sail yesterday owing to the storm, which, however, did not prevent the Frisia, City of Washington, Atlas, and Canima from starting on their voyages.

The storm extended from Texas to the upper lakes, and from North Platte, Neb., eastward to the Atlantic. It was everywhere preceded by a cold wave, while during the progress of the storm the temperature steadily rose. In this City the mercury rose from 16° above zero Wednesday night to 23° above at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and then fell to 19° at midnight. The storm throughout the country has been generally followed by a rise in temperature, and it is probable that a similar rise will be experienced in this City.

There was no attempt made by the Street-cleaning Bureau to remove the accumulations of snow from lower Broadway during yesterday, but the whole force of laborers in the employ of the department was set at work shoveling the snow from the crosswalks along Broadway and Fifth-avenue, and the crossings were kept tolerably clear. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon a large force of shovelers and a long string of carts were set at work removing the snow from

SUMMARY.

In the Senate, Mr. Windom offered a resolution, which was laid over at his request, providing for the appointment of a committee to inquire into the expediency of encouraging the migration of negroes from sections where they are not permitted to enjoy their constitutional rights to other sections. The bill granting arrears of pensions was then taken up, and, after considerable debate, was passed as it came from the House. The consideration of the Patent bill was resumed, but no action had been taken when the Senate went into executive session. Subsequently, the Senate took a recess until evening.

The regular order in the House of Representatives was the bill from the Ways and Means Committee to facilitate the refunding of the national debt, and it was passed without a division. The Mississippi River Improvement bill was considered in Committee of the Whole, and it was agreed that the debate should be continued on Wednesday evening next, and a vote taken on Thursday. The House, after a few bills had been introduced, took a recess until evening.

SENATE.

THE TRANSPORTATION OF TROOPS BY LAND-GRANT RAILROADS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War inclosing a report from the Quartermaster-General in regard to the Senate bill to repeal the law prohibiting payment to land-grant railroads for the transportation of troops and property of the United States. Also letters showing the difficulties in dealing with such roads. The Quartermaster-General recommends the passage of the bill, and that necessary legislation be had to define the rights of railroad companies and the Government at the present session of Congress. Ordered to lie upon the table and be printed.

POSTMASTERS' SALARIES.

Mr. PERRY, of Michigan, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported a bill authorizing and directing the Postmaster-General to readjust the salaries of certain Postmasters in accordance with section 8 of the act of June 20, 1866. Placed on the calendar.

A PENSION FOR MRS. PAUL DING.

Mr. INGALLS, of Kansas, from the Committee on Pensions, reported favorably on the bill granting a pension to Ann M. Paulding, the widow of Rear-Admiral Hiram Paulding. Placed on the calendar.

A COMPLIMENT TO HON. GEORGE BANCROFT.

Mr. BLAINE, of Maine, from the Committee on Rules, reported favorably on the resolution of Mr. Thurman to admit Hon. George Bancroft to the privilege of the floor of the Senate, and it was unanimously agreed to.

PROPOSED MIGRATION OF SOUTHERN NEGROES.

Mr. WINDOM, of Minnesota, submitted the following:

Resolved, That with a view to the peaceful adjustment of all questions relating to suffrage, to the effectual enforcement of constitutional and natural rights, and the promotion of the best interests of the whole country and free elimination of sectionalism from politics, a committee of seven Senators be appointed by the Chair, and be charged with the duty of inquiring as to the expediency and practicability of encouraging and promoting, by all just and proper methods, the partial migration of colored persons from those States and Congressional districts where they are disfranchised for many generations, to enable them to enjoy their constitutional rights as American citizens into such State as may desire to receive them and offer to protect them in said rights; such Territory or Territories of the United States as may be provided for their use and occupation; and if said committee shall deem such migration expedient and practicable, that they report by bill or otherwise what, in their judgment, is the most effective method of accomplishing that object; and that said committee have leave to sit during the recess.

Laid on the table for the present at the request of Mr. WINDOM, who gave notice he would call it up soon for the purpose of submitting some remarks in regard thereto.

ARREARS OF PENSIONS.

Mr. INGALLS, of Kansas, said he had given notice on several occasions that he would call up the bill to grant arrears of pensions as soon as the bill to amend the patent laws should be disposed of. As there was a good deal of the morning hour left, he thought the bill might be considered now. He therefore submitted a motion to take up that bill, and it was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as it came from the House, without amendment.

Mr. INGALLS, in explanation of the bill, said that in 1876, when the measure was pending before the Senate, he addressed a communication to the Commissioner of Pensions making inquiry as to the amounts of money necessary to make the bill operative. The Commissioner replied that up to the 1st of January, 1876, there were 16,454 invalids to whom the bill applied, and the amount required to pay them for three years would be $3,777,710. In addition to the above, 5,145 widows and dependents would be entitled to the benefits of the act, requiring $3,887,334, making a total of $13,417,107 required to make the bill operative. Since the date of this communication two years had elapsed, and he (Mr. Ingalls) estimated that $5,000,000 should be added to the above amount. The bill as it came from the House provided that all pensions which have been, or may hereafter be granted, &c., "shall commence from the date of the death, or discharge from said service."

Mr. DORSEY, of Arkansas, submitted an amendment to insert the word "disability" after the word "death," so as to make it read "the date of the death, disability, or discharge," &c.

Mr. KERNAN, of New-York, said he desired very much to see this bill become a law. It did nothing but carry out the pledge of the Government given to the men who went into the Army, and that was that they should have a pension if disabled, and, if killed, their families should have such pension.

For the discussion the bill was further acpired, and by unanimous consent the unfinished business, being the bill to amend the Patent laws, was laid aside informally, that the Senate might continue with the bill granting arrears of pensions.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, favored the amendment of Mr. Dorsey, and argued that the whole theory of the Pension law was upon the basis of disability. If a man incurred a disability, and it did not develop for 13 years afterward, he should not be paid a pension for the whole 13 years, but only from the date of the development of the disability. He moved to amend the amendment so as to make it read "disability proved."

After some further discussion, Mr. HOAR, of Massachusetts, moved to modify the pending amendments so as to insert the following: "And that no pension for disability shall be allowed for any period before such disability occurred."

Mr. INGALLS opposed the amendment, and said it was merely an attempt to re-enact what was now the recognized principle of the Pension Bureau.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, said the passage of the bill would impose additional burdens on the Treasury. The expenses of the Government had been greater during the last six months than they were during the corresponding months of 1877. The expenses during the six months ending Dec. 31, 1877, were $136,053,399 83, and for the six months ended Dec. 31, 1878, they were $181,167,879 08. Our ordinary expenses for the last six months exceeded those of the corresponding six months of the previous year nearly $13,000,000, including the amount paid under the award of the Halifax Commission. Should this bill be passed, there would be a deficit in the revenues this year. Should it be passed, the Senate ought to provide for the Treasury issuing bonds to meet the burden. He (Mr. Morrill) would not propose such an amendment, but the Chairman of the Committee on Pensions should consider the subject.

Mr. VOORHEES, of Indiana, said this bill made no change in existing laws, and, as the Senator from Maine (Mr. Blaine) had said, if the Pension Office should find any defects in its practical workings, we would be here to remedy them.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan—We cannot speak with perfect confidence that we all will be here—[emphasizing the "we," and alluding to the present Senatorial contest in Indiana.]

Mr. VOORHEES—I beg the Senator not to think I referred to any passing events at all.

The amendment offered by Mr. HOAR was rejected—yeas 20, nays 27.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, submitted an amendment to the bill in addition to section, authorizing the Commissioner of Pensions to employ as many additional clerks as may be necessary, not exceeding 50, to execute the provisions of the act, and appropriating $75,000 to pay such clerks. Mr. MORRILL said any one who knew the condition of the Pension Bureau knew that this bill would be inoperative with the present force, as the business of that bureau was now two years behind.

The bill having been considered in Committee of the Whole and reported to the Senate, the VICE-PRESIDENT announced that the amendment of Mr. Morrill could not be considered except by unanimous consent, and it was objected to by Mr. KERNAN, of New-York.

Mr. SAULSBURY, of Delaware, thought the bill was one of doubtful propriety at least. He would do no injustice to the soldiers, but the Government had been liberal to its soldiers, and this bill proposed to give them a mere gratuity 13 years after the close of the war. Every person entitled to a pension had received one. While the Government was generous to the soldier, it should be just to the people, who had been taxed beyond the people of any other country on the face of the earth. Should Congress keep on adding to their burdens they would become poor and paupers. He thought the Government had provided for the soldier, and he now desired to see some legislation to relieve the burdens of the people.

The bill was read a third time and passed—yeas 44, nays 4, as follows, [Republicans in Roman, Democrats in italics, Independents in SMALL CAPITALS:]

The bill, as it was passed, reads as follows:

AN ACT to provide that all pensions on account of death or wounds received or disease contracted in the service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, which have been granted, or which shall hereafter be granted, shall commence from the date of death or discharge from said service of the United States; for the payment of arrears of pensions, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That all pensions which have been granted under the general laws regulating pensions, or may hereafter be granted in consequence of death from a cause which originated in the United States service during the continuance of the late war of the rebellion, or in consequence of wounds, injuries, or disease received or contracted in said service during said war of the rebellion, shall commence from the date of the death or discharge from said service of the person on whose account the claim has been or shall hereafter be granted, or from the termination of the right of the party having prior title to such pension; provided the rate of pension for the intervening time for which arrears of pension are hereby granted shall be the same per month for which a pension was originally granted.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioner of Pensions is hereby authorized and directed to adopt such rules and regulations for the payment of arrears of pensions hereby granted as will be necessary to guard against fraud on pensioners, or, if the pensioner shall have died, to the person or persons entitled to the same, all such arrears of pension as the pensioner may be, or would have been, entitled to under this act.

SEC. 3. That section 4,717 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that "No claim for pension once prosecuted to a successful issue within five years from the date of filing the same shall be admitted without recorded evidence from the War or Navy Department of the injury or the disease for which pension is claimed, or death of the person on whose account the claim is made; provided, that in any case in which the limitation prescribed by this section bars the prosecution or allowance of the claim, the claimant may present through the Pension Office to the Adjutant-General of the Army or the Surgeon-General of the Navy evidence that the disease or injury which resulted in the disability or death of the person on whose account the claim is made originated in the service and in the line of duty, and if such evidence is deemed satisfactory by the officer to whom it may be submitted, he shall cause a record of the fact so proved to be made, and a copy same to be transmitted to the Commissioner of Pensions, and the bar to the prosecution of the claim shall thereby be removed"—be and the same is hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. No claim agent or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services in making application for arrears of pension.

SEC. 5. That all acts, or parts of acts, so far as they may conflict with the provisions of this act, be, and the same are hereby repealed.

THE PATENT BILL.

The Senate resumed consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill to amend the patent laws, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. Matthews to strike out of the bill as reported by the committee various provisions in regard to damages for infringement of patent, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "No account of profits or savings shall in any case be allowed, but evidence thereof may be admitted as tending to prove what shall be deemed a reasonable license fee as compensation for the infringement.

The vote resulted, yeas 6, nays 32. No quorum voting, a call of the Senate was ordered.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

After a quorum had responded, the Senate, at 3:20, by a vote of yeas 21, nays 32, proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

The Senate at 3:35 took a recess until 7:45 P. M., for the purpose of attending the Henry memorial services in the House.

Upon reassembling, at 7:45 P. M., on motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, the Vice-President was directed to adjourn the Senate until 12 o'clock to-morrow, upon the return of that body from the ceremonies in the the House, and the Senate, at 7:50, preceded by its officers, repaired to the hall of the House. At the conclusion of the ceremonies the Senate returned to its chamber, and in accordance with the previous order, adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THE REFUNDING BILL.

The SPEAKER announced the regular order to be the consideration of the bill reported last night from the Committee on Ways and Means to facilitate the refunding of the national debt, and the pending question to be on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed without a division. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, in the process of refunding the national debt, to exchange directly at par the bonds of the United States bearing 4 per cent. interest for the bonds commonly known as 5-20s, outstanding and uncalled; and directs that whenever all such 5-20 bonds shall be redeemed, the provisions of this section, and existing provisions of law authorizing the refunding of the national debt, shall apply to any bonds bearing 5 per cent., or a higher rate of interest, that may be redeemable. In any exchange made under the provisions of this section interest may be allowed on the bonds redeemed for a period of three months.

THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT BILL.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole—Mr. Carlisle, of Kentucky, in the chair—on the bill regarding the Mississippi River improvement commission, and providing for the improvement of that river and the protection of its alluvial lands. The proposed commission is to consist of five persons, to be appointed by the President, and is to have charge of the mouth of the Mississippi, and to take into consideration plans and estimates for the improvement of its navigation. When such plans are prepared, and approved by Congress, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to cause such improvements to be made. An appropriation of $250,000 is made for the payment of salaries, and the committee which reported the bill has, as an amendment, added thereto the sum, making $3,871,000 for strengthening the Mississippi levees.

Nearly an hour was occupied in the reading of the report accompanying the bill.

Mr. GIBSON, of Louisiana, gave notice that he would, if he had an opportunity, offer as a substitute an amendment appropriating $2,500,000 for the improvement of the Mississippi from the head of the passes of that river to the mouth of the Illinois River.

Mr. REAGAN, of TEXAS, gave notice that he would offer an amendment directing the Commission to take into consideration the practicability of improving the Mississippi by appropriate embankments for the flow of that river into the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. ROBERTSON, of Louisiana, spoke in favor of the bill. It was for the benefit of no particular person or State or section, but would inure to the benefit of the whole country. The question of the safe passage of the alluvial lands was of vital importance to the South, might be traced to the overflow of the Mississipi in 1874, followed by the high waters of 1875, 1876, and 1877, followed by the hot Summer of 1878.

Mr. ELLIS, of Louisiana, submitted an amendment as a substitute, appropriating $4,850,000 for the purpose of repairing the levees of the Mississippi and improving the navigation of that river, the money to be expended under the direction of the Chief Engineers of the Army.

Mr. CHALMERS, of Mississippi, said that the people of Mississippi and Louisiana appealed to Congress to give them that protection which every citizen had a right to expect from the Government. With the Mississippi River improved, the South could supply the whole Union with cotton, and the world with corn. He hoped that Congress would come to the rescue of commerce; that even the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Wright]—the most promising Greenback candidate for the Presidency in 1880—would support the bill, and that even the hard hearts of the Committee on Appropriations would be softened. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBERTSON proposed that the debate be continued next Wednesday evening, that the previous question be then seconded, and that the vote be taken on Thursday.

The committee rose, and the order asked by Mr. Robertson was made by the House.

NEW BILLS.

The following bills were introduced and referred:

By Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi—To repeal the Customs duty on quinine; also, to amend the Funding law; also, for the payment of Southern mail contractors before the war.

By Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania—To amend the Funding act, reducing from three months to 30 days the notice for the redemption of the 6 per cents.

By Mr. HARDENBERGH, of New-Jersey—Extending the limits of the Port of New-York.

By Mr. COBB, of Indiana—To authorize the local taxation of legal-tender notes.

Mr. CLYMER, of Pennsylvania, in view of the ceremonies this evening in honor of the memory of the late Prof. Joseph Henry, Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, offered a resolution for the admission to the floor of the wives and daughters of members. Agreed to, and the House, at 5 P. M., took a recess till 7:45 P. M.

EVENING SESSION.

THE LATE PROF. HENRY.

The memorial services in honor of the late Prof. Joseph Henry were held in the hall of the House this evening, in the presence of a vast audience. The President and his Cabinet, the Chief-Justice, and Associate Judges of the Supreme Court, (who were, by a ludicrous mistake, announced as the President and the Cabinet,) the United States Senate, the Alumni of Princeton College, and the members of the various societies with which Prof. Henry had been associated, occupied seats on the floor, as also did a number of ladies. After an opening prayer by Dr. James McCosh, of Princeton, addresses, frequently interrupted by applause, were delivered by Vice-President Wheeler, who presided, and the dress of Senator Hamlin, of Maine, who was unable to be present. Senator Withers, Profs. Gray, of Harvard, and Rogers, of Boston, Representatives Garfield and Cox, of New-York, and Gen. Sherman. Prayer was then offered by Rev. Byron Sunderland, and the invited guests having retired, the House, at 11 o'clock, adjourned.

PERILS OF NEW-YORK.

THE HEALTH OFFICER ON THE IMPORTATION OF YELLOW FEVER.

Dr. S. Oakley Vanderpool, Health Officer of the Port, has addressed a long letter to Gen. James McQuade, President of the Commissioners of Quarantine, in which he deals at length with the importation of yellow fever and other infectious diseases into the United States. He deals chiefly, however, with yellow fever, and makes several important statements. Dr. Vanderpool says that in consequence of the late dreadful visitation of the scourge in the South-western States the most absolute and restrictive measures are demanded, but that the adoption of these would be but a poor commentary upon the progress of medical hygiene during the century, and adds: "If at one swoop we are to blot out the favorable experience of this port, going back in effective work for nearly 20 years and be relegated to the non intercourse which characterized some of the monasteries during the Middle Ages, it would be a most disastrous blow to the vast commercial interests which ally us with the tropics." It is then shown that after importation the spread of the disease was due chiefly to municipal uncleanliness, but that the primary evil was imperfectly managed quarantine, and he then says:

"I am informed that the quarantine appointments at New-Orleans are sufficient for effective work, but from the best sources of information it is evident that the elementary principles which govern the administration of every locality were entirely ignored. A rational quarantine against any transmissible or infectious disease must be based upon two principles: First, the incubative period of the disease, and, second, its mode or manner of transmission. These recognized and understood, quarantine, effective and rational, is just as readily established at New-Orleans as New-York. The length of time over which it extends, and the detention of vessels owing to its being in charge of the United States, would probably be longer, but the application of the principles are none the less pertinent. While, therefore, both history and experience teach the efficiency of a proper quarantine, there is still much that may be done with reference to its suppression at the places of its origin."

Dr. Vanderpool then cites his letter to President Hayes of Nov. 27 last, when, after dealing at length with the origin and spread of yellow fever, he concludes: "I therefore submit the following practical proposition: That the Government of Spain be solicited to unite with this Government in the appointment of an International Commission, who shall proceed to Havana, with a view of ascertaining the sanitary surroundings of that city and their relations to the propagation of the scourge, and that the Spanish Government be earnestly requested to carry out fully the joint recommendations of such commission."

The letter then shows that during the past season there were 40 cases of sickness in the Lower Bay and at the quarantine. Of this number, 30 were yellow fever, and in 14 cases ended in death. From the beginning of June to the end of September there was not an interval of three days without cases of yellow fever being in the Bay of New-York, but during all that period not the slightest alarm or excitement was shown by this immense community, nor did a vessel lose her sailing-day from this port. The letter shows that 300 vessels had arrived from infected ports, on which there were, after arrival, 168 cases of sickness, with 55 deaths. In concluding his report, Dr. Vanderpool makes no suggestions other than in his letter to the President, as to the importance of future perils, but calls attention to the fact that although the number of arrivals from Havana were largely in excess of those from Matanzas, the number of the sick from the two places was nearly equal.

A WIDOW'S LIFE INSURANCE CLAIM.

An interesting question in insurance law is on trial before Judge Shipman and a jury in the United States Circuit Court, in the suit of Ellen O'Reilly against the Guardian Mutual Life Insurance Company, which is now in the hands of a Receiver. In 1870 it seems Mrs. O'Reilly and her husband, Michael, took out a $5,000 joint policy from the defendant, the amount insured being payable to the survivor. At the time of insuring, the O'Reilly's objected to taking the policy when they learned that it was a New-York company, they being at the time residents of Providence, R. I., and the insurance being effected by an agent of the company in that city. He told them, however, that he would call for the premiums, that they would be put to inconvenience, and all they would have to do would be to have the money ready at the proper times. He did call, and received three payments of the premiums, but the fall of 1871 discontinued his visits, as the company had given up its agency in Providence. On Jan. 7, 1872, a premium became due, and the O'Reilly's waited for the agent to call, but not knowing that the agency had been withdrawn. On May 15, 1872, Michael O'Reilly died, and the widow sent notice to the company, which took no action whatever with regard to it, but declined to pay on the ground that the policy had subsequently lapsed. She brought suit in the Supreme Court of this State, and recovered judgment for the full amount claimed. On appeal to the General Term the judgment was reversed, but the Court of Appeals reversed it and ordered a new trial, on the ground that no legal proof of death had been furnished before the action was brought, although the defendants had never, in fact, demanded proof. When ready for the second trial in the State court, the defendants had the cause removed to the United States Court for trial, on the ground that the plaintiff was a resident of another State. On the trial yesterday the evidence tended to show that the company never authorized its agent to make premiums payable at Providence. The case will be given to the jury this morning.

THE BOYS SAVE ANOTHER DRUNKEN MAN.

While "Nan the Newsboy" and his two comrades, "Gil" Long and "Ned" Kelley, were returning from their trip around the Battery, at 8 o'clock last evening, they heard a voice crying loudly for help on Pier No. 7 East River. Running thither they saw a drunken man wedged in between a vessel and the dock. Springing upon the vessel, Long grabbed the man by the collar just as he was dropping into the water, and held him, while "Ned" and "Nan" respectively lowered the life-rope and life-ladder. The man was landed after some difficulty, his weight being considerable, and was given a quantity of Jamaica ginger as a restorative. He gave his name as Sullivan, said he was employed in a South-street office, and that he lived in Harlem. When he had recovered sufficiently, the boys put him on board an elevated railway car and left him on his journey for home.

NEW-JERSEY TEMPERANCE ALLIANCE.

The New-Jersey State Temperance Alliance met yesterday, in the Central Presbyterian Church, at Newark. Rev. C. B. Lippincott read a paper, entitled "A Plea for Prohibition," which was mainly statistical, showing that the nation's rum bill was $595,764,000, or an average of $14 for every man, woman, and child in the country. Rev. J. S. Van Dyke lectured on "The Legal Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic." At the afternoon session Dr. J. H. McIlvaine delivered an address on "Our Responsibility for the Liquor System," and in the evening Rev. O. H. Tiffany spoke on the "Wastes of Intemperance," and Rev. C. D. Sloan closed the exercises with a few well-chosen remarks.

GUMBLETON WANTS MORE TIME.

The counsel for County Clerk Gumbleton appeared before Judge Barrett, in the Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, and asked that the time appointed for them to show cause why a mandamus should not issue against Mr. Gumbleton to compel him to allow the books of his office to be inspected and examined by Mr. J. Adriance Bleecker, be extended to Monday next. This request was denied, and Judge Barrett made the order to show cause returnable at noon to-day.

PUNISHMENT FOR STABBING.

Stephen A. Smith, a West India negro, who acted as runner for the sailors' boarding-house, kept by George Thompson, of No. 4 Catharine-lane, missed, or said he missed, $10, and charged two colored seamen, named Joseph Clay and Abraham Bray, with having stolen it. The accused seamen indignantly denied the theft, and words led to blows. In the mêlée which followed Smith drew a knife and stabbed Clay and Bray in the back, shoulder, and neck, inflicting wounds from which both were confined to hospital. Two indictments for felonious assault were found against Smith, and in General Sessions yesterday Assistant District Attorney Lyon secured his conviction. Judge Gildersleeve said that in view of the alarming increase in assaults with the knife, he felt it his duty to impose a severe penalty, and sentenced the desperado to five years in State Prison at hard labor. Joseph Lenox, another sailor, who on Christmas eve stabbed Henry Smith, of No. 75 James-street, in the head, admitted his guilt, and Judge Gildersleeve sent him to the Penitentiary for one year. There were extenuating circumstances in the case, Smith having set a fierce mastiff at him, whereupon he drew his knife and stabbed the owner, claiming to have acted in self-defense.

A CERTIORARI GRANTED.

Excise Commissioners Richard J. Morrison and Philip Merkle on Tuesday last revoked the license issued June 14, 1878, to John Flynn to sell ale and beer at No. 103 Bowery, in the saloon known as the notorious Billy McGlory's "Burnt Rag." Flynn yesterday obtained from Judge Barrett a writ of certiorari for the review of the proceedings of the Commissioners, in the Special Term of the Supreme Court. Judge Barrett denied, however, a stay of proceedings with respect to the annulment of the license. The ground upon which the certiorari was granted was that Flynn declared in his petition that the Board of Excise of the City and County of New-York is composed of Richard J. Morrison, Philip Merkle, and George W. Morton, but the two former, in the proceedings against him, totally disregard the latter, giving him no notice of their meetings and not allowing him a vote upon the question of annulling the license.

A WAGON BROKEN AND A HORSE KILLED.

As the 9:10 train from Flatbush-avenue was approaching the crossing at Union Course, Long Island, on Wednesday night, it struck a horse and wagon, dashing the wagon to splinters and tearing the horse to pieces. The train was stopped as soon as possible, and the conductor walked back to where the collision had taken place, but he could find no trace of a driver. Several residents of the neighborhood also searched along the track, but found no person. It is supposed that it was a stray or a runaway team. This theory is sustained by the fact that where it was struck there is no regular wagon track. The name of "G. Carson, Mount Vernon," was on a part of the body of the wagon. As there is no Mount Vernon on Long Island, there is the theory that the team might have been stolen in Westchester County, driven to Long Island, and abandoned by the thieves.

THOMAS C. FIELDS TO BE A WITNESS.

A commission was issued yesterday from Supreme Court, Chambers, by Judge Barrett to A. Branchaud, of Montreal, directing him to examine Thomas C. Fields, the Tammany Ring chief, as to his knowledge of the facts connected with the suit of Isaac Wood against John McB. Davidson, which is now pending before W. A. Pritchard, as Referee. Tom Fields is described in the commission as living at St. Andrews, in the Province of Quebec, Canada. Isaac Wood sues to recover $1,000 interest from January, 1873, on a claim alleged to have been originally held against Davidson by Fields, who, the plaintiff says, assigned it to Mrs. Elizabeth W. Garrett in December, 1872. Wood was then Mrs. Garrett's agent, and the claim passed into his possession.

THE UNHAPPY END OF MARK BATES.

From the Philadelphia Record, Jan. 16.

Mark Bates, an actor, known throughout the country, and an artist of ability, died yesterday morning in the station-house, on Fitzwater-street, below Seventeenth. He was found wandering about the lower section of the city on Tuesday, and was locked up for safety. When he was received at the station he informed the Lieutenant in charge that his name was "Magruffin" and that he "lived on the Grampion Hills," where he desired to go to transact business of importance. On Tuesday night he refused to eat the supper furnished him, and acted in such a manner as to confirm the belief of the officer that he was deranged. When his cell was visited yesterday morning he was found lying dead on the floor. Mr. Bates was born in Boston, and was about 38 years of age. He had been connected with theatrical companies in different cities of the Union, and was known to the profession in this city by his hearty manners. He was the husband of Marie Bates, who is regarded as one of the best impersonators of Topsy on the stage. She is now in England with an American company producing "Uncle Tom's Cabin." The deceased, about a week ago, began a brief engagement in Baltimore. He played the leading roles at the Museum in this city two seasons ago, and made one of the company that performed at the Chestnut-Street Theatre during last summer. He died, evidently, of heart disease. Last night Mr. Gemmill, of the Chestnut-Street Theatre, secured the remains from the Coroner and had them properly cared for, and then telegraphed the intelligence of his demise to his relatives in the East.

BEN BUTLER'S LOVE FOR JEFF DAVIS.

The Minneapolis (Minn.) Tribune says that the following letter was received by a gentleman of that city a few days ago from Gen. Benjamin F. Butler:

BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 5, 1879.

DEAR SIR: I do not know as I ought to write you to decide a bet, because you ought not to bet. But to set you right in a matter of history in which you seem to be interested, allow me to say that in the Democratic Convention at Charleston, S. C., in the year 1860, as I voted 57 times, as I remember it, for Jefferson Davis, of Mississippi, afterward President of the Confederate States, as candidate of the Democratic Party for President. He was not before the convention as a candidate, for my vote and that of nine of my colleagues was cast for him from the first. I believed him to be a representative man of the South, and subsequent events have shown that I was right. And I believed then, and believe now, that if he could have been inaugurated as President and elected, the war would have been saved and the attempted disunion prevented, for he would have chosen to be President over 32 States rather than 15, and my experience has been that the North always prefers to compromise questions of human liberty from a Southern statesman as President before the war than it did from a Northern doughface, and that remains true down to the present time.

Yours truly, BENJAMIN F. BUTLER.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

A wagon called at my house on Tuesday for what we desired to contribute for the poor. Our package was not ready, and the man said they would call again yesterday; but no one called. Our package is ready, and we are anxious to give it in aid of the good work. May there not be thousands of families similarly situated? I think the wagons ought to be sent around again. G. Q. C.

The Signal Service Bureau report indicates for to-day, in this region, clear or partly cloudy weather, northerly winds, shifting to easterly and southerly, slowly rising temperature, and rising, followed by falling, barometer.

Speaker ALVORD has made, on the whole, very creditable selections for the membership of the Assembly committees. At the head of the four principal committees, Ways and Means, Judiciary, Cities, and Insurance, he has placed men of ability and character, to whom it will be easy to bring home the responsibility for any failure to report bills which are obviously in the interests of the public. Mr. HUSTED has apparently been willing to content himself with the chance of enjoying power without well-defined responsibility, as his name appears on three of the important committees named. Messrs. SLOAN, HAYES, and SHARPE are not, however, the kind of men to delegate the control of their committees to any associate. The reputations of all of them depend on the kind of work which is done under their superintendence, and in presence of a number of disappointed statesmen who have been left without recognition, they are not likely to permit their work to be taken out of their hands. If they do, there are enough watchful critics in the Assembly who will be ready to undertake it for them.

The Pension Arrears bill, which came so near passing in the closing hours of the Forty-fourth Congress, was passed by the Senate yesterday, with only four dissentient votes. The bill will take from eighteen to twenty-four millions out of the public Treasury, and if not provided for by the issue of bonds or by taxation, will cause a very tangible deficit in the annual balance-sheet. The bill revives a mass of claims for pensions which began some years after the death or discharge of the persons on whose account they were granted, by legalizing a claim on the Government for the period during which these pensions were in suspense. It removes the chief security against deception and fraud by repealing that section of the Revised Statutes which requires the production of evidence satisfactory to the Adjutant-General of the Army or the Surgeon-General of the Navy of the injury or disease which resulted in the disability or death of the person on whose behalf the claim for a pension is made. Republicans and Democrats vied with each other in their support of this bill, which has already passed the House, and it may now, apparently, be considered as good as law. It is to be hoped that Senators of both parties will show equal unanimity in providing the additional taxation needed to meet the expenditure which the bill creates.

More than usual importance is attached to the report of the Senate committee awarding to Mr. CORBIN the seat now held by Mr. BUTLER from the fact that on the South Carolina Senatorship may depend the partisan complexion of the Senate in 1881. If the Senate sustains the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the Senate will stand after the 4th of March next 41 Democrats, 34 Republicans, and 1 Independent. Of the vacancies occurring on March 4, 1881, five are those made by retiring Democrats from the States of New-York, New-Jersey, Connecticut, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, all of which at present possess Republican Legislatures. As these five States will not improbably have Republican Legislatures two years hence, the party can afford to lose the seat of Senator BRUCE, of Mississippi, and still have 38 representatives in the Senate in 1881. Such a contingency would leave the Democrats in a minority of one, or, assuming the accession to their ranks of Senator DAVIS, the Senate would be a tie, with the casting vote held by a probably Republican Vice-President. All this hinges on the seating of Mr. CORBIN, and that again depends on the votes of Messrs. PATTERSON, of South Carolina, and CONOVER, of Florida.

The motion of the Attorney-General in the suit against the Central Pacific Railroad Company, now before the Supreme Court, is sustained by statements which throw an unpleasant light on the tactics of the company. The suit was originally brought to restrain the company from dividing moneys to which the Government made claim under the Thurman bill; the judgment in the lower courts was against the company, and an appeal was taken on the single point of the constitutionality of the bill. The Attorney-General now asks that the appeal be dismissed on the ground that the suit is a sham suit, and was brought by procurement of the appellants to obtain a judgment on a state of facts and pleadings more favorable to the company than will appear when the Government is ready to present its case. The statement is quite credible, though it may be doubtful if it affords ground for dismissal of the suit. The Government is represented by ex-Attorney-General GEORGE H. WILLIAMS.

A critical point has once more been reached in French political affairs, in consequence of what seems an irreconcilable difference between the Assembly and the Marshal-President. It being necessary to appoint a Secretary of War, the Left proposed Gen. FARRE, though they would have preferred Gen. FAIDHERBE if it were not that his age and infirmities disqualify him. M. DUFAURE presented to President MACMAHON the name of Gen. FARRE, but the Marshal indignantly refused to make the appointment, saying, as he has often said before, that he would sooner resign than nominate FARRE. Gen. GRESLEY was accordingly appointed, to the great rage of GAMBETTA and his friends. It is not denied that GRESLEY'S Republicanism is of satisfactory quality, but the fact that he is not GAMBETTA'S nominee is enough to disgust and estrange the Left. It is also alleged that the Cabinet promised GAMBETTA that Gen. FARRE should be appointed. This commotion evidently arises from an attempt of the Republicans to gain control of the Army. This plan, which seems reasonable enough, MACMAHON is determined to thwart. It remains to be seen if the Marshal-President's obstructiveness is immovable.

THE PARTY'S FINANCIAL POLICY.

Wednesday's proceedings in the House of Representatives, and Mr. EWING'S proposition in regard to resumption which will be presented with the sanction of the Committee on Banking and Currency, should not be without effect upon the caucus of Republican Senators when they resume the task of formulating for their party a policy on the financial question. Enough has occurred to show the danger of resting contented with things as they are. It would be hazardous if the only evils to be guarded against were those already on the statute-book; it is doubly so in view of the determination of the enemies of resumption to impair its guarantees and to enforce conditions which may seriously affect its permanence. The vote on the bill reported by the Ways and Means Committee making greenbacks receivable for Customs duties, regardless of contingencies affecting resumption, shows either a confusion of ideas among Republicans as well as Democrats or an indifference to one of the means of preserving the public credit.

Speaking generally, the Republican Party is alive to the advantages it gains from its identification with the measure now in successful operation. Some of the leaders in the Senate understand so well this point that they are disposed to insist on regarding the Resumption act as a party measure rather than as the handiwork of Secretary SHERMAN. Whatever their motives, there can be no doubt that, substantially, they are correct. The party, as a party, demanded resumption and devised the method which enabled Mr. SHERMAN to bring it about. Having thus assumed the responsibility of resumption, and being now resolved to secure the credit inseparable from its accomplishment, the party has before it two obvious duties. It is bound to keep in full force the legislative conditions which made resumption possible. And it is equally bound to resist any attempt to introduce new conditions, not avowedly designed to break down resumption, but tending, under certain not improbable circumstances, to product that result. The Republican obligation, in both particulars, is one of partisan interest as well as of patriotic duty. As surely as the party will be strengthened by enduring resumption, so surely will it suffer from the failure of resumption under the strain to which it may be exposed by the pending Customs Duties bill, and in a still greater degree by the Ewing substitute for the Anti-Resumption bill adopted by the House last session.

Forces are at work which prejudice the future of resumption, and in the hands of a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury might soon occasion embarrassment. The Silver law has not had time to develop its capacity for mischief, and Mr. SHERMAN has prudently exercised his authority to keep that capacity at its minimum. But the time is not remote when Mr. SHERMAN'S successor in the Treasury will not be able, even if he have the will, to restrain the injurious effects of a continuous coinage of silver. The amount coined will be beyond his control. Not less certain, though in its operation different, is the provision of law authorizing the reissue of greenbacks after going through the formality of redemption. Mr. SHERMAN appreciates the risk, and guards against it. Another Secretary may use his discretionary power in the opposite direction, to the detriment of resumption. The Republican Party, then, cannot afford to occupy a doubtful position with reference to these measures. Individual members may be blind to their insidious character, but the party, which boasts of having achieved resumption, must seek the modification of one measure and the abrogation of the other. Whoever undertakes the definition of the party's financial policy must face manfully both exigencies. Silence will not suffice. He that is not opposed to an unlimited coinage of a depreciated silver dollar really is inimical to resumption. There may be concessions on some points for the sake of unity; there should be none on this.

The passage of the Customs Duties bill is attended with special significance because of the rejection of the amendment by which Mr. GARFIELD would have obviated harm. The payment of duties in coin is at once a pledge to the public creditor and the means of rendering the fulfillment of the pledge easy and sure. As long as the greenback is convertible into gold, there may be good reasons for receiving the paper in payment of duties; in this way the principle of convertibility may be asserted without embarrassing the Treasury. We ought not to forget, however, that the permanence of resumption is not yet absolutely assured. Contingencies may arise that will test the Treasury reserve of specie; and though nothing of the sort need be apprehended at present, the part of prudent financiers is to be prepared for emergencies. Supposing resumption to be endangered, from any cause, the payment of duties in notes instead of gold coin might prove of importance. It might make all the difference between weakness and strength. The gravity of the situation will be increased if, by any chance, Mr. EWING'S amendment hereafter become law. We assume that its passage, this session, is not possible, but the fate awaiting it in the next House is less certain. Inasmuch as one of its objects is to prevent the sale of bonds for any but refunding purposes, the Treasury would be unable to replenish its store of gold from this source. With the balance of trade greatly in our favor, such an expedient is not necessary. Let the balance be on the other side, and the reserved right of the Treasury to sell bonds for gold may become the turning-point in resumption. The attempt to take away the right, and to leave the Treasury powerless in the event of a run for gold, proves that the opponents of resumption have changed their tactics merely, not their nature.

All these circumstances seem conclusive as to the necessity for clearness and firmness of purpose in any effort to define the position of the Republican Party. The interests at stake are too vast to be imperiled by vulgar considerations of partisan expediency. The unity which the Senators desire to promote is desirable only so long as it rests on a foundation of principle. Only on this basis can the party hope to possess the confidence of the country, and to secure the success of the policy with which it is identified.

A "FOREIGN RELATION" OF ALABAMA.

The Committee on Foreign Relations of the sovereign State of Alabama has just been intrusted with a delicate and important duty. It is to devise a method by which the participation by that State in the election of a President of the United States can be so conducted that the alien Government of the Federal Union and its citizens shall be kept in the dark as to any peculiarities in the process. Alabama is a very jealous State, not less so than when it threw the segis of its legislation over a community of slaveholders, offered a reward for the kidnapping of Mr. GARRISON, and drove Mr. BIRNEY out of the State, because these gentlemen dared to question the morality of the institution. If any of our readers are not quite prepared to believe that the Alabama Senate regards the laws of the United States as a proper subject for consideration by its Committee on Foreign Relations, here are the preamble and resolution which attest the fact, adopted on Wednesday, the 15th inst.:

"Whereas, Interference by officers of the United States in popular elections is justly regarded by the people of this State as an evil of great magnitude; and,

"Whereas, The manifest purpose of such interference, in part, at least, is to influence and control the action of the State in selecting Electors for President and Vice-President of the United States; therefore,

"Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the selection of Electors for President and Vice-President by the General Assembly until the acts of Congress authorizing interference by Federal authority are repealed."

The acts of Congress referred to have two objects, one, to enable a representative of the United States Government from each political party to watch the registration, voting, and canvassing at any election for Representatives in Congress, and to transmit a report of what they may see to Congress; the other, to authorize such representatives to secure the arrest and trial of persons who at any stage of such election may violate the laws of the United States. This is the sum and substance of the acts. They are impartial as between rival parties. They confer no arbitrary or unconstitutional powers. The authority they give is strictly defined. The offenses they provide against are violations of the free right of lawful suffrage, which is the basis of our institutions. The officers whose appointment they direct are named by the Judges of the United States courts, conceded to be equal in fairness and integrity to any judiciary in the world, and these officers are from first to last held within the control of these Judges. The main purpose of the law, perfectly observed in all its provisions, is to throw light on the process of election, and to prevent evil-disposed persons, of whatever party, or for whatever end, from voting illegally, from preventing a legal voter from voting, or from destroying by fraudulent counting the effect of legal votes. This is what the Senate of Alabama calls "interference by officers of the United States in popular elections," and which it declares is "justly regarded by the people of that State as an evil of great magnitude."

To avoid, therefore, the scrutiny which the laws of the Union provide shall be exercised in Federal elections, the Alabama Senate proposes to go back to the old scheme of choosing Presidential Electors by the Legislature. It is the clear right of the State to do so. If the Committee on Foreign Relations report favorably, and the measure becomes a law, and if then the elections to the Legislature are held entirely separate from the Congressional elections, the thing can be done. The people of the United States, through their Government, is as powerless to interfere to prevent any fraud or wrong that may in this way be accomplished as if their relations with Alabama were as "foreign" as the resolution of its Senate implies. The Democrats of Alabama might, by red-shirted raiders, by industrious assassination, by the use of onion-skin ballots, by fraudulent counting, and by all the tricks with which their curious notions of democracy are in harmony, practically disfranchise their Republican fellow-citizens, and the United States would have less redress than the Empire of Germany, should Alabamians perpetrate similar outrages on its citizens. This is one of the beauties of our Constitution, which, in the ninety-first year of its age, is as antiquated in some of its main features, and as unfitted to protect the rights of those who live under it, as though it were derived through the Koran from MOHAMMED.

But such action by the Legislature of Alabama might have ultimate effects quite different from its immediate ones, or from those designed by its originators. The United States is not a nation foreign to the little community of bigoted and unscrupulous partisans which chooses to so designate it. The Constitution, however clumsy it may be in parts, is, after all, the charter of popular rights, and though it may yield slowly to the force of public opinion, it does yield when public opinion is strong enough and firm enough. No State can with impunity deliberately carry out a purpose to deprive the people of the country of the right which is theirs, that in every State all duly qualified voters shall be allowed, if they wish, to take part in Federal elections, and to have full and fair effect for their votes. A question very similar to this was settled by the war. Before the war the South sought to set up a substantial oligarchy—the rule of a minority. It sought to wield with the same severity the rod which bore undisputed sway at home throughout the Union. The election of Mr. LINCOLN was the reasponse of the country to that resolve, and the conquest of the rebellion was the conclusion of the arbitrament of force to which the South resorted. The spirit which produced both results may be so patient and so calm that the Senate of Alabama thinks it is dead. But it is not dead. Every rash and insolent act, such as that we have recorded, challenges it to reawakened life and activity. It is only necessary for the foolish men who are now again challenging it to go far enough, to find that it is as strong, as firm, and as efficient as it ever was.

THE INDIAN LOBBY.

A striking evidence of the rapid progress made in civilization by the Indians is found in the fact that several tribes maintain in Washington a lobby, the expenses of which are paid out of the income derived from trust funds held by the United States Government. The Indian has taken a leaf from the white man's book, and proposes to learn all of his little arts. The Cherokees, for example, annually receive the interest of $2,519,000, held in trust by the United States Government. Of this revenue, 35 per cent. should be dedicated to educating Cherokee children, under tribal direction. Prof. J. A. SEELYE, in his report to the House, Forty-fifth Congress, charged that this income was misappropriated, that it was "borrowed" from the school fund and never returned, and that, notwithstanding the amplitude of the income of the tribe, which is increased by local taxes, the nation has incurred a debt of several hundred thousand dollars, and that its obligations are sold at very low figures. What becomes of this money?

In the report from which we have just quoted, Prof. SEELYE says that "an expenditure, which sometimes reaches $25,000 a year, is made in the support of delegates in Washington." In his examination before the House Committee on Indian Affairs, last Winter, Col. BOUDINOT, of the Cherokee Nation, said: "For the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, the delegates cost our people $30,000; for the second session of the Forty-fourth Congress, $29,000; for the called session of the Forty-fifth Congress, for only one month and a half, they cost us $7,464, making an aggregate in two years for the Cherokee Nation alone, of $66,464." Subsequently, it was proposed in the Cherokee Council to give the delegates $10,000 additional, which they demanded, whereupon a member of the Council said: "As for me, I shall never vote another dollar to these delegates; they do not represent the people, and they are squandering our money." It was alleged at that time that this money was used in Washington by the Cherokee lobby to prevent the passage of the bill to allot the lands of the Indian Territory in severalty. Who are the pensioners of that lobby?

These facts become especially significant when we perceive that certain Washington correspondents send forth inflammatory dispatches whenever the subject of disturbing the tribal relations of the Five Nations is alluded to. One of these sends to a New-York paper a warning that we may arouse another Indian war if the Indian lands are allotted to individual Indians. And we are threateningly reminded that one of the Five Nations—Creeks—has many warlike traditions, and that the Five Nations could call in as allies the Arapahoes, Cheyennes, Comanches, and other blood-thirsty tribes who have their grudges to gratify. This monstrous threat against the Government of the United States originates in the Indian lobby at Washington.

It is clear that if the surrender of tribal organizations, and an allotment of lands in severalty were made in the Indian Territory, the lobbyists and their agents would be out of business. At present, the custody and disbursement of the income derived from the trust funds held by the United States are in the hands of a ring. In the Cherokee Nation, as Prof. SEELYE declares, they "borrow" the school money and do not put it back. They lump under one head of "expenses in Washington" such sums as Col. BOUDINOT refers to as being paid out for alleged lobby expenses. These men are fighting desperately to keep their places and their plunder. Including "adopted" white men and negroes, the Cherokees number 19,000, all told. They draw more than $160,000 per annum from the United States Government, and they collect over $10,000 in local taxes. Yet, with this net income of $170,000 a year, and without local improvements of any cost or value, the Cherokee Nation is to-day in debt to the amount of $189,000. Is it surprising that a well-fed lobby in Washington cries out against investigating the affairs of the Territory or disturbing the existing conditions of things?

The Indian lobby has invented a bugaboo. Railroads and railroad projects are in bad odor, and the Indian lobby industriously circulates the statement that the agitation of the Indian Territory question is in the railroad interest. But, just now, the question is not so much the allotment of the lands, as the crying scandals of this misgoverned Territory. The head men of the Five Nations arrogantly claim that theirs is a foreign country, and that the United States Government, though it is the depositary of the Indian trust funds, has no right to inquire into their domestic concerns. There is no law in the Territory. It is the refuge of outlaws and fugitives from justice. Last year there were 85 murders committed in the Territory for which no man was punished. To a large degree, the policy of the so-called nations is shaped by unprincipled white men and half-breeds. The so-called Legislatures are merely the registers of the men who pull the wires and spend the money. One meets in the Territory with very few real Indians who know or care what is going on in their national affairs. The so-called Principal Chief of the Choctaws is a red-headed Irishman who cannot speak or write a word of Choctaw. And, so long as the Indian Territory is fenced in by a wall of customs, laws, and habits separating them from all outside influences, so long will crafty managers enrich themselves and maintain a corruption fund from the bountiful revenue derived from the United States Government.

THE MILITIA CONVENTION.

The Militia Convention which assembled in this City yesterday is the fruit of the industrious efforts put forth by the committee of officers who broached the subject last Autumn. It turns out to have been timed unluckily; for the storm of yesterday and the night before must interfere with the prompt arrival of delegates, and possibly, also, somewhat with the programme of visits devised for their entertainment while here. But the responses to the call had already shown a wide interest in the purpose of the gathering.

The scheme of Militia reform propounded to the convention yesterday, and on which discussion was begun, is the project of the original committee, save that, catching up the BURNSIDE Army bill idea, it has been spread into a sketchy code, designed, when properly filled out, to take the place of the entire Militia chapter in the Revised Statutes. But it all hinges on Gen. RODENBOUGH'S plan to enforce uniformity of regulations, clothing, equipments, and so forth, among the various State Militias, coupled with Gen. WINGATE'S effort to extend rifle practice by vastly-increased Congressional appropriations for arms, ammunition, and rifle prizes, which in turn are to be made conditional on State appropriations for rifle ranges, and so on.

Looking at this plan as a whole, we may say that some features of it would probably commend themselves heartily to the State Militias even without the indorsement of the convention, while the remainder are such as neither the act of the convention nor any attempt at Congressional legislation is quite sure to render effective, except so far as they may be voluntarily adopted by the separate States, and even the separate organizations in each State. Of the former sort are the proposition that Congress shall increase its annual appropriation for the arms, ammunition, and ordnance of the Militia from $200,000, as customary now, to $1,000,000, and also the proposition that Army officers on the retired list shall be assignable as Militia Inspectors, thus giving the Militia some benefit of Army experience. At all events, a plan to increase the Militia appropriations five-fold, if agreeable to Congress and the people, can of itself hardly be presumed disagreeable to the recipients.

But when we turn to the propositions for uniform dress, equipment, and governing regulations for the Militia, the matter becomes different. The Militias now existing are State Militias, and some of the most efficient and famous of them may very likely object to any movement designed to make them resemble a national Militia. With some of the most celebrated and excellent corps, the distinguishing marks and characteristic customs which it is proposed to get rid of under the plan of Militia uniformity, are so many badges of corps pride—historic emblems or customs which will be held to as tenaciously as are those of some European regiments secured to them by royal license or express law. Besides, where these corps prejudices exist, the argument for uniformity, which is undoubtedly a strong one, will not be conceded. It will be maintained that while troops serve in the State they have no need to be governed, clad, and equipped otherwise than as their local laws and customs prescribe; and that when employed out of the State they are necessarily first mustered into the service of the United States, which act in itself, by the Constitution, brings them under the Army regulations, and also, as a matter of fact, gives them the Army dress, equipments, and all other needed uniformity.

Without stopping to argue this point, it will be enough to say that its mention suggests how much of the success of this scheme may depend on voluntary acceptance, upon its merits, rather than on the effort to make it law. We note, however, a very ingenious piece of proposed legislation, namely, the affixing of the condition that a State, in order to receive its share of the annual appropriation of a million dollars, must require its Militia to have and wear the uniform fatigue suit, (for the full dress of Militia need not be uniform, on this plan,) must also equip and maintain at least one rifle range, with instruction in the rifle manual, and so on. Undoubtedly, could this pressure be made use of, it might enforce a uniformity otherwise difficult to secure. But we should not feel at all sure of the legality of an act of Congress making the providing of uniform fatigue suits a prerequisite to a State's right to draw its share of money which, if given at all, should obviously be given proportionately to all the States.

Even if there were no question of legality to consider, we doubt very much if Congress would favor any such pressure, provided it should be generally resisted by reputable existing organizations. For it must be remembered that these latter were not created by Congress. The national Militia tumbled to pieces more than a generation ago. These volunteer organizations have undertaken to supply, for local purposes, the lack of a Congressional system; they were mostly formed by private action, and some of them have almost wholly supported themselves for half a century out of their own pockets, or by the contributions of their friends—for the small stipend given to the Militia by the States would hardly supply even such clothing as most of them wear. Accordingly, apart from all questions of legality in the proposed discriminations between States, Congress would hardly, we should say, be inclined to undertake a disagreeable pressure upon organizations which it did not create, and which have done much service for the General Government, while it has done little or nothing for them.

We think it clear, however, that the convention will find a good field open for Militia extension and reform, in which all can work. One of the first necessities, for example, in the Militia, is that its numbers should be increased in those States where it now has only an almost nominal existence. Beyond all question, also, the cultivation of rifle practice is of enormous benefit to the Militia, and the States that have not adopted it should do so forthwith; though the project to aid in this matter, as in the matter of drill, by championship prizes, to be offered by Congress, strikes us as having considerably more of the base-ball and pedestrian style about it than the Congressional or the military. Again, the Militia undoubtedly need more regular soldier's life in Summer camps, to habituate them to real service. And even in the matter of organization, of arms, of equipments, and of dress, it is clear enough that the convention can take measures for finding out what the best system is, and this will of itself be a step toward uniformity and, what is still more important, efficiency.

A remarkable and unique cause is now pending in the Circuit Court of Fredericktown, Mo., under the title of the State of Missouri against ADAM BOLLINGER. In October, 1862, ADAM, while a slave of Mrs. BOLLINGER, killed, in a paroxysm of jealous rage, a slave named JACK, fled, and was not heard of until last July, when he was discovered by the son of his victim, (who had made it the object of his life to run him down,) under the name of JOHN ALLEN, in St. Louis. During the court held last December, after a continuance was granted, the defendant, upon his application, and by consent of the Prosecuting Attorney, had the continuance set aside. Hereupon the defendant offered to withdraw his plea of "not guilty," and plead guilty of murder in the second degree. The Prosecuting Attorney accepted the offer, and upon his statement the court ordered the plea of guilty of murder in the second degree to be entered, and passed sentence of 10 years. Whereupon defendant moved arrest of judgment on the ground that the plea as entered would not support the judgment, defendant being at the time of the commission of alleged offense, a slave and deceased also being a slave. The court granted the motion, and arrested judgment, from which the Prosecuting Attorney appealed to the Supreme Court, and upon his representations that a conviction and punishment could be secured upon a rehearing of the case, the defendant was remanded to await a hearing of the appeal in the Supreme Court. The case presents curious difficulties under the peculiar wording of the Missouri law as to crimes committed by slaves. The statute runs: "Persons convicted of murder in the first degree shall suffer death; those convicted of murder in the second degree shall be punished by imprisonment in the Penitentiary not less than 10 years." "When any slave shall be convicted of felony punishable by imprisonment in the Penitentiary, the court before whom such conviction shall be had shall sentence the offender to receive on his bare back any number of stripes not exceeding 39." The statute does not anywhere define the term "person" in such a way as to include a slave, nor are the terms "slave" and "person" anywhere used in the statute as synonymous when applied to the slave. The question then is, was a slave, under the law, a "person." "Could he," as ADAM has himself put it, "being property like a horse, be any more guilty of murder in killing a slave, likewise property, than would one horse in killing another?"

THE TIMES made reference a few weeks since to the great increase in this country of the manufacture of cigars, and to their present small importation, and also ventured the prediction that we should soon be sending our cigars to foreign lands. The prophecy has been fulfilled sooner than we had expected. A recent dispatch from Havana says that Spain will contract next March for 15,500,000 kilogrammes of Virginia and Kentucky tobacco to be made into cigars. This beginning will be followed, doubtless, by many other orders. It seems novel that Spain should depend on us for tobacco, when she has heretofore got all that she wanted from Cuba, whence she has drawn so many of her supplies. This is another introduction to the new order of things to which Europe will in due time become accustomed. If we send beer to Germany, cheese to England, caviare to Russia, why should not we send tobacco to Spain? Our best cigars used to be Spanish cigars. It will not be long before the shop-keepers in the Puerta del Sol and the Calle de Alcalá will be advertising the finest American cigars. We are rapidly changing ancient conditions. Our products now go to the remotest ends of the earth. Man cannot travel to any quarter of the globe without meeting with some kind of American goods. Hundreds of people in the far East who may never have seen a "live Yankee," have eaten or used something that the Yankee have made, and every year adds to the sum total of our innumerable exports.

The late CALEB CUSHING is said, besides his serious studies, to have read more novels of every sort than any man of his time. He read them in English, French, German, and Spanish, though French novels were his favorites, especially those produced during the long reign of LOUIS XIV. He had devoured most of the Gallic fiction lying between the interminable tomes of Mme. DE SCUDERI and the ideally-elegant social pictures of Mme. DE LA FAYETTE, down to the works of BALZAC, GEORGES SAND, SOULIE, KARR, MUSSET, GAUTIER, SOUVESTRE, FEVAL, MURGER, CHAMPFLEURY, FEYDEAU, FLAUBERT, DUMAS, HUGO, and all the rest. It is said that he could remember long passages from DUCLOS, PREVOST, and SADE; could recall the plots and incidents and name the characters of hundreds of romances which he had not opened for 25 years. One of his associates has expressed the opinion that he must have devoured at least 5,000 novels, as he could master one of ordinary size in three or four hours, and has been known to get through with a dozen a week as mere recreation to his strictly intellectual labors. It is odd that a man who had such taste for dry statistics and prosaic facts, for such writers as SCALIGER, GROTIUS, PUFFENDORF, and NIEBUHR, should have taken delight in "La Sophie" and "Le Paysan Parvenu." But CUSHING was full of opposites and inconsistencies, though in all his variations and tergiversations he was undeviatingly loyal to his conception of self-interest.

Every few weeks the public prints record the death of some man or woman reported to have reached 110, 115, and sometimes 120 years. They are also very prone to furnish accounts, periodically, of persons who are still living at astonishing ages—as great sometimes as 130, and even 140. We have even seen lately a detailed recital of a negro in Baltimore who had passed his one hundred and forty-ninth year. It is observable that all the persons reported to have attained such wonderful longevity are ignorant, humble, comparatively unknown, and that nobody can, in consequence, contradict or correct their statements. They may think that they tell the truth—probably they do think so; but very ignorant people, odd as it may seem, do not, as a rule, know their age, and have no perception of the passage of time. They are very apt to exaggerate. When they are 90 they imagine they are over 100, and becoming objects of curiosity, their vanity is stimulated to represent themselves much older than they are. They tell their tale so often that they soon come to have faith in it themselves, and they inspire others with faith in it by force of assertion. A large proportion of the Methuselahs of the day are negroes, who, unless educated, have very seldom any notion of their age. We never have any account of a man or woman of intelligence or position who has lived for 120, 130, or 140 years; for men and women do not reach any such age. The extreme limit of human life is said, upon good authority, to be 105 and 106, which is altogether exceptional. The man who claims to have gone far beyond it either deceives himself or others—perhaps both. Col. LAHEBUSH, of the British Army, who died here not long since, assumed to be 115; but the facts proved that he was at least 10 years younger. JOICE HETH, the pretended nurse of GEORGE WASHINGTON, was represented by BARNUM, for showman's purposes, as 161: but a post-mortem examination showed her to have been only 75 or 80 years old. The story of THOMAS PARR lasting 152 years, and of his engaging in a love intrigue at 105, has long ceased to be credited. He insisted that such was the fact, because belief in so remarkable longevity augmented his self-importance; but he was either mistaken or very parsimonious of truth. All the stories in circulation of people more than 105 or 106 are baseless, and even many of the stories of persons living so long as this must be received with allowance.

MR. ROBESON'S EXPLANATION.

THE EX-SECRETARY OF THE NAVY EXPLAINS HIS ACTION IN REBUILDING MONITORS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—The House Naval Committee met this morning for the purpose of hearing statements from ex-Secretary Robeson in relation to the testimony heretofore taken by the committee. All the members were present except Messrs. Harris and Harmer. Mr. Robeson explained the circumstances of the Virginius excitement, when his attention was drawn to the weakness of the Navy for coast defense, and he was alarmed to find that the coast was at the mercy of any power, however weak, that had expended a portion of its money in the construction of iron-clad vessels. During the Virginius excitement, there happened to be in the Harbor of New-York a Spanish iron-clad, which would have been a very serious matter but for the fortunate circumstance of her having been in our dry-dock, which gave this Government a certain control over her. Frightened at this condition of the Navy, he made up his mind that it was the duty of the Secretary to strengthen it to the extent of his power with iron-clads. At the same time the single-turret monitors were put in repair out of appropriations, and on the completing of these repairs there were 14 or 15 ready for service—one on the Pacific, the others on the Atlantic coast. When he went before Congress in regard to the Virginius affair, he had suggested the propriety of repairing the double-turreted monitors, namely, the Miantonomah, Terror, Amphitrite, Puritan, and Monadnock, as being more powerful and better sea-going vessels than the single-turret monitors. The Appropriation Committee favored the plan, and transferred an old appropriation for an iron dock to that purpose. The work was too large to be done under one contract, and the first contracts were limited to putting the ships in frame. The work was distributed among the best ship-builders of the country. It was necessary that it should be done in the best manner, and propositions were invited from those competent to do the work, and they bid for it. Then the Bureau of Construction made its own proposition, and said if they would come down to it they could have the work. The second contracts were made in March and April, 1875, for the plating of the vessels. The contracts were made dependent upon appropriations, that is, contractors took the risk of the appropriations being required for other purposes. In the Fall of 1875 an exigency arose which called for expenditures to a much greater extent than had been anticipated. It did not make the impression on the country that it would had it not been kept quiet. Our relations with Spain were then more critical than at any time within 10 years. He then related the circumstances growing out of the threatened intervention of the United States in the affairs of Cuba, and read the letter of Secretary Fish of Nov. 5, 1875. In October, November, and December, 1875, every available vessel was ordered from Europe, the South and North Atlantic, and elsewhere, to rendezvous at Port Royal, involving large expenditures. Had it not been for this unexpected demand upon the funds of the department these second contracts would have been settled. He read a letter from ex-Secretary Fish, dated Dec. 31, 1878, in which that gentleman states that Mr. Robeson, in his previous testimony in relation to this matter, had not overstated the critical situation at that time, and reciting some of the leading points in that transaction. Under these circumstances it became the duty of the executive branch of the Government to put the Navy on the best possible footing, and had he failed to do so the country would have held the Secretary of the Navy responsible. The result of that correspondence had been to improve our relations with Spain. It was in this way that so much of the appropriations were used as to make good the deficiency on the second class of contracts.

The third class contracts were made under his order of March 2, 1877. These were also made subject to appropriations, with a special proviso that if Congress made no appropriations the United States should be in no wise liable. The ships were in the yards in the way of the builders. They had already gone on to carry out the second contract, although they had been informed that there were no appropriations to pay them. The contractors said that the ships were in their yards, and they desired to finish and get them out of the way, and were willing to take the risk of payment, but could not do so unless the department gave the order and furnished the necessary specifications and plans. He was about going out, and, as he had begun the ships, to relieve his successor of any responsibility he gave the order. He informed his successor the first hour he came into office of his action, and explained that he had taken it to relieve him of responsibility in the matter, and Secretary Thompson had told him he had not suspended the orders on account of illegality, but to avoid any financial embarrassment in connection with them.

The committee at this point took a recess. The committee reassembled at 1:30 P. M., and Mr. Robeson proceeded to explain his course in relation to the disposition of old material that had accumulated in the different Navy-yards as the leavings of the war. He stated that when he went before the Committee on Appropriations of the Forty-third Congress, asking an appropriation to rebuild the double-turret iron-clads, some members of the committee asked if he could not make use of old material scattered around in different navy-yards in the construction of them. He replied that it was the custom of the Navy Department to use old materials, but in respect to the iron-clads, the navy-yards had not the capacity for their construction, and the work had to go to contractors, who had large yards and greater facilities. He said he had some doubts as to whether the Secretary of the Navy had authority to use the old material under these circumstances. The question was whether the application in this way was equivalent to the use contemplated by section 1,541 of the Revised Statutes, the law being supplemental to the general authority vested in the Secretary of the Navy. He stated to the committee that if he could so dispose of the old material he could get along with less appropriation. The discussion in the committee was free and the conclusion was reached that he could so use the old material. He then quoted from testimony before the committee to show that when this class of material had been sold at auction, it had brought only about 25 per cent. of the appraisement, while by this method of disposing of it the Government had realized more than the appraisement.

Mr. Whitthorne—In any report made to Congress did you ever state that the old ships (double turret monitors,

WORK BEGUN AT ALBANY.

THE COMMITTEES SELECTED BY SPEAKER ALVORD.

COMPLETION OF A HARD TASK, WITH A RESULT WHICH DOES NOT PLEASE EVERYBODY—THE SPEAKER'S FRIENDS CARED FOR—SLOAN MEN DISAPPOINTED—ANALYSIS OF THE PRINCIPAL COMMITTEES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 16.—The prediction made by Republicans generally that there would be many disappointed members of the Assembly after the committees were announced has been fulfilled. Speaker Alvord's task, admitted by everybody to be a hard one, has been performed, and such as the result is, it must stand. Members who studied it to-day, regarded it in many instances with deep mortification; others were elated, pleased beyond their expectations, and others still contemplated it with indignation which they could not find words to express. The disappointment of the Sloan men, who were treated with the least consideration, is not greater than that of some of the Alvord men, whose hearts had been fixed upon places in which they believed they could do much good, and in which they found they had not been called to serve.

Mr. Alvord's leading friends have certainly been well cared for. They head all but half a dozen of the committees, and only two of the first places on prominent committees have been given to the defeated faction, while Mr. Sloan's most outspoken supporters have been put upon prominent committees near the head of the list. Several men who were believed to have wavered between the candidates for Speaker have been accorded humble places. Mr. Sloan himself has the Chairmansip of the Ways and Means, and a place on Rules. Mr. Skinner, one of the most active of his supporters, is third on General Laws, second on Internal Affairs, second on Printing, and seventh on the Special Committee on Employes of the House. Mr. Sheard, an unflinching Sloan man, is on Canals and the Sub-Committee of the Whole. Mr. Fish has paid the penalty of this adherence to the fortunes of Mr. Sloan, but his punisument is light. His name does not appear in the Cities Committee, but is third in Ways and Means, in Internal Affairs, and in the Special Committee on Apportionment. He is not pleased, but he says he got quite as much as he expected. Mr. Sloan naturally feels that Mr. Alvord has treated him graciously, while persons not immediately interested consider that he has only been accorded his rights.

Of the committees generally there have been different criticisms. The Judiciary has Strahan at its head for the third time, and it is strong in the names of Hepburn and Terry. Mr. Varnum, of the Eleventh New-York District, is accorded a place with these members of experience, and Mr. Langbein, who did not get the head of the Committee on Internal Affairs, and who did not get on the Cities Committee, is sixth on the Judiciary, and is grievously disappointed. The Committee on Cities is strong in names, but it excites more comment than any other on the list. Hayes, Husted, and Sharpe are its principal members. It has an excellent member from Troy in Mr. Mann, while Mr. Brooks and Mr. Holahan are to be the guardians of Democratic interests in the committee. Anti-Tammany members are inclined to sneer at it, but there has yet appeared no reason for the assertion declaration that it is a "Tammany committee," arranged in the interest of Kelly.

The Insurance Committee is certainly in the hands of men who know something about insurance business. Knowles, of Albany, is in the business, is a friend of the Superintendent of Insurance, and an active man. Mr. Husted, who is third on the committee, has the reputation of being somewhat acquainted with the business of insurance. Cady, of Columbia, is a man of business, and a warm friend of Senator Rockwell. Baker, of Monroe, is an excellent member. Thomas, of Warren, is another intimate friend of Senator Rockwell. The Committee on Internal Affairs is so constituted as to discourage members who are anxious to have an Excise law passed. It is yet too early to speak positively about it, but Wakely, of Allegany, the Chairman, is called a strict temperance man. Skinner, of Jefferson, is jealous of the liquor-dealers. Fish, of Putnam, has been on the same side. Halsey, of Cayuga, has not been canvassed. Tallmadge, of Kings, it is said, was selected because he was a temperance man from a lager-beer district, and Eidman and Seebacher, of New-York, appear to be about the only members who can be relied upon to favor any change of existing laws. Strangely enough, the Committee on Manufactures has only one manufacturer upon it, out of several in the Assembly, while the Public Health Committee has four physicians out of nine members.

The Democrats have really fared exceedingly well, for 26 of them have found places on each of the 40 committees, while discrimination has been used to get the best men of the minority on the best committees.

SHARP TALK IN THE ASSEMBLY.

AN EXCHANGE OF COURTESIES BETWEEN THE SPEAKER AND MR. SLOAN—THE APPORTIONMENT RESOLUTION CAUSING MORE TALK THAN DEDATE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 16.—Speaker Alvord most happily recovered from his indisposition some time last night, and to-day, at 11 o'clock, he appeared in his place, looking as ruddy and bright of eye as ever before, his dress being very carefully arranged, and his silvery hair and beard scrupulously smoothed and controlled for the occasion. He found many seats empty when he rapped for order, and the galleries were not full. A heavy snow-storm, which began late last night, and which has continued without interruption, had made the walking difficult, and probably discouraged ladies who would have visited the Capitol if the day had been fine, for there were only half a dozen present during the session.

Mr. Alvord's voice, which seemed weak and faltering a day or two ago, was heard with distinctness as he proceeded, after the prayer, to call the order of business. Before this order was reached, however, Mr. Sloan found a chance to call attention, in an exceedingly graceful little speech, to the fact that the Speaker had been presented with a gavel made from wood from the Mount of Olives, and to ask that the correspondence be entered on the records of the House. Speaker Alvord, not to be outdone in courtesy, replied in a strain indicating that he took the compliment as one to the place, and not to the individual who held it, and a compliment that would have been paid to Mr. Sloan if he had been Speaker.

Mr. Travis' call for his resolution of last night, asking for the appointment of an Apportionment Committee, provoked some discussion. No limit of time in which to report a bill was specified in the resolution as offered by Mr. Travis, and Mr. Brooks asked that it be amended to require a report in 30 days. Mr. Travis rather sharply but "respectfully" declined to accept the change. Mr. Brooks then said that the Republicans had neglected to comply with the requirements of the Constitution, and to remind the Assembly of the duty that rested upon it to make an apportionment. He thought that as an amendment of the character he suggested had been agreed to in the Senate, the House could properly accept it. Mr. Travis took up the debate, and still objected to a limit of time in which to make the report, as he did not believe any necessity existed for hurrying the matter. Mr. Sloan expressed himself as desirous to see an apportionment made speedily, and would regret to hear that any one in the House was opposed to making a just one. He suggested that the member from Richmond should agree to allow the time to be extended to 40 days, when the amendment would probably be accepted by Mr. Travis, and he should be glad to vote with Mr. Brooks for the resolution. Mr. Brooks and Mr. Travis were both satisfied with this proposition. After Mr. Brooks had accepted it he fired what was intended to be a parting shot, by saying that "We, as members of this Assembly who were also members of the last Assembly, should take shame and confusion to ourselves for having neglected the important duty."

This brought Mr. Sheard, of the last Appointment Committee, to his feet. He promptly and vigorously repelled Mr. Brooks' last remark, and asserted that if the member from Richmond and his friends had supported the bill presented last Winter, the matter would have been disposed of. The bill had only failed because a few members in the lower house had neglected to perform their duty to vote for it. Mr. Husted went still further. He declared that the apportionment required by the Constitution had failed because, since 1876, the Democratic members in the Assembly had always been arrayed solidly against it. Just as everybody was wondering how Mr. Grady, of New-York, had restrained himself so long, he rose on the outer edge of the circle, to the right of the Speaker, and roared out his speech on apportionment. It had been heard before, and was familiar to the old members. The Democrats in Mr. Grady's neighborhood seemed pleased to hear him talk, but everybody else seemed astonished that he should so violently fling his arms about his head and exert himself so loudly to be heard above the hum of conversation. As he accused the Republicans of opposing apportionment, and suggested that a remedy lay only in a change of party representation, Mr. Fish replied, asserting that the Democrats would not assist a non-partisan effort to reapportion the State. He did not believe it would be safe, after the country had seen how the Democrats apportioned New-Jersey, Indiana, and Ohio, to let them apportion New-York. Mr. Brooks retorted, claiming that when "blows were given, blows must be given in return," and that, although there were 97 stalwart Republicans in the House, the popular vote of the State was Democratic by 40,000 majority.

Mr. Fish—How was it about the Judge of the Court of Appeals?

Mr. Brooks—Taking the vote on Judge Danforth out of the question, the popular vote was largely Democratic.

Mr. Fish—Does the gentleman from Richmond mean to say that the Democrats were in the majority in the last election?

The discussion went on for a few moments in this wrangling fashion, when Mr. Langbein moved the previous question, and the resolution was adopted. It seems that Mr. Langbein had other business on hand, for he immediately offered a resolution that has become historical, calling upon the House to make a place for Mr. Pary, of New-York, a worthy young man, whose name has become familiar in connection with the place he now seeks.

When other business was out of the way, and the Speaker took up a roll that lay beside his hand on the desk, there was a stir in the Assembly as everybody settled down to hear the news that had been expected for several days—the announcement of the standing committees. The committees were then read by Clerk Johnson.

Mr. Sheridan's Excise bill, introduced to-day, is the shortest thus far offered. It is applicable to Brooklyn, and the license fees are fixed by it at from $25 to $50.

Mr. Skinner's Apportionment bill gives an additional Senator to New-York, three additional Assemblymen each to Kings and New-York, one to each of the Counties of Monroe, Orange, and Suffolk, and deprives the Counties of Cattaraugus, Columbia, Delaware, Madison, Oneida, Ontario, Oswego, St. Lawrence, and Washington of one member each.

The Senate ordered to a third reading the bill appropriating $200,000 to complete the equipment of the National Guard, being the same amount appropriated last year. The Assembly resolution congratulating the State and country on the resumption of specie payments came up, when Mr. St. John moved its immediate adoption. Objection being made, it went over under the rule. Mr. Jacobs offered a resolution, which was adopted, authorizing the Committee on Cities to investigate the management of the Kings County Inebriate Asylum. He said that the managers of the institution, while expressing their willingness to submit to a thorough investigation, yet refused to be investigated by the local authorities on the ground that they had no jurisdiction, the asylum being a State institution. After a half hour's session the Senate adjourned.

DARTMOUTH MEN AT DINNER.

FIFTY ALUMNI OF THE COLLEGE AT THE ANNUAL RE-UNION — THEIR BALDNESS, POOR HEALTH, AND MODESTY.

The gas-lights of the Westminster Hotel banquet-room shone merrily upon the glossy bald heads of some half a hundred of the Alumni of Dartmouth College last night, reunited, as is their annual wont, to eat and talk. The number was small, for few Dartmouth men carry with them to middle life a constitution sufficiently robust to risk night exposure when the snow lies deep and cold in the streets. The seeds of incurable disease are sown thickly among the students at Hanover at an early period of their connection with the college. Early rising and overstudy among the serious-minded, compulsory attendance at chapel among the ungodly, beefsteak, oak-tanned and invulnerable as a mule, among the gluttonous, hard water among the temperate, and unspeakable whisky in the case of the dissolute—these and other malign influences work the sanitary ruin of many a bright young Dartmouth fellow. When appetite had had her perfect work, the brethren attempted to sing the Dartenough ode. This ode was composed by Dr. John Ordronaux, in Latin, and begins with two words spelled in this eccentric manner, to wit: Gaudeamus igitur. When 50 middle-aged gentlemen of all degrees of ignorance of music attempt to sing a Latin song, even to a well-known air, the result is commonly painful. They have not that nice regard for time and tone such as mere hired singers have. The waiters at first went silently; then wrung their hands; then tore their hair; then fled from the room. Dr. Ordronaux, who, as President of the association, was Chairman of the reunion, ventured once to interject a little Latin into his discourse, but the old hackneyed scale of pretended recognition of Latin words called up was so hollow and sickly that he saw his mistake, and stuck to the vernacular thereafter. Ladies have an idea that men are over-rude and free in their after-dinner oratory on occasions like this. Their minds would have been disabused could they have listened to these Dartmouth men last evening. Pentelic marble is not more pure than they. Once, when the Chairman, in speaking of Prof. Young's late impertinent telescopic observations of the behavior of Venus, alluded in a guarded manner to the particolored hosiery of that planet, the air of the room grew roseate with the universal blush that mounted to the chaste cheeks of his hearers, overspread their hairless crowns, sped through the copse of hair at the backs of their necks, and sought the kind concealment of their coat-collars. And when Brother H. N. Twombley was called upon to give his bachelor views as to the admission of girls to the college, he handled the subject with such delicacy, and concealed his meaning in words so soft that the listeners thought he was reciting the loves of the angels.

President Bartlett told of the pressing financial needs of the college, of its raising by taxation every year, as her current expenses exceed her income from all sources. This debt has been rolling up, until it will require a deficiency bill of $100,000 to cover it, and the college comes slowly forward. There was much Winkley, of Philadelphia, has just given $35,000, which will be devoted to a Professorship of Anglo-Saxon and English Literature. The sum of $25,000 has also been given from the estate of the late D. F. Stone, of Boston. A plan has recently been adopted of soliciting from all the Alumni such gifts as they can afford to make, and it is hoped that they will be liberal in their contributions.

Letters of regret were read from several Professors of the college and others, and the following officers for the ensuing year were elected:

MISS CORNELIA WRIGHT FOUND.

THE INSANE YOUNG WOMAN SENT BACK TO HER PARENTS IN POUGHKEEPSIE.

Miss Cornelia Wright, the young lady who has been missing from her home at Poughkeepsie, in this State, was found last evening at the residence of a private family on Clinton-avenue, Brooklyn, and returned to her friends. Miss Wright, who is demented, has the hallucination, although her relatives are very wealthy, that she has to work for a living. Eluding the vigilance of her friends, she escaped from her home on the 7th inst., and managed to reach this City before her parents thought of communicating by telegraph with the Police. With a cunning born of her mental disease, Miss Wright, before leaving home, wrote to the proprietress of a respectable boarding-house on Pierrepont-street, Brooklyn Heights, signing herself "Dr. Curtis," and saying that a neice, Miss Agnes Curtis, would come and take rooms at the lady's house in a day or two. Having paved the way for her coming, Miss Wright, when she reached this City, went straight to the Brooklyn boarding-house. The following morning she left, saying that she was going to get her trunk. The proprietress of the boarding-house wrote to "Dr. Curtis," in Poughkeepsie, informing him of the facts. There being no Dr. Curtis in Poughkeep-ie the letter was opened, and the parents of Miss Wright in that way first obtained a clue to the whereabouts of their missing daughter. On Saturday, however, their utmost efforts failed to trace her after she had left the Pierrepont-street boarding-house. A description of the unfortunate girl was published and photographs of her were sent to the Police all over the State. Yesterday morning some ladies connected with a female employment bureau in Concord-street, Brooklyn, called on Mr. A. W. McDowell, of No. 55 Sands-street, who is an intimate friend of Miss Wright's family, and informed him that a young woman in every way answering the description of the missing girl had obtained through their bureau a situation as lady's companion in the family of a wealthy Brooklynite residing on Clinton-avenue. Mr. McDowell went at once to the place designated, and found the missing girl. He then sent back to Poughkeepsie.

AMUSEMENTS.

OSWEGO'S SUSPENDED SAVINGS BANK.

OSWEGO, N. Y., Jan. 16.—The excitement caused by the suspension of the Oswego City Savings Bank has much abated, and all persons interested are awaiting patiently the result of the proceedings before the court at Schenectady on Jan. 21. A committee of three prominent citizens at the request of the Trustees, is examining the securities held by the bank, and will make public the result of the examination.

ARCHBISHOP PURCELL'S RESIGNATION.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 16.—The Catholic Telegraph (the official organ of this diocese) to-day says of the press telegram announcing the acceptance of the resignation of Archbishop Purcell: "We doubt its truthfulness, because Rome would not consider the question of a successor until it sent official word of its acceptance of his resignation to Archbishop Purcell and consulted him and the other Archbishops of the country. Rome does all things in order."

RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE BEQUESTS.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Jan. 16.—The will of the late Mrs. Phœbe Whipple, who died last week, makes bequests to 13 religious and charitable institutions, including $1,000 to the American Baptist Home Missionary Society, $1,000 to the American Colonization Society, $1,000 to the Rhode Island Baptist State Convention, $500 to the American Baptist Missionary Union, and $500 for the Normal and Theological Institute at Nashville, Tenn.

CALDER'S JURY FAIL TO AGREE.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Jan. 16.—The trial of John B. Calder, late Cashier of the Grocers' and Producers' Bank, for embezzlement and larceny, closed to-day in the disagreement of the jury, which stood eight for conviction and four for acquittal. Testimony showing general loose management of the bank, both before and after Calder became Cashier, created feeling in favor of the accused.

INJURED BY A LOCOMOTIVE.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 16.—The midnight train from New-York to Philadelphia ran into a horse and carriage as it was crossing the track in this city. The horse was killed. Hugh C. Hill and George Anthony were thrown from the carriage, senseless. Mr. Hill, who is a resident here, was soon able to rise, but Mr. Anthony, a resident of Bordentown, is still in a very precarious condition.

THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH.

HALIFAX, Nova Scotia, Jan. 16.—A cable dispatch received to-day confirms the rumor that the Duke of Edinburgh will shortly be appointed Admiral at this station. He will come out early in the Summer with the Duchess, accompanied by the Russian fleet.

WARREN COUNTY FRAUDS.

NEW-JERSEY'S RAPID JUSTICE EXEMPLIFIED.

TWO MORE CONVICTIONS OF THE DISHONEST OFFICERS—A COUSIN'S BETRAYAL OF A CONFIDENTIAL CONVERSATION—ANOTHER TRIAL BEGUN—PHILLIPSBURG OFFICERS INDICTED.

BELVIDERE, N. J.—Jan. 16.—Over 10 inches of snow fell last night, and the trains are running irregularly, while the country roads are nearly impassable. As a consequence, the attendance at the conspiracy trials has been small. The case against ex-Collector Cummins and his go-between, Bulgin, was resumed, and Dean, who turned State's evidence, was further examined, but nothing new was brought out. A. Ramsay Reese, who received the forged note from Dean and made the collection of part of it from Cummins, swore to so doing, but failed to show that Cummins knew of the note being fraudulent. He claimed to have acted in good faith and his evidence did not inculpate Cummins. Kurtz, one of Pinkerton's force, testified to arresting Mattison at Alexandria, and identified a letter and two telegrams from Bulgin, which he found on Mattison's person. Dr. Mattison was the next witness, and told the story of his meeting Bulgin and Dean in New-York, and there receiving from Bulgin his share of the proceeds of the note. This meeting was by appointment and for the purpose of dividing the spoils. Dr. Mattison appeared in his testimony to be attempting to shield Cummins. The telegraph operator at Hackettstown identified the telegrams as sent by Bulgin to Mattison, and the Teller of the bank there swore to the handwriting of Bulgin in the letter. The letter and telegrams sought to bring about the meeting of Mattison and Dean with Bulgin, which meeting Bulgin had before denied.

William G. Cummins, a second cousin of the prisoner, made a sensation in court by his testimony. He went to Hackettstown on Saturday night last, in company with John M. Wyckoff, an ex-member of the State Legislature, and there had an interview with the indicted ex-Collector. They went as friends and urged upon him to confess all. He then refused, but on Sunday night they three met in Washington, and the elder Cummins admitted having had his doubts as to the correctness of the note after he had made the first payment upon it. He then endeavored to get the note into his possession, and to this end gave Bulgin $1,200 to go to New-York and buy the note from Dean, to whom, he had learned, it really belonged. Bulgin bought the note for $800, and Cummins gave him $200 for his trouble. He also promised to go on the stand as soon as the trial came on and tell all he knew of the matter. The subject of this conversation the younger Cummins repeated to people here, and the State called him as a witness, as the ex-Collector changed his mind when the trial came on and determined to make a legal fight of it. That the younger Cummins, under the guise of friendship, should draw from the old man a confession, or a portion thereof, and then speak of it so publicly that he became a witness for the prosecution, is considered as a contemptible action, and he is looked upon here with more disgust than even Dean. As soon as the younger Cummins' testimony was in, the noon adjournment was had.

At the afternoon session the prosecution rested. Col. Robeson, of counsel for the defense, made a brief opening, and denounced bitterly the action of the State in calling witnesses by using in many cases to reveal confidential confessions. He then asked the ex-Collector, who for some time had been crying bitterly, if he desired to go on the stand, whereupon Cummins walked slowly forward. There was much sympathy felt with the broken-down man, but all listened eagerly to what he said. In his direct examination he claimed to have made the first payment on the note in good faith, believing it to be genuine, but that when he could find no trace of it in the county books or any evidence of its being properly in existence, he became alarmed and wanted to get the note into his own hands. He learned that Reese was a bankrupt and could not properly have come by the note, and then traced it to Dean's possession. To secure it, he gave Bulgin $1,200 and sent him to meet Dean, and buy the note as cheap as he could. Bulgin paid $800 to Dean and Mattison for it, and brought back $400, out of which Cummins gave Bulgin $200 for his trouble. This $800 Dean and Mattison claim was their share of the second payment, and that there was to be a final one when the note was allowed in the settlement with the board. On cross-examination, Cummins produced the disputed note from his pocket-book. It is not only bears on the back the indorsement of Charles R. Miller, '72; Waldron B. Vanderpool, '76; Benjamin S. Church, '56, (Chandler Department;) John M. Grosvenor, M. D., '64, (Medical Department.)

"RIGOLETTO" AT BOOTH'S THEATRE.

A numerous audience was present last night to hear the performance of "Rigoletto," which the programme announced as "Verdi's very dramatic opera." The artists who sang the work can hardly be said to have given a "very dramatic" rendering of it, and, from a musical stand-point, they were still further wanting. "Rigoletto" is an opera which depends principally on the capacity of the baritone, and on him the responsibility rests for a good performance. Signor Pantaleoni, who created such a favorable impression on the first two nights he appeared with Mr. Strakosch's company, has steadily deteriorated ever since. It is charitable to suppose that a cold interferes with his voice, but in addition to the defects which may be ascribed to this cause, he sings persistently out of tune, and shows a disposition to make up for artistic deficiencies by an extraordinary exhibition of physical vigor, extravagant acting, and a final yell, all of which is effective with certain portions of the audience, but does not commend him to the favorable consideration of the musical part of his hearers. This is the more to be regretted, as Signor Pantaleoni has a noble voice, which he knows how to use if he will exert himself, a fine stage presence, and the skill of a finished actor. Miss Litta gave a cold and lifeless performance of the part of Gilda last evening. The rest of the cast does not call for special mention, with the exception of Signor Lazarini, who gave a careful and artistic rendering of the character of the Duke. Signor Lazarini lacks the power which is sometimes desirable, but he sang so conscientiously and gracefully that he deserves to be commended. The orchestra and chorus, under Mr. Behrens, were unusually bad. The audience were in an enthusiastic mood, and made repeated demands for the reappearance of the principal singers. To-night "Carmen" is announced, with Miss Kellogg in the rôle of the heroine.

CONCERT AT STEINWAY HALL.

In spite of the inclement weather a very large audience was attracted last evening to Steinway Hall by the vocal and instrumental concert in aid of the German Emigrant House in this City. The programme was judiciously selected, and there was quite a large force of artists, whose services were freely tendered in aid of the charitable object of the entertainment. Some very creditable choral work was supplied by the choirs of St. Luke's and St. Matthew's Churches, and the soloists performed their offices in all instances most agreeably. There was but one departure from the original programme. Mr. Steins, the baritone, was ill, and his place was supplied by an artist from Berlin, who sang an aria from "Lucrezia Borgia" in a very satisfactory manner. The success of the evening, however, was the vocalization of Mrs. Imogen Brown, (soprano,) who has a good cantabile style, with especial delicacy and sweetness in piano passages. Miss Lina Anton, of St. Louis, performed on the piano-forte with a good deal of skill. Mr. Bischoff was the tenor, and a very pretty quartet, in two movements, for piano, violin, viola and cello, was supplied by Messrs. Von Gogh, Arnold, Ganzberg and Werner. In all respects, the concert must be esteemed a success.

GENERAL MENTION.

Mr. Strakosch announces another grand concert for Sunday evening at Booth's Theatre, in which several artists of his opera company will participate. M. Remenyi, the violinist, will also take part in the entertainment.

The Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn will have its public rehearsal this afternoon, and the corresponding concert to-morrow evening. A good deal of reliance is placed by the society on the fact that Mr. Theodore Thomas will conduct in person, and it is also strong in the services of Miss Cary as contralto, and Mme. Julia Rivé-King as pianiste. Miss Cary will sing "Ah Mon Fils" from "Le Prophète," and the "Slumber Song" from Bach's Christmas oratorio. Liszt's concerto No. 1 in E flat is among Mme. King's contributions.

CONTEST FOR A CONGRESSIONAL SEAT.

OSWEGO, N. Y., Jan. 16.—Joseph Mason, Congressman-elect from the Oswego-Madison District, whose election is contested by Duffy, the Greenbacker, has served his answer to Duffy's notice of contest. Judge Mason denies each and every allegation of fraud, bribery, coercion, and corruption made by Duffy. He also replies that Duffy's notice is insufficient and incomplete, in that it does not specify particularly enough the grounds upon which Duffy relies; also, that the notice was not served within the time required by law.

THURSDAY, Jan. 16—P. M.

On the Stock Exchange this morning the bear movement inaugurated yesterday was renewed, and, under a heavy pressure to sell, prices declined ¼ to 1⅜ ₱ cent. Later it became plainly evident that the operation was purely artificial in its character, for on the first manifestation of a desire to cover at the lower range of prices a rapid appreciation in values ensued, and large purchases were made for the long account. These naturally imparted a buoyant tone to the speculation, and the market, with hardly an exception, showed the best figures of the day in the final dealings, the improvement ranging from ½ to 3¼ ₱ cent. The coal stocks were conspicuous in the activity, being favorably affected by reports, which were generally regarded as well founded, that the prospects for a renewal of the combination are decidedly encouraging. In some quarters the assertion was freely ventured that already a basis of settlement satisfactory to all the parties in interest had been reached. Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph made the greatest advance of the day, purchases of the shares being stimulated by the rumor current of a probable increase in the dividends. Among investment shares Rock Island displayed marked strength and closed at an advance of 1¾ ₱ cent. on the day's transactions. The Direct tax of the Illinois Central Railroad Company to-day declared a semi-annual dividend of Thr.e ₱ cent., payable March 1.

The transactions aggregated 196,336 shares, including 42,224 Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, 37,150 North-western, 35,900 Lake Shore, 23,128 St. Paul, 21,505 Erie, 17,500 New Jersey Central, 3,800 Ohio and Mississippi, 3,700 St. Louis, Kansas and Northern, 2,375 Michigan Central, 1,950 Delaware and Hudson, 1,900 Morris and Essex, 1,800 Rock Island, 1,700 Western Union, 1,400 Pacific Mail, 1,200 Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph, 1,169 Pittsburg, and 1,100 Wabash.

Delaware, Lackawanna and Western fell off from 47⅝ to 46⅝, and advanced to 48, with final sales at a reaction of ¼ ₱ cent. New-Jersey Central fell off ¾ ₱ cent., to 35, and subsequently rose to 37. Delaware and Hudson declined to 40½, and Morris and Essex to 80, but the former afterward sold up to 41½ and the latter to 81. North-western common declined 1⅜ ₱ cent., to 52½, recovered to 53¼, fell off to 52¾, and finally sold up to 53¾. The preferred declined 1 ₱ cent., to 79⅝, and recovered to 80⅜. St. Paul declined from 36⅞ to 36¼, and preferred from 77½ to 77, with closing sales at 37⅜ and 78, respectively. Lake Shore fell off ¾ ₱ cent., to 68⅝, and recovered to 69½. Erie fell off from 22¾ to 22½, and advanced to 23⅛, closing at the highest point. Michigan Central declined from 78¾ to 78⅜, and rose to 79½. Canada Southern advanced ¼ ₱ cent., selling up to 48. Ohio and Mississippi advanced from 8⅜ to 8⅞, for the common, and from 22½ to 23 for the preferred. Wabash rose from 21¾ to 22⅝. St. Louis, Kansas City and Northern declined from 8¾ to 8, and rallied to 8¼. The preferred fell off from 32¼ to 32. Alton and Terre Haute declined 1½ ₱ cent., to 1½, but recovered to 2. Pacific Mail advanced from 11⅞ to 12⅜, and afterward lost the improvement. Western Union Telegraph rose from 95⅜ to 95¾, and Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph from 32 to 35¼. The latter reacted to 35 at the close. Among investment shares Rock Island rose from 119½ to 121, with closing transactions at the latter figure. New-York Central fell off to 114. Chicago, Burlington and Quincy sold at 112¼ 112⅜. Pittsburg rose from 89 to 89½, and Illinois Central from 82¼ to 82½.

The Money market worked smoothly, and the supply of capital offering to borrowers on call was abundant at 2 a 3½ ₱ cent. Prime mercantile paper sold at 4 a 5 ₱ cent. The following were the rates of exchange on New-York at the undermentioned cities to-day: Savannah, buying at par, selling ⅛ a ¼ premium; Charleston, easy, buying ⅛ discount, selling par; New-Orleans, commercial, ¼ bank, ½; St. Louis, 50 premium; Chicago, weak, buying 1-10 discount, selling 1-10 premium, and Boston, 35 cents premium.

The Bureau of Statistics reported a reduction in the Bank of England discount rate from 5 to 4 ₱ cent., money being obtainable in the open market at London at lower figures. The Bank gained £535,000 bullion for the week ending yesterday, and £18,000 additional on balance to-day. The proportion of its reserve to its liabilities is 30⅝ ₱ cent., against 28¼ at previous last week. British Consols declined ¼ ₱ cent., closing at 95⅞ a 96 for both money and the account. United States 4½s advanced ⅛, to 108⅝, 1867s ¼, to 103¾, and 10-40s ¼, to 110½, but the last named reacted to 110¼ at the close. New 5s were ⅛ ₱ cent. lower, selling at 104⅛. American railway shares were irregular. Illinois Central rose to 84½, and receded to 84. Pennsylvania advanced ¼ ₱ cent., to 35. New-Jersey Central declined ¾ ₱ cent., to 37. Erie common 1 ₱ cent., to 22⅞, and the preferred 1 ₱ cent., to 38½. At the close Erie common recovered to 23. Bar Silver advanced 1d., being quoted at 50½d. ₱ ounce. At Paris, Rentes closed at 113f. 42½c., again 1f. 15c. yesterday. The weekly statement of the Bank of France shows a decrease in specie of 11,225,000f.

The Sterling Exchange market was dull, the storm having interfered with business in this department, and there are no changes in either the nominal or selling rates, except for cables, which sold at $4 88¼. Business in 60-day bills was at $4 84½ a $4 84¾, in demand at $4 87¼ a $4 87½, and in commercial at $4 82 a $4 83.

Government bonds were firm on a moderate business and without important change in prices. The total subscriptions at Washington to the 4 ₱ cent. loan to-day were $7,390,000. In railroad mortgages the dealings were large and some marked changes in quotations were noted. Denver and Rio Grande Firsts declined, under sales of $120,000, from 89¾ to 87, but subsequently rallied to 87½ and closed at 87¾. Ohio and Mississippi Seconds advanced 3 ₱ cent., selling at 80. The New-Jersey Central issues were ¼ to ¾ ₱ cent. lower in the early dealings, but later advanced from 92¾ to 94¼ bid for Adjustment, from 77 to 78 for consolidated Firsts assented, and from 76⅝ to 77½ for convertible assented. New-York Central coupon Firsts rose to 120½, Chicago, Burlington and Quincy 7s to 119¼, Chicago and Alton Sinking Fund 8s to 104, St. Paul consolidated Sinking Funds to 101⅞, Delaware and Hudson registered of 1891 to 95⅞, Toledo and Wabash, St. Louis Division, ex matured coupon, to 95, Erie Firsts to 117, Pacific of Missouri Firsts to 108, and do. Seconds to 104. Metropolitan Elevated Firsts declined from 97¾ to 97. Union Pacific Firsts fell off to 107, and do. Sinking Funds to 106. Hannibal and St. Joseph convertibles declined from 103⅜ to 103⅛, and recovered to 103½ bid and 103¾ asked. In State bonds, the only important feature was an advance of 3 ₱ cent. in Louisiana Consols, to 63½.

A GRACE CHURCH WEDDING

LUDLOW-CARNOCHAN.

CEREMONY WHICH FASHIONABLE SOCIETY LOOKED FORWARD TO—THE TOILETS AND PRESENTS—RECEPTION AT DR. CARNOCHAN'S HOUSE.

Miss Harriet Carnochan, eldest daughter of Dr. John M. Carnochan, the well-known surgeon, was married to Thomas Ludlow at Grace Church yesterday afternoon. Both bride and groom are well known and esteemed in society, and the wedding was looked forward to for some weeks as an event of the highest social interest. Two thousand invitations were issued. The storm of yesterday, however, deterred a number of persons from attending the ceremonies at the church, though this was a matter hardly regretted by those who did attend, since it gave the latter a better opportunity for observing the elegant toilets adorning their neighbors. The bride is a great grand-niece on her father's side of Gen. Israel Putnum, the old Revolutionary hero. Robert Morris, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, was her great-great-grandfather; her grandfather, Major-Gen. Morris, who commanded at the bombardment of Fort McHenry. The groom is the eldest son of Thomas W. Ludlow, Jr., who died several years ago. He is named for his uncle, Thomas Ludlow, of Yonkers, from whom he inherited his large fortune.

There were no floral decorations to distract attention, and the programme on the organ, executed by Mr. S. P. Warren, was of the least elaborate description, embracing Weber's "Jubilee Overture," Spohr's "Rondo Grazioso," a Swedish wedding piece from Sodenmann, one of Meyerbeer's triumphal strains, and the usual excerpt from Mendelssohn, played as the bridal party were passing down the aisle after the ceremony. Among the most familiar faces in the middle pews were those of Mr. and Mrs. Fordham Morris, Mr. and Mrs. John Rutherford, Mrs. Walter Rutherford, Mr. Charles Alexander, Mr. James Ludlow, Gen. Charles H. Crane, Mrs. S. Blatchford, Mr. Gouverneur Morris, Mr. Alfred Wagstaff, and Mr. William Ferdon.

Rev. Dr. Henry C. Potter, Rev. Dr. J. Brecknridge Gibson, of St. John's School, Sing Sing, and Rev. J. C. Tibbitts, Assistant Rector, had just taken their places at the altar railing when the bridal party, preceded by the ushers, Messrs. James Boggs Livingston, William Starr Miller, Theodore Roosevelt, Francis Morris Rutherford, Louis Cruger Hasell, and Edgar Logan, Jr., came down the aisle. The bride was escorted by her father, and was preceded by six pretty bridesmaids, carrying bouquets of roses and walking demurely, two by two. Their names were Miss Mary Morris Carnochan, the bride's sister; Miss Annie C. Ludlow, sister of the groom; Miss Helen Chanler White, Miss Beatrice Pauldin, Miss Helena Rutherford, and Miss Annie Pratt. They were all dressed exactly alike, in white embroidered gauze over white silk, with the usual fall of a graceful veil of tulle. They wore a wreath of white flowers. The bride's toilet was not less simple—a white satin and silk robe, trimmed with point lace flounces. An elegant court train of heavy white silk, with reverse of white satin, and snowy drifts of lace at the shoulders completed the costume. The bride's mother was dressed in dark maroon-colored brocade and silk, trimmed with white point lace and light blue silk. Miss Estelle Carnochan wore a dress of light blue gauze and silk, with trimmings of white lace. Miss Lilian Carnochan's dress was of rose-colored gauze and silk, also trimmed with white lace. The groom and his best man followed the bridal train, and the latter, at the opening of the aisle, took the bride's hand and led her to the altar. Rev. Dr. Gibson performed the legal, and Rev. Dr. Potter the religious, part of the ceremony, the bride and groom kneeling to receive the benediction.

A reception was given last evening at the house of the bride's father, at which the select few were furnished a glimpse of the wedding presents, the number of which was very large. Among the finest were a very handsome silver tete-a-tete set, a splendid ice cream set, a beautiful set of Copeland ware dinner plates, another of handsome after-dinner coffee cups, gold and silver dinner, dessert, sugar, and berry spoons, butter knives, a massive silver bowl, castors, napkin rings, call-bell, and many other costly articles appertaining to the dinner-table. There were, in addition, two elegant mirrors, an etching by the artist Irving, entitled "Courtship," several silver and china vases, flower stands, sconces, handsome fans, a fine parlor clock, a pair of brass candlesticks, a rich gold bracelet, a beautiful silver embossed card case, and innumerable other handsome gifts, both ornamental and useful. Among the friends and relatives sending presents were the six bridesmaids, Mrs. Walter Rutherford, Miss Pressall, Mrs. Bradhurst, Mrs. A. M. Stout, Mr. and Mrs. John Rutherford, Miss Townsend, Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, Mrs. A. C. Bedtner, Mr. and Mrs. Fordham Morris, Miss Doremus, Mrs. H. M. Alexander, Miss Campbell, Miss Mary Smith, Miss Cameron, Mr. Charles Alexander, Mr. James Ludlow, Mrs. Ludlow, Mr. Murdock, Gen. Charles H. Crane, Miss Romayne Stone, Miss Mary Kemble, Mr. Richard Campbell, Mr. Francis Rutherford, Mrs. S. A. Blatchford, Mr. Gouverneur Morris, Mr. Alfred Wagstaff, Mr. L. C. Hasell, Miss Sarah C. Hewitt, Miss Helena Rutherford, Miss Helen White, Mr. William Ferdon, the bride's sisters and brother, and many others. Dr. Carnochan's gift to his daughter was a purse of gold coin for the bridal trip to Europe.

DANGEROUS CONDITION OF THE WALLS OF THE BUILDING—THE DEAD FIREMAN.

A "watch" force of firemen, who remained all night around the ruins of Brooks Brothers' building, pouring streams of water on the still burning mass of debris, were relieved early in the morning by others. The piles of charred timbers near Crosby-street burned fiercely throughout the night, and during the day emitted clouds of mingled smoke and steam. A bright tongue of flame burned at the opening of a broken gas main pendent from the middle of the northern wall. Two of the battalion engines, and the apparatus of Engine Company No. 11, were relieved from further attendance at the fire early in the afternoon, and the wetting down of the ruins was done during the remainder of the day by two lines of hose, one of which depended from the roof of the Pacific Bank Building, while the other, attached to a battalion engine in Grand-street, was shifted from place to places by the attendant firemen. The Department of Buildings yesterday ordered the owners of the building to either remove or secure the western wall, facing Broadway, and the connecting fragment of the Grand-street wall. The latter and the northern wall are in a very dangerous condition. It was understood in the afternoon that the insurance companies would take charge of the work of propping up the front wall. No testimony relative to the origin of the fire was taken yesterday by Fire Marshal Sheldon or his Deputy.

A requiem mass will be solemnized to-day at 10:30 A. M. in the Church of St. Rose of Lima, for the repose of the soul of John Reilly, of Engine Company No. 17, who was crushed to death on Tuesday night by the falling of the walls. At 1:30 P. M. the funeral cortége will leave the church and proceed to Calvary Cemetery. In addition to the members of his own company who will attend as mourners, an escort of 10 firemen in command of a foreman, and six pall-bearers selected from different companies, will accompany the body as far as the ferry at the foot of Grand street. The condition of Fireman Denis Doran, who was badly wounded, was reported yesterday afternoon as being much improved.

THE WILL OF THE LATE E. K. COLLINS.

The trial of the contest in the matter of the will of the late E. K. Collins, founder of the Collins Line of Transatlantic Steam-ships, was set down yesterday before Surrogate Calvin, but was adjourned by consent of the parties until June 23 next. The testator died in January, 1878, and the will now being contested bears date of Oct. 25, 1867, and was offered by the widow, Sarah I. Collins. On Feb. 7, 1878, it was admitted to probate. By the terms of the will all the personal property of the testator was given to his wife, together with one-third of the realty. One-sixth of the realty was given to the testator's three half-sisters, and the remainder was to be equally divided between the testator's sons, John, Thomas W., and Edward N. One of these sons, John, filed objections to the will, claiming that it was not his father's last will, but that he had executed one of later date, and that his information on this point was obtained subsequent to the probate being granted. He further charges that his mother knew of the existence of this later will at the time the will of 1867 was admitted, and asks that she be required to produce it. The estate is still a considerable one, though it has been much impaired during the past six or seven years.

FUNERAL OF A VETERAN OF 1812.

Peter Peck, a veteran of the war of 1812, was buried yesterday from his late residence, No. 36 Willett-street. Mr. Peck was born in this City about 88 years ago. He was a relative of the original owner of Peck-slip, and a descendant on his mother's side of Johannes Delamontagnie, a French Huguenot refugee, who once owned a large tract of land in Harlem. He was a "three months" man in the war of 1812, and was stationed at Harlem Heights, under Capt. De Lancey. Mr. Peck was a shoemaker by trade, and worked at the bench until he became too enfeebled by age. He was married in 1812, and his wife died on the 3d inst., aged 84 years. Two daughters survive him. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Mr. Putney, of the Second-Street Methodist Episcopal Church. On account of the storm, only one of his comrades was present at the funeral. The body was interred at Cypress Hills Cemetery.

A SHOOTING AFFRAY IN BROOKLYN.

A warrant was issued yesterday for the arrest of J. J. McCormick, a wealthy and well-known resident of Williamsburg, on a charge of having shot at a contractor named George Quinn on Tuesday evening, in a bar-room at the corner of Grand and Sixth streets. Quinn was a witness against McCormick in a suit in the City Court for $800, in which McCormick was defeated. Quinn, on his way back from the court, went into the bar-room corner of Grand and Sixth streets, and finding McCormick there taunted him with his defeat in the suit mentioned. McCormick replied that he would not have lost the suit were it not for Quinn's perjury. A dispute followed, during which McCormick drew a pistol from his pocket and fired at Quinn, the bullet passing through a portion of the latter's clothing, but inflicting no injury. McCormick claims to have acted in self-defense.

THE MUTUAL LIFE.

VIEWS OF THE COMPANY'S LAWYER AND OF THEIR ACTUARY ON THE NEW DEPARTURE.

The committee of Trustees of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, to whom was referred the remonstrance of 132, and the favorable memorial of 8,000, policy-holders, regarding the 30 per cent allowance to new insurers, met yesterday for organization in the company's offices. The committee consists of A. H. Rice, William E. Dodge, Samuel D. Babcock, George S. Coe, Martin Bates, William A. Haines, and F. D. Cossitt. Ex-Gov. Rice, of Massachusetts, was elected Chairman. It was stated that the Mutual Life, late last Summer, recognizing the difficulty of obtaining fresh vitality to make its expectation tables sound, hit upon the expedient of allowing all new insurers 30 per cent. discount on the premiums of the first two years. Two separate interests were immediately affected by this. That largest in popular influence was composed of old policy-holders who could see no reason why their years of adherence to the company should not deserve quite as much recognition as was given to new lives. The other and most active in opposition to the new movement was composed of companies whose new lives were obtained chiefly through large commissions to agents, and which could not afford any such bait for new risks. The feeling among the policy-holders crystallized into the remonstrances which were read at the meeting of the Board of Trustees on Wednesday. The dissatisfied policy-holders represented that, according to the best actuarial authority at their command, such a course would be injurious to their interest in the assets of the company, inasmuch as business could be done on that plan only at a ruinous loss. They hinted at holding the Trustees personally responsible, and this last-named consideration had an immediate effect upon several of the responsible and wealthy gentlemen who compose the board. The latter desired at least to be assured that the step would not be held in question by owners of the board, and if it should prove by the event, ill-advised, that they might not be held either civilly or criminally responsible. That part of the question was left to Judge Palmer, the chief law officer of the corporation and the question of business soundness was left to the actuary of the company. Both reports were submitted to the board meeting which was held on Wednesday last. Judge Palmer's opinion was voluminous and exhaustive. He sought to prove that it was not only to the interest of the new policy-holders, but that the old policy-holders were quite as much interested in supplying the company with new vitality. The hard times had been instrumental in driving out the very lives upon which the longest expectation of life, and, consequently, most profit to the company, was founded. Doubtful risks could not be induced to allow their insurance to lapse while healthy persons flocked out. In order to continue business on sound principles new lives must be got in, and, instead of paying the increased commission necessary to new business to agents, the insured themselves were to be made its beneficiaries. As to the powers granted by the charter, the opinion reviews them at length, and deduces from them the conclusions that the board is empowered to take the steps that it has decided upon. The Trustees are assured that the law only holds them personally and individually responsible when they err consciously, and that ill-judged actions cannot be brought up in judgment against them. The actuaries reported that, instead of the discount to new risks resulting in a loss to the company, business could be done on the new basis at a small margin of profit. This view had been so favorably presented to the insured that all the new risks, and many of the old, were induced to add their voices to the shout in favor of the new departure. The committee was appointed, and will sit to-day, and as frequently thereafter as may be necessary to hear all in favor of, and opposed to, the measure.

LOSS OF THE EMILY B. SOUDER.

STORY OF ONE OF THE SURVIVORS—THE OFFICIAL INVESTIGATION.

Theodore Steinert, quartermaster, and Alfred Anderson, seaman, the only known survivors of the crew of the lost steam-ship Emily B. Souder, gave testimony yesterday before the United States Local Inspectors of Steam Vessels as to the circumstances attending the loss of that vessel. The steamer left this port Dec. 8, 1878, bound for Turk's Island and Cape Haytien. On the following Tuesday the vessel foundered. Steinert testified that severe weather was encountered on the night of Monday, Dec. 9, and that the vessel began to leak very badly. At 1 P. M. the next day, the fore-mast was cut away, as the water was gaining and the ship rolled heavily. The hold cargo, fore and aft, was next thrown overboard, but the water gained, and about dark the fires were swamped. The engineer then came and told the Captain to get the boats ready. They were shortly afterward launched, but the first boat, in which were two or three ladies and several seamen, was at once capsized. Three boats in all were lowered, with 10 men in each, and there were still 10 men on the vessel. A plank raft was made, and Capt. Kuehl, Engineer Tice, Second Mate Thompson, and a passenger named Crosby put off on it.

The six men still aboard lashed some planks to the booby-hatch, but were unable to get it overboard, so they waited until the steamer was sinking, and as the stern went pretty well down a sea came over forward and washed the hatch over the side. Steinert, Anderson, and a passenger held fast to it. The remaining three men were then in the pilot-house, although they had intended to put off on the hatch. Soon afterward Steinert and Anderson picked up a life-raft and got aboard it, but the passenger refused to leave the wreck. A heavy sea soon parted them and they saw him no more. Once the life-raft turned over, but Steinert and Anderson got on it again. When day broke they were out of sight of land and the steamer and all the boats had disappeared, but from some floating freight these men picked up a box of tripe and one of oysters. They remained on the raft until the evening of the 12th, when they were picked up by a schooner. They reached Kingston, Jamaica, on Christmas Day. The Consul at the latter place declined to render them any assistance, and they were finally sent to this City on the steam-ship Atlas. The steamer had four boats—three good ones and one of little use. The life-raft was full of holes. Steinert believes the leak in the steamer began aft. He was at the wheel from 4 o'clock A. M. until 6:30 P. M. on the 10th of December. The vessel was not deeply laden, and had recently been on the dry-dock at Philadelphia. It was blowing a gale, and there was a very high sea on the Tuesday, and they were between 300 and 400 miles from New-York, in the Gulf stream. There were nine passengers, four ladies and five men, and 30 men in the crew. When Steinert and Anderson found the life-raft there was no one on it. This was Steinert's second voyage in this steamer, and on the first trip he liked the vessel very well, as she appeared to be all right and did not take water. He considered her seaworthy in every respect. He saw her go down about 15 minutes after he was washed over with the hatch.

Anderson said he had no statement to make, and that Steinert had told the story better than he could do.

ROBBED BY NEW-JERSEY HIGHWAYMEN.

An individual who presented the appearance of a genuine tramp, but who said that he was an "honest laborer," appeared before Justice Otterbourg yesterday, in the Tombs Police Court, and asked to be committed to some charitable institution, as he was sick, hungry, and destitute, and needed medical care. The applicant, whose left cheek was largely dotted with ugly bruises and scars, gave his name as Henry Ervin, and said that he had walked from Philadelphia to New-York. When about three miles from New-Brunswick he encountered a rough set of fellows, numbering about seven, who peremptorily asked what his bundle contained. Ervin, who did not dream of danger to himself, replied to the threatening request in a manner not agreeable to the New-Jersey gentlemen. The result was that he was stripped of all his outer clothing, knocked down, and brutally kicked and beaten on the head and face. The highwaymen, not content with rendering him insensible by their kicks and cuffs, robbed the helpless man of 60 cents, all the money he had. When he recovered consciousness, and having bathed his wounds in a wayside rivulet, he resumed his journey. Being despoiled of nearly all his clothing, Ervin felt the cold intensely, and also suffered severely from hunger; but being determined to reach New-York, he continued on his way, and reached the Metropolis footsore and weary. He looked around for something to do on Wednesday, the day of his arrival, but failing to find employment he applied to Justice Otterbourg for relief. The magistrate, after hearing his story, sympathized with him and committed him to the care of the Commissioners of Charities and Correction.

THE LATEST COAL STORIES.

Judge Packer, of the Lehigh Valley Company, has been in consultation during the past two days with President Sloan, of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Company, President Lathrop, of the Central Railroad of New-Jersey, and other members of the old combination, and it was reported on Wall-street yesterday that an understanding has been arrived at which will probably meet with the approval of all the parties concerned. It is stated that the Lehigh Valley Company has greatly modified its views on the subject of percentages of output. The annual meeting of that company takes place on Monday next, and it is reported that on that occasion Judge Packer will make recommendations favoring a renewal of the combination. On these reports, and on assertions that the recent inclement weather and the prosperity developed in the iron trade have created an unexpected demand for coal, the coal stocks developed much strength in yesterday's market.

MR. JOSEPH COOK'S LECTURE.

THE INFIDEL ATTACK ON PROPERTY—A PRELUDE ON OBSCENE LITERATURE.

Mr. Joseph Cook's lecture last night before the Young Men's Christian Association was on "The Infidel Attack on Property," with a prelude devoted to the dissemination of obscene literature through the mails. In respect to the last-mentioned topic, Mr. Cook said that a few years ago, at Newark, the Special Agent of the Post Office Department was stabbed twice and disfigured for life because he had hunted down a man who was flooding the United States mails with vile and wicked literature—a man who had violated the law in this respect 18 times under 15 different aliases. This was the class of men with whom the National American League of Infidels now strikes hands. The latest demonstration of this body, under its name of the National Liberal League, was the ovation tendered to Hayward, at Faneuil Hall, Boston, on his being released by pardon from Dedham Jail, an ovation which it is proposed to repeat shortly here in New-York. It remained to be seen whether New-York would allow this National Leper's League of Cancer-Planters to have their sway, and permit them to spread their blood and soul poisoning publications over the length and breadth of the land, to pollute the minds of the young. They had already made several attempts to secure the repeal of the law prohibiting their publications from being sent through the mails, and in their unholy crusade these ghouls of the slums were aided by the publishers of newspapers, who, honestly advocating the rights and interests of a free press, were urging the repeal of that law. Purifying the mails was one of the most direct methods of limiting the circle and power of this evil. In the case of Hayward, he thought the pardon granted, without referring it back to the court for even a passing opinion, was an unwarranted use of the pardoning power. The so-called Free Religious League was but the offspring of the other league, and together they were made up of the most dangerous and vile theories and philosophies with which Boston had yet cursed the United States.

After prayer by Rev. Dr. Evarts, of Chicago, and the singing of a hymn, Mr. Cook began his lecture on Socialism by saying that if people were desired to realize it they might listen to the roar of flames at the Tuileries, the report of the pistol-shot fired at the most paternal of European Emperors, the whiz of the ball sent from Vera Sassulitch's weapon, or, if these were too distant, they might come nearer home and look at Pittsburg in 1877, when 10 cities in the United States were being kept in order by martial law on the Brooklyn side, and that there being mainly propagated through the agency or medium of the secret trade and Socialist societies. After describing and quoting at some length from the writings of Ferdinand Lasalle, Karl Marx, and other European Socialistic leaders, he said the existence of their theories was due to the neglect which has been shown by the world at large to the question of political economy. It had at last, however, been actively taken up, and now most of the leading universities had their Professorships of political economy. It was now engaging the attention of some of the most gifted minds of England and America, but it was still a crude science, and it was even claimed against it that it was an art and not a science. He believed that the standard of wages and profits went hand in hand, and that the old see-saw theory was being rapidly displaced and disproved. But there was a duty resting on every employer and manufacturer in this regard, and that was to raise the standard of living. This was the way in which the Chinese question must be solved, and this question could be overcome in that way if we do not rush hastily into barbarian assaults on them. Educate alike Hans, Patrick, Sambo, and Ah Sin into a higher standard of living, and the rivalry and competition and hatred between them would cease. Let us not be driven to justice to all of them, and he believed there was a high commercial sagacity in it. He closed by denouncing the theories of the Socialists and to the nationalization of property, and while satirically illustrating the impossibility of apportioning it, even if they had the means or method of acquiring it, predicted that this land had never yet seen a day so red with blood as would be that upon which the Socialists should attempt to carry their theories into effect.

THE MURDER OF W. B. WILLSE.

CLOSE OF THE CASE FOR THE DEFENSE—CROSS-EXAMINATION OF THE PRISONER.

Yesterday was the fourth day of the trial of Frank McKenna for the murder of William B. Willse. "The boys" from the Fourteenth Ward slums mustered in full force to be present at what they supposed would be the closing proceedings in the case, and the same rough-looking gang who had on previous days filled the court-room were early in attendance. The prisoner was surrounded by his father and mother and a number of other relatives, and his sister, an overdressed young woman, presented a very handsome bouquet to her brother's lawyer, who, in turn, presented it to Judge Cowing.

At the opening of court the prisoner took the stand, and was subjected to a searching cross-examination by Assistant District Attorney Rollins. He admitted having been arrested three times for felonious assaults, but had been discharged, being fined $10 on one occasion. One of his scrapes, he said, was a saloon shooting affair, at which Bleecker-street, to Central Park and back to Cortlandt-street, at the foot of which, at 10 o'clock, they will embark on board the steam-boat John H. Starin for an excursion down the Bay as far as the Narrows, and up the East River to Blackwell's and Randall's Islands, for a visit to the public institutions.

JOHN W. HULL'S SALE OF BONDS.

Messrs. Field & James, the Broad-street brokers who were robbed of $30,000 of Government bonds on Dec. 28 by John W. Hull, traced some of the stolen bonds yesterday to the First National Bank, to which, it was discovered, they had been sold on the Monday following the robbery by John Monroe & Co., reputable Wall-street bankers and brokers. Messrs. Field & James were at first very indignant at the bank officers and at Mr. Monroe, the fact of the robbery and the numbers of the stolen bonds having been published on the day before the sale, and one of their members called at Mr. Monroe's office to demand an explanation. Mr. Monroe said that he had known Hull for six years, and had had some heavy transactions with him. He never suspected that he was otherwise than perfectly honest and straightforward. Hull had owed the firm $900 for a letter of credit which he had purchased to send to his wife in Europe some time before, and they had been dunning him for it. On the afternoon of the robbery, between 2:30 and 3 o'clock, he dropped in and said that he wanted to settle. He threw down five of the stolen bonds, and asked Mr. Monroe to sell them for him and deduct the amount due. Mr. Monroe responded that it was too late that afternoon, but that they could dispose of the bonds on the following Monday morning, if that would suit. Hull said that he needed some money at once, and asked whether they could not advance him $4,200, and keep the bonds as security. They agreed to this, and handed him that sum. They ascertained from the newspapers next day that the bonds had been stolen, but as they had come into their possession in a legitimate manner, and before the fact of the robbery was made public, the law held them not responsible for any loss. Accordingly, they had the right to sell them to the First National Bank next day. The reason they did not mention the matter was that they did not wish to be dragged into the newspapers. Hull still owes them a balance on the letter of credit transaction.

UNCLE CORNEEL'S WEDDING.

Injustice was done to "Uncle Corneel" Williams, the venerable colored Custom-house porter, whose intended nuptials were announced yesterday, in stating his age at 75. He will be 81 years old on March 21, next. At 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, after completing his "stint" of shoveling the snow from the sidewalk surrounding the Custom-house building, he modestly presented himself to Collector Merritt, and asked for three days in which to enjoy the honeymoon. The Collector promptly gave him a week to recover in, and he took his departure for Sullivan-street, carrying a huge bouquet, amid the cheers of his 1,200 fellow-employés. The marriage was duly celebrated last evening by Rev. Mr. Wilson, Pastor of Zion Methodist Episcopal Church, in Bleecker-street, of which the bride is a member. The latter is a blooming damsel of 57 years, estimated, on the best colored Custom-house authority, to weigh 180 pounds. Her maiden name was Sarah Sands. Though no formal reception followed the ceremony, the house No. 212 Sullivan-street, where the happy couple will make their future home, overflowed with friends and acquaintances, and a roaring good time was had. The Custom-house employés manifested their appreciations of the groom's qualities by an elecant present, comprising two articles of domestic utility, inclosed in a beautiful green and gold case.

A SON OF A SEA COOK.

Emile Wagener is a lad about 9 years old, who is now an inmate of the New-York Juvenile Asylum. His father is a cook upon one of the French steamers, and is now in Europe. His parents quarreled and separated, and he fell into the custody of a Mrs. Sophia Salton, who placed him in the asylum. His mother died last month, and upon her death-bed requested her sister-in-law, Mrs. Mary Peleuss, to adopt and rear Emile. Mrs. Peleuss obtained a writ of habeas corpus from Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court Chambers, yesterday, and argument as to the proper custodian of the boy will be heard to-day.

DEATH OF A CENTENARIAN.

The death of Eliza Ryan, aged 106 years, was reported to Dr. Nagle, Register of Vital Statistics, yesterday, as having occured in the Alms-house on Blackwell's Island. She was a native of Ireland, was unmarried, and emigrated to this country 86 years ago. Death resulted from senile asthenia.

THE EXPRESSMEN'S CONVENTION.

CHANGES IN THE CONSTITUTION—ELECTION OF NEW OFFICERS.

The morning session of the annual convention of the Expressmen's Mutual Benefit Association, which met yesterday at the Metropolitan Hotel, was devoted to the consideration, in Committee of the Whole, of the report of the Committee on Constitution and By-laws. Mr. S. M. Shoemaker, of Baltimore, presided, and there were 25 delegates present. At the afternoon session the report of the committee was further considered and partially adopted. At the evening session, the proposed constitution and by-laws were adopted, section by section, with a few slight amendments. The principal changes effected by the new constitution is one making the sessions of the convention biennial, instead of annual, and another creating the office of Treasurer, which has heretofore been filled by the Grand Secretary. The new constitution also provides for three classes of members, to the heirs of the first of which, in case of death, shall be paid $2,000, the second $1,000, and the third $500. An initiation fee of $2 is to be paid by each member upon joining the association, and upon the death of a member an assessment of $1 will be levied upon each member in good standing, to constitute a benefit fund. The following were chosen officers for the ensuing two years:

President.—S. M. Shoemaker, Resident Manager of the Adams Express Company, Baltimore, Md.

Vice-Presidents.—James C. Fargo, American Express Company, New-York.

Grand Secretary and Treasurer.—Sutherland De Witt, United States Express Company, Elmira, New-York.

Executive Committee.—For four years, H. W. Dwight, Springfield, Mass.; E. Hayden, St. Louis, Mo.; J. S. Hubbard, Detroit, Mich.; A. D. Kenner, Baltimore, Md. For two years—J. G. Yates, Cleveland, Ohio; J. F. Fargo, Chicago, Ill.; E. W. Sloane, Indianapolis, Ind.; T. G. Wallis, Elmira, N. Y.

The convention then adjourned to meet at Cincinnati, Ohio, on the third Wednesday in January, 1881. In the evening most of the members of the convention attended the ball of the employes of the American Express Company at Irving Hall. At 9 o'clock this morning they will participate in an excursion on the Metropolitan Elevated Railway from

THE NEXT DOG SHOW.

The Westminster Kennel Club have appointed the second week in April for their third annual dog show, and have engaged Gilmore's Garden as the place for holding the exhibition. The show will open on Tuesday, the 8th of April, and continue until the 11th. The premium-list will be very valuable, and an unusually large entry-list is expected. Many valuable dogs have been imported expressly for this show, and it is anticipated that it will eclipse in interest any of its predecessors. The New-York show comes first in the circuit this year, and will be followed by large shows in Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, &c.

DEMOCRATS OPPOSED TO TAMMANY.

The Sub-Committee of Nine, of the Joint Committee of Twenty-seven, of the Irving Hall, City, and County Democracy appointed by those organizations to form a permanent union of the Democrats of this City opposed to Tammany Hall, met yesterday in the office of Hon. John B. Haskin, in the Bennett Building. A long session was held, at which a plan of organization, prepared by Messrs. Nelson J. Waterbury, Emanuel B. Hart, and Robert B. Nooney, was discussed. The salient features of this plan are, the enrollment of Democratic voters opposed to Tammany in the various districts of the City, the holding of primary elections for members of district associations, and the selection afterward by the associations of a General Committee of representative men. The whole matter will be brought before the Joint Committee of Twenty-seven at a meeting to be held this evening at the Westminster Hotel, for its action.

COLLISION ON THE EAST RIVER.

THE OCEAN STEAMER JENNY OTTO RUNS INTO TWO FERRY-BOATS—NO PERSONS INJURED.

The Union Ferry Company's boat Monticello was run into by the steam-ship Jenny Otto, just outside the Hamilton-Avenue Ferry slip, on the Brooklyn side, shortly after 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Fortunately, there were less than 100 persons on board the ferry-boat, for, had it been crowded, the loss of life would have been very great, as the entire after ladies' cabin was torn out by the heavy iron stem of the steam-ship, and fragments of the wreck were strewn in every direction. The Jenny Otto had just left the Columbia-street stores, where she had received her cargo, and was making for the Buttermilk Channel, when the ferry-boat Baltic was about to enter the slip which the Monticello was leaving. Mr. Smith, the pilot of the latter, could not see the steamer, because of the long covered pier which extends out into the river, just above the slip, until it was too late to go back, and he was compelled to keep on his way across her bows. The steam-ship, which was now getting well under way, appeared to be attempting to avoid him, but, a moment later, struck the stern end of the Baltic, and then, shearing off, struck the Monticello with a terrific crash right aft of the starboard paddle-box, and, as her stern was swung slowly around by the steamer's stern, the ladies' rear cabin was torn out with a loud, crunching noise. At the first shock the ferry-boat listed over to port, and as she began to swing around many of the passengers thought she was sinking, and some of them took life-preservers from the racks above the seats and were putting them on, when they were assured that there was no danger. She entered the slip as soon as possible, and, after landing the passengers, went to the company's yard, near the foot of Atlantic-avenue. No one was injured by the collision, nor was the hull of the boat in any way damaged. There were but two ladies on board, and they were in the forward cabin. The horses on board the boat manifested considerable fright at first, but were soon quieted by their drivers. The Jenny Otto slacked up after the collision, but soon proceeded to sea with the wreck of the ferry-boat's guard rail still dangling from her bows. On board the Baltic there were a larger number of passengers, and although they were just going into the slip, many of the ladies screamed and became greatly excited. This boat sustained no material injuries. A Director of the Union Ferry Company, who was on the Baltic, says that the steamer was only about 500 feet from the pier heads on the Brooklyn side, and that there is a law requiring steam-ships to keep the centre of the stream, as the danger of collisions is thereby decreased. The revenue boat at the Battery and a number of tug-boats went to the assistance of the ferry-boat as soon as the sound of the collision was heard. Mr. Smith, the pilot of the Monticello, is confident that he can clear himself at the official investigation, which will be made as soon as the pilot of the Jenny Otto returns to this City. That steamship was loaded with grain, and bound for the River Tyne.

THE MURDER OF OFFICER SMITH.

COVERT D. BENNETT AND MRS. SMITH ARRAIGNED IN JERSEY CITY.

The bill charging Covert D. Bennett with the murder of Officer R. H. Smith, at Layfayette, last August, which was presented to Judge Knapp in the Hudson County Oyer and Terminer, Tuesday, also charges Mrs. Jennie R. Smith, the widow, with the crime. Mrs. Smith had already been indicted for the murder by the Grand Jurors who finished their labors in October last, and she had been arraigned upon it and pleaded. So, when it became noised around yesterday that the new Grand Jury had indicted her a second time, the rumor only served to fan the excitement which had been kindled by the announcement of Bennett's indictment. In anticipation of Bennett's arraignment a large crowd gathered in Judge Knapp's court yesterday morning. At the instance of District Attorney McGill, Sheriff Toffey soon afterward produced Bennett in court. On entering the bar he conversed for a few moments with ex-Judge William T. Hoffman, his counsel. The conference was interrupted by Mr. McGill directing the prisoner to stand up. Bennett, with his hat in one hand and the collar of his unbuttoned coat turned up around his neck, arose and turned his eyes upon the prosecutor. Mr. McGill briefly stated the substance of the indictment and asked Bennett how he pleaded.

"Not guilty," responded Bennett, in a firm and deep, but not loud, voice.

Judge Hoffman, in answer to the inquiry of the court, said that the case would be ready for trial on the 27th inst., and Judge Knapp set down its commencement for that day.

District Attorney McGill, still holding the indictment in his hand, paced uneasily up and down the court-room. Half a dozen months after Bennett had been removed, the portly form of Deputy Sheriff Peel, with the widow by his side, entered the door. Mrs. Smith was dressed in unrelieved black, and a black veil served to partly conceal her features. She walked with an easy, unconstrained air to the bar inclosure, and took a seat on a chair near the entrance-gate. She looked plump and almost stout, and there was no sign of nervousness or emotion upon her face. She stood with one foot forward when District Attorney McGill directed her to rise, and she answered "Not guilty" in a pleasant, almost cheerful voice, when the substance of the indictment had been read to her. Judge Knapp said that her trial would also begin on the 27th inst., and Mrs. Smith was taken back to jail.

It is said that District Attorney McGill will enter a nolle prosequi upon the first indictment found against Mrs. Smith.

THE BEILSTEIN DIVORCE SUIT.

In the suit of Dorothea Beilstein against Martin Beilstein for divorce, on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment, counsel for plaintiff moved before Judge Gilbert, in Brooklyn, yesterday, to strike out a portion of the defendant's answer charging that his wife served a term in prison in Germany before her marriage, for grand larceny, and that she was a habitual drunkard. Counsel for the defendant claimed that the portion of his client's answer referred to was necessary in order to show cause for cruel treatment, if any such treatment were proved. Judge Gilbert granted the motion to strike out, reserving that the incidents of the plaintiff's life previous to her marriage could not enter into the case, and that if she were a drunkard, as alleged, it was the duty of a good husband to try and reform her rather than to treat her cruelly.

A GREAT DRY GOODS FIRE.

A CONFLAGRATION IN THE HEART OF THE DISTRICT.

LOSSES ESTIMATED AT NEARLY $2,500,000—ONE BUILDING DESTROYED AND OTHERS DAMAGED—A HARD FIGHT FOR THE FIREMEN—A BRILLIANT SPECTACLE AND CROWDS TO WITNESS IT.

A fire in the very heart of the dry goods district last night threatened at one time to become one of the most disastrous conflagrations that has occurred in this City for many years. The efforts of the firemen, the thickness of the walls of the buildings attacked, and the absence of much wind, combined to prevent a very extended spread of the flames. The building, comprising Nos. 62 and 64 Worth-street, and Nos. 70 and 72 Thomas-street, were entirely destroyed. The adjoining buildings on each side, on both streets, were almost destroyed. Other adjacent structures suffered less serious injury from smoke and water. The loss upon buildings and contents is estimated at between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000. A curious incident of the fire is that its discovery was caused by the squeaking of the terrified rats. An unusually large crowd of spectators was drawn to the scene of the fire, the flames being visible at a great distance.

RISE AND PROGRESS OF THE FLAMES.

BRILLIANT SCENES AS THE FIRE SPREAD FROM ONE BUILDING TO ANOTHER—CROWDS GATHERING ABOUT THE BURNING STRUCTURES—THE ALARM GIVEN BY RATS—THE FIRE AS SEEN FROM A DISTANCE.

A great fire broke out last evening in the row of handsome iron and brick warehouses erected upon the site formerly occupied by the old stone building of the New-York Hospital, bounded by Broadway and Church streets and Worth and Thomas streets. Before the flames were extinguished they had totally destroyed the double building Nos. 62 and 64 Worth-street, running through to Nos. 70 and 72 Thomas-street; the double building Nos. 58 and 60 Worth-street, and Nos. 66 and 68 Thomas-street, was greatly damaged, with Nos. 74 and 76 and 62 and 64 Thomas-street, which run half-way through to Worth-street. The fire originated on the premises of Van Volkenburgh & Leavitt, who occupied Nos. 62 and 64 Worth-street, extending through to Thomas-street, and was first discovered about 7:50 P. M., an alarm being sent out at 7:52 P. M. The fire had evidently been burning some time before it was discovered, and in a very few seconds gained great headway. When the fire-engines arrived in response to the call, the flames had already reached the roof, and were raging with great fury. Alarms were sent out in rapid succession, summoning the full reserve force to the spot; but before the earliest engines had got into working order, an operation requiring only a few minutes, a great body of flame burst from the roof, its appearance indicating that one building at least was doomed beyond a doubt.

As the glowing tongues of fire leaped upward amid a cloud of sparks, they filled the air with a great flood of brilliant red light that was seen for miles away, its reflection being plainly visible across the Hudson and Harlem Rivers, and drawing great crowds of spectators to the scene. Elevated railway cars, ferry-boats, street cars, and carriages—every means of transportation were brought into requisition to convey people to the spot. After the first quarter hour, fully 10,000 people had gathered in the vicinity of the burning buildings, but still spectators flocked to the scene by the thousands, and although the task of gaining a good view of the flames was an utter impossibility, they stood gazing at the clouds of smoke and red glare that illuminated the sky.

The fire was constantly gaining an alarming headway, which, had the wind been blowing briskly at the time, would certainly have caused a vast conflagration. The breeze very fortunately was light, and the engines poured streams of water upon the buildings from every available spot. This flood of water seemingly did little toward abating the fury of the fire, and within 20 minutes of the discovery of the fire, the entire building was burned out from Worth-street to Thomas-street. The floors and beams fell in with a crash, the entire store being lighted up a moment later with a flood of flames, against which its blackened front, with its arched windows, stood out in bold outline, and a great cloud of blazing sparks shot into the air, the whole forming a magnificent spectacle. The partition wall between this and the adjoining building, Nos. 58 and 60, suddenly fell in, and the flames sprang into the still uninjured building, instantly setting fire to the pine flooring and the ceiling of the top story.

A scene of great activity followed. Firemen, armed with axes, attacked the doors of buildings on the other side of the street, and, bursting them open, dragged hose to the roofs and directed streams of water upon the building last attacked by the flames. The doors of H. B. Claflin & Co.'s great store were opened to the firemen, and from the roof of this building floods of water were poured upon the fire. Lanterns glittered from the roofs of other stores, marking the presence of other firemen, ready to prevent the fire from crossing the street. The fronts of the buildings on Thomas and Worth streets began to smoke, however, and water was thrown directly upon them, and was dashed off in clouds of spray and steam. Meantime, the flames had been making rapid progress in Nos. 58 and 60. Suddenly the copper coping, which had glittered with a brilliant green hue in the midst of the flames and sparks, fell with a loud report to the pavement and broke, like some great pyrotechnic piece, in a myriad of glowing emerald stars. It was a beautiful spectacle, but, as in the case of the falling of the interior of the first building, was only the forewarning of the entire destruction of another of the warehouses.

A blazing beam, falling through the hatchway with a reverberating echo, opened a way for the flames, and, followed in their course by breaking timbers and shivered plate-glass, they quickly worked their way downward, floor by floor, until they reached the ground floor. Then beams and flooring fell, as in the building first destroyed, and then another grandly-beautiful scene was suddenly presented to the spectators. The frame-work of the windows blazed with white light, and within the flames burned with a hue of bright crimson, which soon disappeared in a cloud of steam and dense smoke that for a time threw a partial darkness over the entire scene. The obscuration lasted only a moment, however, and then the ruins of the two destroyed buildings rose black against the glowing flames.

The second building ruined, there was now only the corner building, Nos. 54 and 56, to protect Claflin's warehouse, and the roof of this building was now fringed with a narrow cloud of smoke that rushed downward and along the roof as though some current of air were drawing into the building. Firemen rushed quickly into Claflin's building and, with additional lines of hose, poured water upon the roof of the corner warehouse. Although its floors were of wood, as in the other building, a thick partition wall of brick rose above the roof, and by constantly pouring water through the flames upon it, the firemen were able to keep the fire on Worth-street under comparative control. By this means, with the aid of a number of streams directed from the third stories of warehouses on Thomas-street, with a similar purpose, the building was saved, and stood, throughout the night, a perfect barrier against damage to Claflin's store.

But, though baffled here, the flames swept quickly over the partition walls of Nos. 62 and 64 Worth-street, and reached the roof of Nos. 66 and 68, which at once became ignited. It burned a long time without apparently making much progress, but soon the cornice fell and dashed itself upon the pavement, breaking into a shower of brilliant green sparks, and the fire began to eat its way downward slowly, the efforts of the firemen being directed to preventing, not so much the destruction of the building, which was a foregone conclusion, as the spreading of the flames to the premises Nos. 68 and 73 Worth-street. In this undertaking they were successful, and though floor after floor caught fire, burned, and fell, leaving the burning beams glowing like the grates of a great furnace, the interior, as far as the partition wall that divided the premises from Nos. 74 and 76 Thomas-street, was totally destroyed, and the flames exhausted themselves without doing damage to the adjoining building the firemen were trying to save.

On Thomas-street the flames from Van Volkenburgh & Leavitt's store caught the roof of the adjoining building, Nos. 66 and 68, the top floor of which was occupied by a dealer in Government goods, as was indicated by a large wire-work sign. This was soon shining out brightly against the flames that were rapidly pursuing their destructive course toward the bottom of the building. Before they were brought under control they had destroyed the three upper floors. The effort to subdue them was a desperate one, and before they had abated their fury great damage had been inflicted by water upon the premises Nos. 62 and 64, and Nos. 74 and 76 Thomas-street. The reflection of the flames upon the plate-glass windows of Claflin's establishment produced a mirage so perfect that it seemed as if flames were really destroying its interior. Many who pushed their way down Church-street, which was filled with a dense fog of smoke and steam that rendered walking the most difficult of tasks, were so deceived by the spectacle that they hurried to firemen to assure themselves that the great building was not really afire.

At 10 o'clock the flames, although they still brilliantly illuminated the ruins and raged with unremitted fury among the débris that had fallen through to the cellars, were declared to be under control. The greater number of the spectators, however, lingered about the scene with an undiminished interest, and crowded about the snorting and trembling engines. Those who fancied they had seen enough of the spectacle, and started out with the intention of returning home, found themselves brought face to face with a startling dilemma. The water had completely flooded the gutters, and changed the snow into slush. The sidewalks, too, were glazed with a thin crust of ice, from which they frequently slipped into and sat suddenly down in the midst of the slush. To get away from the scene, all were compelled to wade through small lakes of chilling water and slush, and rather than attempt the uninviting task thousands lingered with the hope that the street-cleaners, who were called out to render the streets fit for walking, would reach that part of the City soon. The ruins were still ablaze and the engines still hard at work trying to subdue the flames at a late hour.

It seemed only a few minutes after the fire had broken out that the flames rose high enough to light up the whole lower part of the City. At first a long column of smoke with a base of fire appeared, when viewed from a distance, to rise through the roof of the burning building and mount slowly upward. Thousands of sparks danced through the heavy masses of smoke which floated off with the light breeze blowing from the north-east; and here and there large flakes of fire, thrown off by the burning mass below, rose high into the air.

This appearance of the fire continued for about 10 minutes; then the flame disappeared, and only clouds of white and gray smoke arose, so that it appeared as if the firemen were obtaining control of the flames. But only for a moment, for the flames shot up again from two sides at once, showing that they had found new outlets or fresh material, and gathered fury every second. Suddenly a distant rumbling and crashing sound was heard, and in the same instant an immense mass of fire and smoke was thrown up, while two great volumes of flame leaped clear of the mass below, as if ejected from a crater. Their sudden glare flashed into momentary relief every parapet and pinnacle for a mile around, and the shout of the thousands of spectators greeting this terrific display came like the roar of breaking waves. After this, the fire evidently continued to grow in size and intensity. Masses of bright flame rose so high as to be plainly visible from a long distance; volume after volume of smoke rolled up in rapid succession; the inky sky was lit up with the bright glare; a fiery cloud seemed to hang above the conflagration; the towers, the snow-covered roofs, the gables, and iron traceries of the thousands of buildings of the part of the City in which the burning building was situated, seemed to come out more clearly into view as the fire progressed in intensity.

As the floors successively fell in, the same loud crash, followed in an instant by the volcano-like ejection of flame and smoke, marked the gradual progress toward the exhaustion of material for the flames to feed upon; but for a long time before this point was reached, the burning building resembled a vast furnace, so fiercely yet so steadily did the fire burn.

The fire was discovered by A. J. Rollé, bookkeeper of the firm of Walkinshaw & Voigt, who occupied the ground and first floors of No. 64 Worth-street. Mr. Rollé was detained beyond the usual hour of closing the office. The building is deserted generally by 7 o'clock, and Mr. Rollé said to a TIMES reporter last night that he was probably the only person, with the exception of the porter of his firm, remaining in it when the fire broke out. He was in the office, which was on the second floor, at about 7:45 o'clock, and was arranging some papers preparatory to locking them in the safe, when his attention was attracted by the squealing of rats. This sound was not unusual, but the loudness of it, and its increase, as if the rats were flying in terror from the upper walls, so impressed him that he called the porter, and leaving him in charge of the office, ran down stairs in search of an officer. As Mr. Rollé passed out of the Worth-street entrance, he heard the crackle of glass, and looking up saw flames bursting from the windows of the third floor, directly over his employers' store. He immediately shouted "Fire!" and an alarm was speedily given.

The upper part of the building, Mr. Rollé said, seemed to be all ablaze within five minutes from the time he first saw the flames. It was his opinion that the fire had been gaining headway for half an hour before the rats gave him warning. The third floor, where the fire began, was occupied by Van Volkenburgh & Leavitt, importers, who had a large stock of light and inflammable goods. Mr. Rollé scarcely had time to rush back to the office, gather up some papers, and look the safe, before the flames had communicated, by means of the elevator shaft, to the second floor. The spread of the fire continued to be exceedingly rapid, and within half an hour Mr. Rollé saw the building No. 62 and 64 Worth-street completely destroyed.

THE STORY OF THE FIRE.

How the fire originated is a mystery. The first alarm was given by the automatic signal, and was conveyed to the quarters of the Lower Insurance Patrol in Murray-street, reaching there at 7:45 P. M. A section of the patrol under command of Assistant Capt. Lacour immediately responded. When they arrived in front of the building the flames were shooting out of the third story of the store, No. 62 Worth-street. No fire apparatus had arrived at this time, and Capt. Lacour, finding that no alarm had been sounded, sent one of his men to the alarm-box at Broadway and Thomas-street to send out the alarm. In a few minutes Engine Company No. 31 appeared on the scene, and was quickly followed by Engine No. 7 and Hook and Ladder No. 1. Foreman Frank Riley of the latter company, who is in charge of the First Battalion in the absence Chief Rowe, who was injured at the Vessey-street fire, came on the ground and at once ordered a third alarm to be sounded. Meanwhile the Fire Insurance Patrol and the firemen had entered the burning building. The patrol began to cover up the goods with their water-proof covers, but were soon compelled to beat a retreat, as the flames spread so rapidly that they had to fly for their lives. They abandoned a number of their covers, which were destroyed. In the absence of Chief Bates, who is out of the City, Assistant Chief Shay took charge of the force of the Fire Department which the repeated alarms brought to the scene of the conflagration. In his arduous duties he was assisted by Chiefs King, Bonner, Acting Chief Riley, Chiefs Gicquel, Rhodes, Miller, Fisher, and Campbell. As engine after engine arrived they were stationed as the numerous hydrants which abound in the district, the hose was quickly stretched, and in a very short time a number of powerful streams of water were brought to bear on the rapidly increasing flames.

The firemen fought the flames inch by inch, but for a long time their efforts appeared to make no impression. From the roofs of the adjoining building immense volumes of water were poured on the burning structures. Before long it was apparent that the building Nos. 60 and 62 Worth-street was doomed to destruction, and the efforts of the firemen were directed to secure the safety of the surrounding buildings, which, filled with valuable stocks of goods, were in great danger. The flames had eaten their way through to the buildings Nos. 70 and 72 Thomas-street, and it was feared that if they crossed the street, which at this point is not over 30 feet wide, and is lined on both sides with five and six story buildings, the Fire Department would be powerless to prevent the laying in waste of the entire dry goods district. A determined stand was made at this point by the firemen, and at one time there were six streams of water from the street and from the windows and roofs of the opposite building playing upon the flames. The adjoining buildings were protected by streams of water on their roofs.

The extension of the flames westward was checked by four streams from the roof of Claflin & Co.'s immense warehouse, which were kept playing on the roof of the buildings running along Church-street and fronting on both Thomas and Worth streets. Two of these streams were furnished from the store, under direction of the employes of the firm, who are organized into a fire brigade, and are well drilled and disciplined.

The upper stories of the building Nos. 66 and 68 Thomas-street took fire from the adjoining buildings, and the flames would have been checked before they had made much progress but for the fact that the fire dropped through the elevator shaft from the top story to the sub-cellar. The firemen were then compelled to force open the lower doors of the structure, and to direct two of the streams into the cellar to extinguish the flames, which were gaining headway, and threatened the complete destruction of the building. In this way as much damage was done by water as by fire in this building.

By 11 o'clock the fire was under control, but it was midnight before any of the reserves were sent back to their quarters. A number of steamers and a large force of firemen remained at the fire cooling off the ruins and to guard against a fresh outbreak of the fire. Too much praise cannot be awarded the members of the Fire Department for the determined and gallant fight they made against odds which at one time threatened to overpower and render their well-directed efforts worthless. From the highest officer to the lowest private, all behaved well. The discipline displayed was admirable. Orders given were quickly obeyed, and the conduct of the firemen challenged the admiration of all who witnessed their noble efforts to stay the progress of the fire. It must be remembered that the fire had gained great headway before the alarm was given, the streets through which the heavy engines were to be hauled were rendered almost impassable by the accumulated snow, and the engines were greatly delayed in consequence. Notwithstanding these disadvantages, the fire, which at one time threatened to devastate the dry goods district, was checked in its progress in time to prevent the most disastrous conflagration which has menaced this City for years. During the progress of the fire, Commissioners King, Gorman, and Perley were present and assisted and encouraged the firemen in their arduous task.

THE LOSSES.

The district in which the fire took place is that in which are crowded together the offices and stores of the largest dry goods commission-dealers and importers in the City, and among the principal of these were the firms who were burned out, or had their stocks damaged by fire, smoke, and water. Notwithstanding the commission character of their business, almost every one of these firms carried a stock valued at more than $250,000. Several of them are agents of foreign manufacturers, and are known in France and Germany; and the domestic commission houses control the products of some of the largest print-works and woollen goods mills of this country. The principal losers are the firms of Van Volkenburgh & Leavitt, Walkinshaw & Voigt, Forstmann & Co., Schnabel Brothers, and H. W. T. Mall & Co.

The building in which the fire originated was occupied by Van Volkenburgh & Leavitt, Walkinshaw & Voigt, and Nouss & Henlein. The first-named firm is in the dry goods commission trade. They occupied the first floor, cellar, and sub-cellar, in which they had a stock valued at about $500,000. This stock is totally destroyed. Mr. Leavitt said last night that they were insured fully, but he could not tell the companies holding risks nor the amount of insurance.

Walkinshaw & Voigt occupied the second floor on Worth-street, and all the lofts above the first floor on Thomas-street. They are importers of foreign-made woolen goods, and had a stock valued at $400,000, not a dollar's worth of which was saved. They are insured for $442,000, distributed as follows: Imperial, $25,000; Northern, $25,000; Liverpool, $20,000; Globe, $20,000, and 78 other insurance companies of this and other cities, and of foreign countries.

Nouss & Henlein, who occupied the third and fourth floors of Nos. 62 and 64 Worth-street, and in whose apartments the fire originated, are importers of laces and tailors' trimmings. Their stock was worth about $75,000. It was completely destroyed.

The building Nos. 58 and 60 Worth-street, which was destroyed, was occupied by two firms. B. H. Smith & Co. and Chapman & Martin had the first floor, cellar, and sub-cellar, both firms being engaged in the commission trade, and carrying a joint stock of about $250,000. They suffer a loss of about $150,000 by smoke and water, their goods being soaked through and through.

Forstmann & Co. occupied the upper part of the building. They are among the largest importers of French cloths in the United States, and are the agents for the sale of the F. & H. (Forstmann & Hoffman) cloths and doeskins made at Aix la Chapelle, France. They had a stock of $300,000, which is ruined—that which is not burned being made worthless by water.

The building Nos. 66 and 68 Worth-street was occupied by three firms. The ground floor and cellars were occupied by John Slade & Co., doing a commission business in domestic goods. They carried a stock of $200,000, and suffer a loss of half that amount.

Schnabel Brothers, importers of foreign woolen goods, and among the principal dealers in castors, cloths, and doeskins, occupied the second floor, and had a stock valued at $350,000, upon which there is a total loss.

Henry W. T. Mall & Co., also importers of woolen goods, had a stock of $100,000, which is destroyed.

Nos. 56 and 58 Worth-street were occupied on the ground floor and cellars by James F. White & Co., importers of Irish linens, and on the second floor by R. H. White & Co., dealers in French silks and shawls. James F. White & Co.'s stock was worth $100,000, and is badly damaged by water.

R. H. White & Co.'s stock, worth about $25,000, was also damaged by water.

Nos. 62 and 64 Thomas-street, corner of Church-street, is occupied by the offices of buyers for out-of-town houses. It is damaged by water.

The occupants of Nos. 66 and 68 Thomas-street were: William Simpson's Sons & Co., first floor and basements; Nonotuck Silk Company and Florence Manufacturing Company on second floor; Neustaedter & Brothers, third and fourth floors; John S. Holden's storage rooms for Government supplies, on upper floors.

William Simpson's Sons & Co. are manufacturers of cotton print goods. Their stock, valued at $60,000, is almost completely ruined by water.

Neustaedter Brothers are manufacturers of men's furnishing goods. Their stock, worth $20,000, is also ruined by water.

The loss of the Monotuck Mill will be very large on a stock of $125,000.

Nos. 70 and 72 Thomas-street were totally destroyed, only the iron front being left standing. The building was occupied by Van Volkenburgh & Leavitt, Walkinshaw & Voigt, and Nouss & Henlein, whose losses are above stated.

Upham, Tucker & Co. occupied the ground, second, and third floors, and the cellars of Nos. 74 and 76 Thomas-street. Their stock of print goods, valued at $150,000, was damaged to the amount of about $20,000 by water and smoke. The upper floors of the building were vacant, the large clothing-house of Elfeldt, Levy & Co. having recently moved out.

The buildings destroyed, and all but one of those damaged, were owned by the Manhattan Real Estate Company. The single exception is the building at Worth and Church streets which is the property of James F. White, who occupies part of it. The buildings were on leased ground, and are estimated to be worth $150,000 each. Those destroyed and most damaged have rented for $15,000 each annually.

The following is a recapitulation of the losses:

THE FIRE DEPARTMENT AND POLICE.

While the fire was at its height 26 engines, more than half the entire number in the City, were throwing powerful streams of water upon the burning buildings, through long lines of hose. Nine hook and ladder companies were also in attendance. The engines were summoned to the fire by two alarms, several special calls, and a "simultaneous call." The first alarm was sounded at 7:52 o'clock, and brought to the spot Engines Nos. 31, 7, and 27, and Hook and Ladder Companies Nos. 1 and 8. A third alarm, bringing out all those companies which would have responded to both a second and third call, was sounded at 8:07, and in response to the call Engines Nos. 12, 29, 9, 6, 4, 13, 20, and 32, and Hook and Ladder Trucks Nos. 9, 10, and 6 hurried to the fire. Two minutes later the "simultaneous" call was sent out, bringing Engines Nos. 14, 5, 33, 18, 25, 16, 28, 1, 3, 13, and 20, and Hook and Ladder Companies Nos. 3, 12, 7, and 5. Special calls were sent out at different times for Engines Nos. 11, 24, 15, and 30. At 8:35 o'clock the officials at the gate-house of the Central Park Reservoir were warned by the "water-pressure call" to turn on a full pressure in the water-mains, and in a few moments the increased power and force of the streams drenching the burning buildings showed that the warning had been heeded. The large number of engines called to the fire left the City without any preparation for other fires south of Fourteenth-street, and in order to be prepared for any additional demands upon the force, the places of several of the down-town engines were filled by engines from those up-town districts in which no fire was likely to occur.

The Police arrangements were taken in charge by Inspector Dilks, who was early on the ground, with Sergts. Grant and Sattle, of his staff. About 150 policemen were on duty. These were made up of detachments from the Twenty-seventh, Eighth, Fifteenth, and Ninth precincts, and the full reserve force of the Fifth, under Capt. Eakins, in whose precinct the fire occurred. The Police formed a fire-line extending from Broadway through Duane-street, to West Broadway, to Leonard, to Broadway, to Duane. The crowds surged against the patient Police in foolish attempts to get nearer the fire and into greater danger, but they could not break the fire-line. At midnight about 100 of the Police were relieved, leaving the remainder to guard the adjacent property, and keep curious people from getting into the firemen's way.

A FIRE IN THE NEW CAPITOL.

CONSIDERABLE EXCITEMENT, BUT ONLY A SLIGHT DAMAGE TO THE BUILDING.

ALBANY, Jan. 17.—At half an hour after midnight there was a fire in the new Capitol, which has created some excitement, but has, fortunately, resulted in very little damage. A man standing at the corner of Eagle and State streets, saw a bright light at the top of the building near the eastern end, and in the unfinished part of the edifice. He rang an alarm from box 39, and there was a rush of engines and men to the spot. The firemen gained an entrance to the building, and for half an hour made ineffectual efforts to reach the point where the fire was burning. Finally, four or five men groped their way along a ladder through deep snow to a derrick platform, where it was found that the fire was burning about a small furnace, which has been kept going to prevent a hoisting-engine from freezing. About 50 of the firemen kept up their search for an exit from the finished part of the Capitol for half an hour, groping about with lanterns, and finally gave up their tramp when the fire was reported subdued by the Chief Engineer. The fire could not easily have extended beyond the point where it originated, but at one time it was feared that it might consume the temporary roofing over the eastern end of the building. The extent of the damage cannot be ascertained to-night, but it is probably slight. The street in front of the Capitol was thronged for an hour with an excited crowd, most of the people being impressed with the idea that a great fire was raging inside the building.

OTHER LOSSES BY FIRE.

The Keithfield Rice Mills, on Black River, Georgetown County, S. C., were burned on Wednesday. The mills are a total loss, and were valued at $36,000. They were owned by Robert Adger, of Charleston. The insurance is only $10,000 in the following companies: Springfield, Mass., $2,000; British American, of Toronto, $2,000; City Fire Insurance Company, of Richmond, Va., $1,500; Virginia State, of Richmond, $2,000; Manhattan, of New-York, $2,000. A portion of the rice destroyed was insured for $4,000, equally divided between the Philadelphia Fire Association and Commercial Union, of London.

The dwelling of Dr. Arthur Kemble, at Salem, Mass., with its contents, including a valuable library and works of art, was burned yesterday morning, involving a loss of $12,000.

The store of Theodore Viol, at Belle Plain, Minn., was destroyed by fire yesterday. The loss is estimated at from $10,000 to $12,000, on which there is an insurance of $9,500.

A fire at Grundy Centre, Iowa, yesterday morning, destroyed eight business houses, including two banks and the Post Office. The loss is estimated at $40,000.

MISUSING CHARITABLE FUNDS.

CHARLES DEMOND, THE TREASURER OF THE MASSACHUSETTS HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY, A DEFAULTER.

BOSTON, Jan. 17.—Another case of malfeasance in office is reported here, and from an unexpected quarter. The Treasurer of the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society, Mr. Charles Demond, who has held office for a long time, and was intrusted with the control of large sums of money from time to time, the fullest confidence being placed in his judgment and integrity, has been removed by the Executive Committee of the society, and the following card sent out to the public:

MASSACHUSETTS HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Executive Committee of the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society feel it their duty to announce that they required the resignation of their late Treasurer, Charles Demond, on account of recently discovered malfeasance in his office by an unauthorized disposal or use of the invested funds of the society. They trust that his past occupancy of their treasurership will not be considered any indorsement of his acts.

By vote of the Executive Committee,
W. BARROWS, Secretary.

The Home Missionary Society is a Congregational institution auxiliary to the American Home Missionary Society, and its objects are to facilitate the organization of orthodox Congregational Churches and congregations and to assist feeble congregations and churches in this State. It depends for support on the voluntary offerings of the different churches in the State, and last year it received $58,495 67 from donations, besides $10,113 22 in legacies. As a rule, the legacies received from year to year are invested and only the income is used for the objects of the society. These legacies have been gradually accumulating for years until, at present, the amount of invested funds is quite large. Mr. Demond, who is in the possession of the Treasurer, though the Executive Committee alone has the authority to invest them. Mr. Demond, it is stated, has been speculating quite largely in real estate in the West, and it is reported that, without the knowledge of the Executive Committee, he has sold the securities of the society and invested the proceeds in Western lands, presumably for the sake of the commissions he would receive on such investments. The property has all been placed in the hands of the society, but its value is regarded as very doubtful, the general impression being that a considerable loss was incurred by the reinvestment. The Executive Committee is investigating the matter, and, until it finishes its labors, it will be impossible to say just how the society stands. The members are very reticent at present. The Secretary who signs the above card says there is no evidence that Mr. Demond profited at all by the reinvestment of the funds. The amount at risk in Demond's transactions is stated to be from $50,000 to $100,000.

Mr. Demond says his whole difficulty grew out of a loan of $5,000 to a hard-pressed young publisher here on real estate securities which proved to be of little value. He found it necessary to "nurse" the property thus received, and continued to invest the society's funds in the hope of saving it until he had raised from $60,000 to $80,000. By the direction of the society he invested about $30,000 in Chicago mortgages some time ago. Of this, $15,000 were on a building loan which his Chicago agent thought was a profitable investment. The contractor who was to erect the buildings with this sum died before the work was completed, leaving matters in a bad condition. He [Demond] then changed $9,000 of the building loan to a loan on building lots, and his agent went on and finished the buildings. On the loan on these lots he received no commission, but on the original $15,000 he did get a commission, and the Finance Committee knew of it. Mr. Demond further states that it was the custom of his predecessor to invest the society's funds without consultation with the Finance Committee, and he had acted according to that precedent.

THE JAMES RIVER ICE-GORGE.

RICHMOND, Jan. 17.—The New-York steamship Wyanoke, which left Richmond four days ago to force her way through the ice-gorge, has now got nearly to the Dutch Gap Canal, and is making slow but steady progress. Attempts to break the gorge with nitro-glycerine failed. The United States steamer Fortune left Norfolk to-day to make her way up the James River to Lower Brandon, to provision the iron-clad fleet at that place.

EVIDENTLY PROUD OF HIS CRIMES.

OMAHA, Neb., Jan. 17.—Richards, the Kearney murderer, sentenced to be hanged on April 26, is now confined in the State Penitentiary. He confesses three more murders, in general, in addition to the six known to have been committed. He says he has sold his body to the Medical College, provided the institution furnishes him with comforts and luxuries until death. He holds his full written confession for sale to the newspaper which will bid highest.

CHIEF JOSEPH AS A LECTURER.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—A regular Indian powwow was held in Lincoln Hall this evening, and was very largely attended. The platform was occupied by Indians, among whom were Chief Joseph and Yellow Bull, of the Nez Percés tribe; Colorado Petro and four companions, of the Ute tribe, all gorgeously attired in rainbow-hued blankets; and a number of representatives of the Cherokee, Creek, and Choctaw tribes. Mr. A. B. Meacham stated at the commencement of the proceedings that the object of the meeting was so give the red man an opportunity of speaking for himself as to his rights and liberties. He introduced Chief Joseph as one of the grandest warriors who had ever lived. Chief Joseph gathered up his blanket and walked slowly to the table. Then he helped himself to a glass of water and began his address, speaking in the Nez Percés tongue, Mr. Arthur I. Chapman acting as interpreter. He has an excellent voice, and spoke with confidence, using a natural and easy gesticulation, and appearing as though insensible that his language was utterly unintelligible to his listeners. The story of the recent Nez Percés war was modestly told in picturesque language, and the recital of the many treaties that had been made and immediately broken by the white men, several times elicited cries of "shame." Col. Adair, of the Cherokees, Col. Porter, of the Creeks, and Colorado Petro also spoke.

THE INVASION OF AFGHANISTAN.

KANDAHAR OCCUPIED BY THE BRITISH WITHOUT A SHOT BEING FIRED—ANARCHY PREVAILING AT KABUL—DISORGANIZATION OF THE AFGHAN ARMY.

LONDON, Jan. 17.—A telegram from Kandahar, dated on the 8th of January, says: "The sun is setting, and the last troops of the advance of Gen. Stewart's and Gen. Biddulph's forces have filed out of the Kabul gate of Kandahar. Crowds of people are lining the streets and covering the roofs to witness the magnificent procession of men and horses, all looking, however, in hard-working condition. Not a shot was fired, nor did any contretemps of any kind occur prior to entering the city. We have captured the post arriving from Herat for Mir Afzul, late Governor of Ghuznel, and Kheiat-i-Ghilzai is reported to be without a garrison. It is reported that anarchy prevails at Kabul."

[Kandahar, an account of the capture of which is given in the above dispatch, is the principal city of the province of the same name, and was formerly the capital of all Afghanistan. It is situated in a barren, mountainous region, 280 miles south-east of Herat, and 275 miles south-west of Kabul. The seat of government was transferred to the latter city from Kandahar in 1774. Kandahar is well laid out, the streets run at right angles, and the four principal ones, which are very wide, meet in the centre of the city. The Urghundaub River is near the city, and channels of river water run through the more important streets. It was once before occupied by the British, namely, in 1839, but they soon abandoned it. In 1854 Dost Mohammed, of Kabul, recovered it, and in 1858 it fell into the hands of Yakoob Khan. It is a fortified city, has a population of upward of 30,000, and is of much political importance, as well as a strategical point of no mean significance.]

CALCUTTA, Jan. 16.—An official dispatch says that the Khelzai chiefs attempted to create a disturbance and plunder Kabul, but Yakoob Khan induced them to withdraw. The Ghilzai chiefs are urging Yakoob Khan to make friends with the British. Afghan deserters confirm the reports of the disorganization of their Army. There had been slight marauding disturbances in the Kojuk Pass, but the marauders were punished.

TIDINGS OF MARINE DISASTER.

THE BARK ITALIA AND THE SCHOONER CUBA TO BECOME TOTAL WRECKS — OTHER LOSSES ON THE OCEAN.

LONG BRANCH, Jan. 17.—The two vessels which came ashore in yesterday's snow-storm—the schooner Cuba at Long Beach and the bark Italia at Deal Beach—will prove total wrecks. Hopes were entertained that the Cuba, with her cargo of molasses, could be saved, as she was a stanch vessel. But the wind to-night from the eastward has thrown her on her side, and it is feared that she is leaking. Her cargo is consigned to Scammell Brothers, of New-York. The crew of Life-saving Station No. 20 safely landed Capt. Hutchinson and his crew, and took care of them until to-night, when they departed for New-York.

The Coast Wrecking Company's men, with the patrol of Station No. 6, boarded the Italian bark Italia this morning, and saved the effects and clothing of her crew. The Captain's effects could not be reached, as the cabin was submerged. They found all the stanchions and ribs of the vessel broken away, and the deck in a shaky condition. The vessel careens so much on her side to the leeward that her keel can be seen from the beach. There is nearly 12 feet of water in her hold, and it is feared that she is embedded so deep in the sand, over a ledge of rock, that she is broken in two. Yesterday the coast wrecking men were confident that, with the use of steam pumps, they could lift her and get her off the beach, but to-night they have given up all hopes of saving her. Messrs. Bezan & Boisen, the agents of the Mutual Marine Insurance Company of Genoa, of Italy, in which company the Italia is insured, say that their risk is for $24,000, the vessel's value being $35,000. The ship wrecked sailors of the Italia, 14 men, are yet at the Life-saving Station. The agents of the owner of the vessel have made no provision for them, and they are almost starved, the station men having no means or way of obtaining food enough for them. What they have to eat is sent by the wives of the station men and the neighboring farmers. The Captain and owner's agent have comfortable quarters at the hotel.

BOSTON, Jan. 17.—The schooner Kate, from Boston for Dennis, went ashore last night on Marshfield Beach. One of the crew was lost overboard.

ST. JOHN, New-Brunswick, Jan. 17.—A special cable dispatch announces the total loss of the brig Rock, Capt. Wright, from Troon for Matanzas, with coal.

LONDON, Jan. 17.—The American brig Don Quixote, Capt. York, last reported at anchor north of the island of Arran in distress, having lost her master, mate, and two men.

The British brig J. W. Beard, Capt. Robinson, from New-York, Nov. 29, for Bayonne, last reported in distress Jan. 15, in Loco Roads, went ashore at Saint Jean de Luz to-day, and is expected to become a total wreck. Her crew was saved.

The bark Isolina was abandoned off Fastnet on Jan. 13. The crew has landed at Liverpool.

THE FREE SHIPPING BILL.

ARGUMENTS FOR AND AGAINST THE MEASURE BEFORE THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE—NO PROSPECT THAT THE NAVIGATION LAWS WILL BE CHANGED AT THIS SESSION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—On Tuesday last, Senator Butler, of South Carolina, introduced a resolution in the Senate, asking the Secretary of the Interior by what authority the Southern Pacific Railroad was constructing its line through the Territory of Arizona. The Secretary of the Interior to-day sent to the Senate a letter stating that on Nov. 12, 1878, "the Southern Pacific Railroad of Arizona," by its Vice-President, filed a map of its route in the Land Office at Florence, Arizona, and that on the 14th of the same month, the Southern Pacific Railroad filed a map of its route in the same office, which was identical with that of the first-named road. These maps and papers were filed under a general statute granting right of way over the public domain to railroads that shall file in the General Land Office a map of the proposed route, together with their articles of incorporation. Whether or not the law was strictly complied with in the first instance does not appear, but it does appear from the accompanying papers that the Secretary's letter that the day after the resolution was introduced, Mr. C. P. Huntingdon, who signs himself, "Agent and Attorney for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company," filed in the Interior Department another map of the route of the Southern Pacific Railroad. It is still a disputed question whether the road has not complied with the laws, and is therefore constructing its road without authority.

ST. MARTIN'S STORY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—The publication of St. Martin's statement of the doings of the Stenger sub-committee at New-Orleans attracted general attention here to-day, and must result in some of the persons implicated calling that gentleman to the stand. Mr. Gibson said, when spoken to about the statements made by St. Martin affecting him, that they are wholly without truth; that in due time he will demonstrate this to the satisfaction of all fair-minded men. Had he been managing the Potter committee, as it is alleged he has been doing, he would have long since disposed of St. Martin and his manifold perjuries; but, inasmuch as a member of the committee has been attacked, he has been constrained to say nothing until Mr. Stenger and the Democratic members of the committee have decided upon their course.

TRYING TO FORCE AN EXTRA SESSION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—Evidence is increasing tending to show that it is the purpose of the Democrats to force an extra session of Congress. No settled plan seems as yet to have been agreed upon to bring this about, but there is reason to believe that the plan now contemplated is to insert certain legislation of a political character in one of the important appropriation bills, to which the Republicans will not assent. It is considered significant that the House Committee on Appropriations has not reported a single appropriation bill, since the holiday recess, although it was announced three weeks ago that the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial bill was ready to report.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17, 1879.

The subscriptions to the 4 per cent. loan to-day amounted to $2,148,500.

The receipts from internal revenue to-day were $387,190, and from Customs, $423,704 49.

A member of the Ways and Means Committee is authority for the statement that another call for reports from the committee will be made early in February. This will afford an opportunity of discussing of the sugar question at the present session of Congress.

The House Census Committee met this morning, and appointed a sub-committee to confer with a similar sub-committee of the Senate, with a view to deciding jointly on a bill to be reported favorably upon by the respective committees, thereby avoiding to some extent the possibility of prolonged controversy when the measure is reached for final action.

The Senate Committee on Territories met this morning for the purpose of hearing arguments as to the advisability of bringing the Indian Territory under a civil form of government. Delegations from the Cherokees, Chickasaws, and Creeks were present. The Choctaws, who are also interested in the question before the committee, were not represented.

Mr. John Roach was before the House Naval Committee this morning, and was examined by ex-Secretary Robeson in regard to the old material purchased by him from the Navy Department. His testimony was to the effect that the transaction was highly advantageous to the Government and disadvantageous to himself. He never examined the material before it was delivered to him, but took it on the certificate of the bureau officers. His loss on the material he estimated at $75,000.

The petition of A. T. Stewart & Co., of New-York, presented in the Senate to-day by Mr. Kernan, strongly intimates that the Secretary of the Treasury has unwarrantably interfered in the matter of the appraisement of kid gloves imported into that City, and asks the appointment of a committee to investigate the whole subject, in order "that some fitting change may be made in the law for the ascertainment of values, whereby the repetition of wrongs done by Government officers under the simulated forms of law may be avoided and made impossible in the future."

The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections held a meeting to-day for the purpose of taking action on the memorial of Mr. D. T. Corbin, who claims to be entitled to the seat in the Senate now occupied by M. C. Butler, of South Carolina. Senator Wadleigh was ready to submit a report in favor of the admission of Mr. Corbin, which has informally received the sanction of the Republican members of the committee, but Senator Hill had not completed the preparation of the paper which is to be presented as a minority report, and action upon the subject was, therefore, postponed until Monday.

THE CONNECTICUT SENATORSHIP.

HON. ORVILLE H. PLATT, OF MERIDEN, RECEIVES THE REPUBLICAN NOMINATION.

HARTFORD, Jan. 17.—The Republican Senatorial caucus concluded its session at 2:25 o'clock this morning, having, on the thirty-sixth formal ballot, placed in nomination Hon. Orville H. Platt, of Meriden, who received 76 votes, Gen. Hawley 72, and Marshall Jewell 1. The caucus was a good-natured one, and the result gives general satisfaction. Especially is it looked upon by the best-informed Republicans as very decidedly in the interest of party organization and success hereafter, as the candidate, who will be elected next Wednesday in the joint convention, represents none of the party antagonisms, and secured his nomination through support from all sections, which places him above all sectional influences. Gen. Hawley's vote held steadily together throughout. Had it not been for the fact that he was already elected to Congress, and that his election to the Senate would necessitate a special election in his district, there is very little doubt that he would have received the nomination. As it is, he is placed conspicuously in the front as a candidate two years hence for the succession to Mr. Eaton, should the Legislature then be Republican. He is a cordial friend of Mr. Platt, whom he indorses as eminently well qualified to occupy the position.

Mr. Platt is 51 years of age, and was born in Washington, Litchfield County, this State. Since he entered upon the practice of his profession as a lawyer he has lived in Meriden, where he is universally esteemed. He has been active in various religious and reformatory enterprises. He is one of the deacons in the Congregational church at West Meriden, formerly ministered to by Rev. W. H. H. Murray. Mr. Platt's first appearance in public life was as a successful candidate for Secretary of State on the American ticket in 1857, when Gov. Holly was elected. In 1861-2 he was a member of the State Senate, and while in that body made himself very offensive to the Democrats of the State by securing the passage of a resolution directing the removal from the walls of the chamber of the portraits of ex-Govs. Isaac Toucey and Thomas H. Seymour on the ground of their disloyalty. The portraits were taken out, leaving the bare frames which they had occupied on the walls, where they presented a significant appearance, surrounded by the other portraits in the chamber. They were not restored until two years afterward, and meanwhile Mr. Platt figured in all the Democratic papers, offensively, as "Picture Platt." It did him no harm, however, for his thorough sincerity was acknowledged, and at the time a large majority of the people of the State heartily indorsed his course. In 1864 and 1869 he was a member of the lower house, he being the last elected Speaker. As Chairman of the State Central Committee during two years he did efficient work, and the extensive acquaintance he then made has been of service in the Senatorial contest. He will not make a brilliant, but will be a useful, intelligent, and honorable Senator, who will do the State no discredit.

LOGAN NOMINATED IN ILLINOIS.

HE RECEIVES 80 VOTES ON THE FIRST BALLOT TO 26 FOR OGLESBY.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 17.—All the members were present at the Republican caucus this evening. Logan received 80 votes to 26 for Oglesby, and was nominated on the first ballot. Farwell's name was not presented in the caucus.

One member, Mr. Riddle, of Chicago, announced that under no circumstances would he vote for Logan. Without his vote Logan will have 3 majority on joint ballot. There is talk of a bolt, but it is not believed that it will amount to anything, and it is probable that Logan will be elected next Tuesday.

THE WISCONSIN SENATORSHIP.

The Democratic members of the Legislature, to the number of 26, met at 7:30 o'clock in the State Agricultural Rooms, on the first floor of the Capitol. Senator Hudd was chosen Chairman, and Assemblyman Carel Secretary. A ballot for a candidate for the United States Senate resulted in Chief-Justice E. G. Ryan, of Madison, receiving 18, and Gen. Gabe Bouck, of Oshkosh, 8. Ryan was declared the nominee of the Democrats, and the caucus adjourned without further action till Wednesday next. Several members of the Democratic caucus desired to make no nomination, as they did not wish to be bound by the caucus, but desired to vote for a Republican in case of a bolt. It was generally conceded that in such an event the caucus nomination would not binder members.

MR. GARY'S INVENTIONS.

FORMATION OF A COMPANY COMPOSED OF NEW-YORK AND BOSTON CAPITALISTS TO PUSH GARY'S MACHINES.

BOSTON, Jan. 17.—Negotiations which have been in progress for several days between Wesley W. Gary, the inventor of the magnetic motor, and gentlemen representing a combination of Boston and New-York capitalists were concluded to-day, the necessary papers signed, and steps taken for the formation of a stock company for the introduction on a large scale of the magneto-electric machine for generating electricity for the electric light, for telegraphing without the use of the battery, and other purposes. A cash payment of a large sum was made to Mr. Gary, and he is to receive one-half the stock of the company. The capital is ample, and the gentlemen interested include several quite prominent capitalists connected with large enterprises in this city and New-York. Before the papers were signed, experts were brought in and the principle upon which Mr. Gary's inventions are founded was demonstrated to their entire satisfaction. With the model with which Mr. Gary has experimented to secure the best method for generating electricity for the light, and also to telegraph without the use of the battery, most remarkable results have been obtained. Mr. Gary is to superintend the work of building the machines, and work will be begun at once in a well-equipped shop in this city, upon the building of large machines for practical use. When the charter is obtained, the company is organized, and the inventor is amply secured in his patents, a full and technical description of these later inventions will be permitted, and the publication of the names of the leading capitalists in the combination allowed. Mr. Gary has given his attention of late entirely to the development of the electro-magnetic machine, and the motor has meanwhile been untouched. With this the new company has no concern.

NORFOLK, Va., Jan. 17.—Samuel A. Sherrar was arrested several months ago for the murder of William B. Walker, in Accomack County, Va., 16 years ago. He was tried, and yesterday was acquitted, at Eastville, Va., his plea having been "self-defense."

THE FRENCH REPUBLICANS.

WILL DUFAURE'S MINISTRY FALL?

THEIR DECLARATION UNFAVORABLY RECEIVED—A BELIEF THAT THE CABINET CANNOT REMAIN IN OFFICE—RUMORS THAT PRESIDENT MACMAHON WILL RESIGN—THE REPUBLICANS HUNGRY FOR OFFICE.

PARIS, Jan. 17.—M. De Girardin, in the France, proposes a Cabinet of members of the four sections of the Left, under the Premiership of Gambetta.

All the fractions of the Left held meetings to-day. The Moderate section, although it unanimously voted that the Ministerial declaration was unacceptable, showed during the discussion that they almost all favored the retention of the present Cabinet if Dufaure will consent to make his declarations more distinct. The discussion will be continued to-morrow. The Republican Union declared that they considered it useless to discuss the declaration in view of the unanimous disfavor with which it was received, and instructed M. Floquet in Monday's debate to insist especially upon modifications in the staff and changes of public officials. The Extreme Left rejected the declaration of the Ministry, and instructed M. Madier de Montjau to express its objections on Monday. At the meeting of the Senators belonging to the Left Centre, M. Fersy made a speech adhering to the Government programme. The Deputies of the Left Centre resolved to adhere to the Ministerial programme, awaiting with confidence the explanations and acts of the Cabinet, especially as regards public officers.

LONDON, Jan. 17.—A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Paris says: "The Ministerial statement has generally produced an unfavorable impression, even the moderate journals discussing it with reservations."

The Journal des Débats expresses regret that the Government did not employ more animated and cordial language. It says: "In reading their declaration one might believe that nothing had happened in France for a long time, whereas only a week ago the Republic was established."

The Republique Française says: "The Government must rely only upon the significance of their acts and the frankness of their attitude, as the declaration will be of no assistance to them."

The Dix Neuvieme Siecle says: "The Government spoke for 20 minutes without pronouncing a single word that they ought to have spoken. The language of the Ministry is not a new programme, but a simple exposition of the situation or a report of Parliamentary proceedings."

The Figaro says: "The Ministerial statement is a political testament which will not prevent the fall of the Cabinet."

The Constitutionnel, Gaulois, and Soliel praise the Government programme. The Rappel, Voltaire, Marseillaise, and Revolution Française vehemently attack the statement, and characterize it as void of purpose, the fruit of madness, and employ other like expressions.

The question of the Ministerial crisis is discussed everywhere, and the general impression prevails that the Cabinet can scarcely remain in office after the unfavorable reception of their programme in the Chambers. The Siecle, indeed, expresses the opinion that the Ministry cannot survive more than 24 hours. In some quarters it is said that a crisis will ensue immediately, that President MacMahon will summon M. Gambetta, and in the event of his refusing to form a Cabinet President MacMahon will resign. On the other hand, it is believed by some that if M. Gambetta refuses to form a Cabinet, President MacMahon will not resign, but will request M. Dufaure to form a new Ministry. It is pointed out, however, in Parliamentary circles, that, according to strict parliamentary rules, there can be no other President of the Council than M. Gambetta, since he, at the present moment, practically holds the post. In spite, however, of the language of the Republican journals, and the generally prevailing impression, there is a somewhat strong belief in well-informed circles that the Ministry will obtain a majority in the Chamber of Deputies after the debate, which begins on Monday.

The Paris correspondent of the Standard telegraphs as follows: "Although the prevailing opinion is that the days of the Dufaure Cabinet are numbered, I still retain a strong impression that the storm will blow over. It is reported that M. Gambetta intends to get up a Ministry of nobodies, under Senator Duclercq, who would be laughed at throughout the country. I do not believe he will persevere in such a foolish policy."

The Daily Telegraph's Paris correspondent says current rumors point to the retirement of all the Ministers except MM. Say and De Marcere.

The correspondent of the Times says: "The silence with which the Ministerial statement was received resembled that at a sentence of death. The capital sentiment on the statement was the promise of dismissals from office, without which nothing can save the Cabinet. The Republicans, after eight years' impatient waiting, now wish to install themselves, and no cabinet can last except on condition of making a terrible clearance of officials. As there is no other reason than this for upsetting the Dufaure Cabinet, I do not think its successors need alarm France or Europe. All that will be witnessed is an avalanche of dismissals and appointments, which will pass off without giving trouble, except to those directly affected. It would be premature to pass judgment at once on the doings of the Left. We must wait for the new Cabinet and its programme before crying "Fire." President MacMahon, it is hoped, will stay in any case, and show himself perfectly constitutional and ready to give France any Government commanding a majority.

LONDON, Jan. 18.—The Times' Paris correspondent says M. Gambetta will leave Paris to-day, (Saturday,) and will only return on Monday in time for the debate. The correspondent says Gambetta has adopted his present tactics because he fears he can no longer control the majority, and intends to veer around gradually to the side of the assailants of the Ministry.

The same correspondent considers it most improbable that the Cabinet will amplify its programme in Monday's debate. He points out the possibility that the Left is only aiming at the dismissal of M. Dufaure and the reconstruction of the Cabinet, and says Gambetta will probably abstain from verbal attacks upon the Government, fearing the risk of being compelled to accept office.

RUN ON A LONDON BANK—NEW CATHOLIC BISHOPRICS TO BE ESTABLISHED IN THE UNITED STATES—FAILURE IN THE IRON TRADE—BISMARCK'S DISCIPLINE BILL.

LONDON, Jan. 17.—An enormous crowd assembled to-day in Lombard-street, and great excitement prevailed over a reported run on the Bank of the London and County Banking Company. I am credibly informed that the origin of the report was in a dispute about a cab-fare in front of the bank, which attracted a crowd. This was about 11 o'clock A. M. It soon began to be whispered about that the bank was in trouble the crowd increased, and a genuine run was begun. The bank has a good many branches in the suburbs of London, and possibly the rumor spreading to these may create such a drain on the cash as to bring the concern into difficulty.

Reuter's dispatch from Rome states that, in addition to the proposed appointment of several Vicars Apostolic in parts of America destitute of episcopal churches, the Vatican intends to establish several new Bishoprics in the United States, and institute a new hierarchy different from the present one. The Pope has sent a circular to Bishops outside of Europe, with the view of extending the collection of Peter's pence in all countries of the world.

Thomas W. Rooker & Co., Glamorganshire iron masters, have failed. They owe the Bristol and West of England Bank £800,000.

The Berlin correspondent of the Times says: "The Liberals, despite their opposition to gag law, are convinced that further restrictions are absolutely necessary to guard against abuse of speech in the Reichstag, and though they are strongly opposed to the Chancellor's remedy, pure and simple, as too drastic, the opinion is gaining ground that he will coerce or cajole them to his purpose."

The Governmental Post complains of the bitter tone characterizing English criticisms of the measure. It thinks England's opposition to the bill is nothing more than another form of her antipathy to the Chancellor's protectionist policy.

BERLIN, Jan. 17.—The Post says that Prince Bismarck has declared privately that he was indifferent as to the fate of the Parliamentary Discipline bill, which, he said, he proposed solely in the interest of the Reichstag itself.

MADRID, Jan. 17.—The constitutional newspapers loudly complain that domiciliary visits were made on Thursday night to the houses of three friends and partisans of Marshal Serrano, and search made for a seditious pamphlet, which, however, was not discovered. The affair has caused some sensation.

THE NEW-ORLEANS HOWARDS.

OVER 35,000 SICK CARED FOR AND 60,000 POOR AIDED BY THE ASSOCIATION—HOW THEY SPENT $380,000.

There are romances, sometimes, in tables of figures and stories in statistics. The report of the Howard Association, prepared and published in the New-Orleans Democrat by the Secretary, Mr. F. B. Southmayd, is a simple, straightforward, businesslike account of their work, receipts, and expenditures during the yellow fever epidemic of the past Autumn, but it forms a striking record of the dire plague's rapid spread and fatal work, and of the boundless generosity that poured into the hands of the Howards great sums of money for their noble work. But if the response to their demands was munificent, their own deeds proved them worthy executors of such a trust. They labored with a zeal and utter forgetfulness of self that is almost unparalleled in the history of epidemics, yet they are able to show with all the clearness of a banker's balance-sheet to what use they put the money confided to their care.

The hope that the fever would be mild and of short duration was abandoned on the 15th of August, and on the morning of the 17th the New-Orleans newspapers published the Howards' appeal for help to begin their work. The same morning their doors were open for the relief of the destitute sick, though they had not then a dollar in the treasury. But their appeal was quickly answered, and as the fever spread funds began to pour in from outside the city and, as days passed, from the whole North and South. Railroads and telegraph lines and steam-boats were placed at their free disposition, and their numbers were increased by new members anxious to join in the work. The City of New-Orleans was divided into 20 districts, and slates were hung up at convenient points where on applications from the destitute sick were written. Including members and physicians, the working force of the association was 125 men, whose time was entirely devoted to the work and suffering. The total number of patients cared for by the Howards in New-Orleans during the 71 days of the fever's rage, from Aug. 17 to Oct. 26, was 22,244: of these 5,132 were blacks and 16,112 whites. It should be understood that this does not include all the cases occurring in the city, but only those cared for by the Howards. As some members only reported the first case in many families where there were several cases, the total probably did not fall short of 35,000. The Howard's report covers also the country towns and villages of a wide section of territory around New-Orleans, where assistance was rendered by the Howards, as follows: Algiers, 300 cases; Holly Springs, 600 cases, at Holly Springs for 900, at Plaquemine and Donaldsonville 1,000 each, and at nearly 50 other places for numbers ranging from 10 to 850. The total cases attended to outside the city were 11,750, making the grand total of patients cared for by the New-Orleans Howards, 35,750. Not the sick only, but the suffering appealed to their humanity. Fully 60,000 destitute people were provided for by them during the epidemic of 1878.

Let the following table, showing the receipts of the Howards, of New-Orleans, and the sources of the donations, tell the eloquent story of the unstinted giving that equipped them for their work:

New-York	$82,637 01	Savannah, Ga.	$1,500 00
Philadelphia	29,862 40	Buffalo, N.Y.	1,500 00
Boston	26,704 29	Albany, N.Y.	1,500 00

Washington, D.C.	2,101 50
Hartford, Conn.	1,881 50
Cincinnati	1,513 50

Total $383,449 93

The full table of disbursements given by Secretary Southmayd includes all moneys and supplies used in the City and sent to points outside. The following condensed table shows the amount of these expenditures:

Receipts to date		$383,449 93
EXPENDITURES.
Howard Association, New-Orleans		$278,850 15
Other associations, New-Orleans		8,481 22
Country points.
Boston	$20,018 50
Nurses	31,871 95
Money and supplies	40,964 01—	92,854 46
BALANCES.
Pitsburg orphan fund	$1,800 00
Chicago special fund	800 00
Reserved for claims in suits, printing report, &c.	664 10—	3,264 10
Total		$383,449 93

The amount received up to Sept. 12, and advices of further sums to come were so numerous, that the association judged it wise to send out notice that they were amply supplied, and that no more contributions would be needed. The rapid and unexpected spread of the disease after that date, however, compelled other appeals for help. The call was answered in such a manner as to leave them unfettered for their work, and to allow of their distributing a certain sum among the physicians who had aided them without fee thus far. With a word of reply to some unmanly calumnies upon the association, equally false and malicious, and against which they need no defense here at the North, Mr. Southmayd closes his report by expressing the gratitude of the Howards for the divinely-inspired charity which enabled them to carry on their work.

A BUTLER MAN INDICTED.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Jan. 17.—John F. Arnold, of North Adams, the Butler candidate for Lieutenant-Governor at the last election, has been indicted by the Grand Jury at Pittsfield for obtaining money under false pretenses, and will be tried next week. The complainant, John Bagley, for a long time an employe of Arnold, had saved about $5,000, which Arnold borrowed from time to time, giving, it is alleged, worthless securities. Bagley is now old and destitute.

ANGRY POLICY HOLDERS.

THE NEW-YORK MUTUAL LIFE.

AN INFLUENTIAL MEETING IN PROVIDENCE—THE RECENT ACTION OF THE COMPANY CONDEMNED—A COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO PROTECT THE INTERESTS OF THE POLICY-HOLDERS.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Jan. 17.—At the adjourned meeting of the policy-holders of the New-York Mutual Life Insurance Company to-night there was not so much opposition to the protesting spirit as had been expected. The arguments of Messrs. Thurston, Wright, Nivers, Ropes, Clark, of Boston, and ex-Mayor Clark, of Providence, were so conclusive that little attempt was made to answer them, and nearly all remarks on the other side were to the effect that competition with other companies should be kept up. Mr. Ropes especially made a strong impression by his concise and telling way of presenting the case. Hon. Abraham Payne presided, and a letter was read from President Winston, announcing the recent appointment of a committee on the subject under controversy. Mr. B. F. Thurston, of Providence, reviewed the recent action of the Trustees, and criticised the course as inexpedient, aside from its legality. How many, he asked, of the old policyholders who wished to increase their insurance would apply to the Mutual Insurance Company of New-York? He was glad to see that the Trustees had appointed a committee of conference, but the committee was of their own number and would naturally, he thought, be influenced in favor of the action already taken. He, therefore, thought that the Providence policy-holders should express themselves as opposed to the scheme. Mr. Elizur Wright, of Boston, known as the father of the Massachusetts life insurance system, said that the statement that there had been a decline in the vitality of the company could not be a fact. The statistics had been so carefully collected there could be no mistake about the matter. There could be no pretense that lapses and surrenders impaired the vitality of the company. That was the experience of all well managed companies on both sides of the Atlantic, and this was so well established that the Equitable, of England, refused to take new members, except they paid more than the old ones, the company feeling that their vitality would not be so good. Mr. Ladd, of Providence, spoke of the competition of other companies, and he understood that a change was necessary, so he approved the action taken.

Mr. John T. Clark, of Boston, believed the policyholders everywhere were actuated by the same motive, to take care of their property and not allow themselves to be robbed. He held that all the policies issued under the new plan were illegal, and he would guarantee that the death of a new policyholder would cause an injunction to be issued against the payment of the policy.

Mr. Thurston said that he had heard it asserted that the agents of the company had been instructed to obtain signatures in favor of the scheme, and had been promised a commission for their action. This was denied by agents of the company who were present.

Ex-Mayor Clark, of Providence, said that, the legality of the scheme being questioned, it was safe not to adopt it. The confidential circular was highly discreditable, and would be a disgrace to any corporation in Rhode Island. The policy-holders would, he said, forgive all that had been done, even that circular, if the old course should be resumed. The New-York Mutual, from its great strength, stood behind several other companies. It was a question of assets and liability, and the comparative balance was greater in several other companies. He offered the following resolutions:

Resolved, That having heard the rebate plan recently introduced by the Mutual Life Insurance Company fully and ably explained and defended by Mr. Andrews, Trustee of the company, and Judge Hallerton, of New-York, as counsel for the company, and having carefully considered the explanations and arguments made, we have arrived at the conclusions:

First—That no adequate reason has been shown for making any change in the past methods of conducting the business, and

Second—That the rebate plan is a gross injustice to the old policy-holders—those who have retired and are daily retiring, as well as those who remain, and ought to be discontinued.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to represent the interests of the Rhode Island policy-holders, to co-operate with the committees of policy-holders' committees of New-York, Boston, and other cities in such action as may be deemed advisable in protecting the interests of the members.

J. B. Niver, of Boston, for several years solicitor for the Mutual Life, and at present a policy-holder to the amount of $15,000, declared the rebate offer a most unfortunate and injudicious move. In his judgment, there was no necessity for such action. The new departure had a pernicious influence on the entire business of life insurance. There were 21 other prominent companies beside the Mutual Life. These other companies had 541,543 policies in force, insuring more than $1,200,000,000; they had assets of over $300,000,000, and had an annual income of nearly $70,000,000. During 1878 these 34 companies paid death losses and claims amounting to $21,350,007, and dividends to policy-holders of $14,207. The interests were thus simply immense, and the successful introduction of false and deceptive methods by one of the most prominent of the companies could not fail to affect and injure all.

Concerning the endeavor of the officers of the Mutual Life to justify the expenditure in the way of commissions to new members of money really belonging to old members, by the assertion that the company needed new blood, the growth of the increasing rate of its death claims, Mr. Niver asserted that its published records of mortality did not warrant, but, on the contrary, actually contradicted, their position. Its rate of mortality, he declared, had, so far, averaged 20 per cent. less than the losses predicted by its tables. From a table just published, compiled from the company's own records, it appeared that from the low mortality had been $9,466,171 in 35 years. For the last 10 years the profits had been enormous, the total being $6,940,460. These mortality profits had made up one-fourth of the total dividends earned and actually paid by the company since its organization, and for the last 10 years they had constituted one-third of the actual profits for dividends from all sources. Mr. Niver was satisfied that if there was any good reason for the change, the true one had not been assigned officially, either by the officers or those who spoke for them.

Mr. John Cooper, of Boston, described a mutual life insurance company as not a stock corporation, a club in which all members stood on an equal footing. The entire property of the company belonged to its members; not, to whom did it belong? It would not belong to any one class of them, but to the Empire. His health broke down under the fatigues of this second banishment, and he died at Comasa, in poverty, on his way to the Euxine.

His martyrdom at the hands of a Christian Emperor, and for his fidelity to his cause, made a profound impression. The voice of envy was at last hushed, for the great light of the Church was extinguished. Another generation transported his remains to the banks of the Bosphorus, and they were afterward removed to Rome. This great pulpit orator left more than 1,000 sermons, which were of great use to the clergy in after times. The influence of such a man can only be measured by the power of the pulpit itself in the combined Churches of Christendom. So far as pulpit eloquence is an art, its greatest master still speaketh. But greater than his art were the truths which he unfolded with so much power. It was not because he held cultivated audiences spell-bound by his matchless eloquence, but because he did not fear to deliver his message, and preached to Emperors as if they were ordinary men, and regarded himself as the bearer of momentous truths, and soared beyond human praising, and forgot himself in his cause, that he will be held in honor so long as Christianity is the mighty power of the world.

The next lecture, on Tuesday, will be on "Ambrose."

UNITING AGAINST TAMMANY.

The joint committees of the City Democracy, the County Democracy, and the Irving Hall Democracy, which were chosen to prepare a plan for the enrollment of all the Democratic bodies opposed to Tammany Hall, met at the Westminster Hotel last evening. Among those present were Messrs. Jerome Buck, Hubert O. Thompson, Thomas Costigan, Maurice J. Powers, Hugh Moore, Joseph Blumenthal, Seth C. Douglas, John B. Haskin, Emanuel B. Hart, Thomas Mackellar and others. The publication was ordered of a call, inviting the Democratic electors of this City who are in favor of the free and independent action of the people, and are opposed to the control and dictation of any secret society or irresponsible power, to enroll themselves in their several Assembly districts on Jan. 27 and 30 and Feb. 3, 6, 10, and 13. The meeting also agreed upon three Commissioners of Enrollment in each district. The enrolled electors are, on a subsequent day, to elect three Inspectors of Election, under whose supervision a General Committee, containing twice as many members as there are election districts in the City, will be chosen.

THE POLICY-HOLDERS' PROTEST.

For two or three days past there has been no disposition on the part of the policy-holders of the Mutual Life Insurance Company to say anything concerning their differences with the company. The reason of this is that at a meeting of the policy-holders in Providence, R. I., on Friday last, the recent action of the company was condemned. This fact led to an offer to the Executive Committee of the policy-holders in this City, in which the management of the company engaged to submit the whole matter in dispute to a committee of the Trustees, provided that no representative of the committee should be sent to the meeting in Providence, which was adjourned to last evening, and that the Executive Committee of the policy-holders should desist from publication of their grievances. This was agreed to by the policy-holders, in the hope that they might amicably adjust the difficulties between them and the managers of the company. The Executive Committee is in possession of the best legal opinions, which unanimously declare the illegality of the rebate plan lately adopted by the company. They have in their possession many protests and resolutions submitted to the company against such action. And while desiring as far as possible to avoid further difficulty, they are determined that the matter shall now be settled justly and satisfactorily to all concerned. The company has made no reply to the statement made on Dec. 26, and in fact they claim that the new method has been designed to reimburse agents who had been dropping off under the small commissions allowed. As to the actuarial features, the policy-holders protest against the charging of new business so obtained against the business of the whole year, when it ought to be charged only against the business so obtained.

MR. JOHN N. STEARNS' DENIAL.

Mr. John N. Stearns, the Superintendent of the Greenpoint Presbyterian Sunday-school and Secretary of the National Temperance Society, against whom certain charges of immorality were recently made, has returned from Florida, and is now at his home in Greenpoint. Last night he was engaged in preparing a statement of the case for publication. He denies explicitly all the charges made against him, and expresses his willingness to meet them as any time, and to have them fully investigated. It is understood that the church of which he is a member will speedily have such an investigation made.

A MAN WHO DEFIED EMPERORS.

DR. JOHN LORD'S LECTURE ON "CHRYSOSTOM"—THE FAME OF AN EARLY CHRISTIAN PULPIT.

"Chrysostom" was the subject of Dr. John Lord's lecture yesterday at Chickering Hall, which aimed to represent the first great moral force which aroused the people of the Roman world from the torpor and sensuality which preceded destruction. Chrysostom, said the speaker, was not the first great preacher of the new doctrines which were destined to such mighty triumph, but he was the most distinguished orator of Christian antiquity. The eloquence of the Pulpit far transcended the eloquence of the Bar or the Senate, since it was rendered potent by grander themes than those dwelt upon by any secular orator. There was nothing touching in the instability of fortune, or the fragility of loveliness, or the decay of mortal friendships, or the fall of States and Empires, which the preacher did not present to give humiliating ideas of worldly grandeur. Nor was there anything heroic in sacrifice, or grand in conflict, or sublime in danger—nothing in the loftiness of the soul's aspiration; nothing of the glorious promises of everlasting life, which he did not dwell upon to stimulate the transported crowds who hung upon his lips. How different this eloquence from that of secular orators in that gloomy age, when the Empire was passing away. Their eloquence is sad—appealing to sentiments which no longer were believed in, when liberty had fled and virtue was a name. The great orators of the latter days of Rome appealed to traditions, to glories which could never return, and they spoke in vain, stimulating no enthusiasm. But the orators who preached a religion of regenerating forces were more cheerful. They knew that these forces would save the world. Their eloquence is never sad or desponding, but jubilant and triumphant. It kindled an enthusiasm not based on the conquest of the earth, but on the conquest of the soul, on the ever-increasing power of the Kingdom of Christ. The new orators did not preach liberty when liberty was impossible, or the majesty of man, or even patriotism, but salvation, and for those who were deemed of no account.

Among these preachers, Chrysostom was preeminent. He was descended from an illustrious family. His father was a man of high military rank, and his mother was famous for her piety and culture, like Paula, like Monica, like Nonna. She gave her son an accomplished education, not fearing to intrust him to the care of a Pagan rhetorician, since she had fortified his mind with strong religious convictions. Chrysostom was precocious, like Cicero, and panted for distinction. The common path to greatness was the profession of the law. But at Antioch, where Chrysostom lived, the practice of this honorable profession did not correspond with its theory. The young student was soon disgusted with the ordinary avocations of the Forum—the low standard of virtue, the abandonment to usurious calculations and tricks of legalized jugglery by which the end of law was baffled. But what else could be expected of lawyers in those days, when justice was a marketable commodity, when half the population were enslaved, when the circus and the theatre were as necessary as the bath, when only the rich were held in honor, when provincial Governments were sold, when the master passion of the people, with them and this squandered in vile pleasure; when utility was the watchword of philosophy, and material gains the end of education; when conjugal infelicities were a constant reproach, when divorce was frequented, and the greatest reason of universal humanity was taught by the stage as nothing else could teach it. The stage was the most orthodox of the orthodox. Never was a play seen in which virtue was not rewarded and vice punished. Never was a serm

FORTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

SUMMARY.

Mr. Sanisbury offered in the Senate during the morning hour a long resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for information in regard to the compensation paid to bankers, syndicates, firms, and individuals in negotiating the sale of bonds since 1862, and also in regard to various other matters connected with the financial operations of the Government. Mr. Morrill objected, and, consequently, the resolution was laid aside. The bill amending the Patent laws was then taken up and several amendments were agreed to, but the bill was not disposed of. Mr. Wallace requested that he and Mr. Bayard be excused from further service on the Teller Investigating Committee, and after some discussion the request was granted. The Senate then adjourned until Monday.

The House of Representatives went into Committee of the Whole on the private calendar. The principal bill considered was one for the payment of $20,000 to the Trustees of the Fairfax Seminary for the rent of buildings during the war. The bill was denounced as a rebel war claim, and a long discussion took place on its provisions. Without reaching a vote, the House adjourned.

SENATE.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the commanding General of the Department of the Missouri, in regard to the establishment of a military post in the vicinity of El Paso, Texas. Referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also a communication from the Secretary of the Interior in response to the Senate resolution calling for information in regard to the construction of a railroad across the public domain in Arizona Territory. It was ordered to lie upon the table and be printed.

RESTORATION OF COURT RECORDS.

Mr. EDMUNDS, of Vermont, called up the House bill providing for the restoration of the files and records of the United States Circuit and District Courts of the Western District of Texas, lately destroyed by fire.

An amendment, in the nature of a substitute for the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee, so as to make general provision for the restoration of the records and files of any District or Circuit Court of the United States destroyed by fire, was agreed to, and the bill was read a third time and passed.

Mr. ANTHONY, of Rhode Island, submitted a concurrent resolution to print 5,000 additional copies of the narrative of Hall's second Arctic expedition, prepared from notes purchased from his widow. Referred to the Committee on Printing.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following bills were introduced and referred as indicated:

By Mr. DORSEY, of Arkansas—To authorize the purchase of a life-size portrait of the late Major-Gen. George H. Thomas. Referred to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. EDMUNDS, of Vermont—To amend section 5,356 of the Revised Statutes, in relation to the punishment of crimes committed in the Indian country. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATOR SPENCER'S SUCCESSOR.

Mr. MORGAN, of Alabama, presented the credentials of Hon. George S. Houston, elected United States Senator from Alabama for six years from the 4th of March, 1879, to succeed Hon. George E. Spencer. Read and placed on file.

AN INQUIRY REGARDING THE NEGOTIATION OF BONDS.

Mr. SAULSBURY, of Delaware, submitted the following:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate of the amount of commissions or other compensation paid to bankers, firms, companies, syndicates, or individuals, for services in negotiating the sale of bonds and other obligations of the United States from the year 1862 until the present time; when and to whom such commissions or compensation was paid; and, when paid to syndicates, firms, corporations, or companies, to state the names of the persons composing the same; and also to inform the Senate whether any, and if any what, amount of commissions or other compensation, has been paid to bankers, brokers, firms, companies, syndicates, and individuals for services rendered in refunding any of the bonds of the United States, and if any such payments have been made, to state when and to whom made; and also, whether interest has been paid on called bonds at the same time that interest was accruing on bonds sold to redeem the same, and whether such double interest has been uniformly paid while the refunding operation was in progress, or on bonds sold for resumption purposes, specifying whether there is any exception to such payments of double interest, and who was Secretary of the Treasury at the time of such exception, and how much double interest has been paid on such class of bonds, and the total amount thereof, and whether the money received for bonds sold by any bank or syndicate in such cases been allowed to remain on deposit with the national banks acting as Government depositories, pending the call of bonds, specifying the names of the banks and the length of time during which the proceeds of the bonds sold have been left on deposit with each bank; and whether, at any time, any gold coin has been delivered by the Treasury to any parties concerned in the negotiation of United States bonds, or otherwise, in exchange for, or upon the security of, United States bonds, or in advance of the payment of, or pending any call of bonds on which interest was allowed or paid up to the date of the maturity of the call; and also, whether any money in the Treasury, held for the payment of overdue called bonds has been left on deposit without interest in any Government depository, and what was the largest amount thereof at any time, specifying the names of the banks in which such money was deposited, and what security the Treasury held for the payment thereof when demanded.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, said the resolution should go to the Committee on Finance. It was the part of prudence not to impose a vast amount of labor on the department, involving the labor of some 200 clerks for a month, unless some good was to be gained by it.

Mr. SAULSBURY said it was a mere resolution of inquiry, and it was usual to pass such resolutions.

Mr. MORRILL objected to the consideration of the resolution now, unless Mr. Secretary [Mr. Saulsbury] would consent to its reference to the Finance Committee.

Mr. SAULSBURY—No, Sir. I will not.

The resolution was then laid aside under the objection of Mr. Morrill.

THE KID-GLOVE CASES.

Mr. KERNAN, of New-York, presented a petition of A. T. Stewart & Co., of New-York, importers of foreign merchandize, praying the appointment of a committee to investigate the facts and evidence adduced in relation to the recent appraisement of kid gloves at the port of New-York, and for a change in the law providing for the ascertainment of values upon imports. Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

THE PATENT BILL.

The morning business having been concluded, the consideration of the bill to amend the patent laws was resumed, the question being on the amendment of Mr. Matthews, of Ohio, submitted yesterday.

Mr. MATTHEWS said that after the expression of opinion yesterday, he would not press the amendment having received only six votes, he would withdraw it.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, submitted the following:

Where an appeal is allowed from an interlocutory decree establishing the validity of an infringed patent, the complainant shall be permitted to go on and take his account, subject to payment of cost and counsel fees, if the decree is reversed, and on giving security therefor.

Agreed to.

Mr. HOAR, of Massachusetts, submitted the following amendment.

And whenever a patent has been issued to two or more persons as joint inventors, for the same matter which was of the invention of only one of them, and for which the inventor thereof might lawfully have taken a separate patent to himself, and the other person named as the first inventor thereof, by reissue of the patent so jointly issued upon proceedings had as in other cases of reissue, and with the consent in writing of the assignee, if any, of such original patent; such reissue to inure to the benefit of all persons claiming under the original patent, as if their claim had arisen under the patent so reissued; except as provided in the sixth section.

This amendment led to a long discussion, and upon reaching a vote it was discovered that no quorum was present.

A call of the Senate was ordered, and a quorum having responded, Mr. EDMUNDS moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. Fifteen Senators voted in the affirmative, and 18 in the negative—no quorum present. Another call of the Senate was ordered, and a quorum having answered, Mr. EATON, of Connecticut, moved that when the Senate adjourned to-day it be to meet on Monday next. Agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Edmunds for an executive session was rejected.

The discussion on Mr. Hoar's amendment was continued, and when a vote was reached, it was again discovered that no quorum was present. A third call of the Senate was ordered, and a quorum of Senators having responded, the amendment of Mr. Hoar was agreed to—yeas 33, nays 8.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, submitted an amendment providing that it shall not be lawful to grant any reissue of any patent for any invention except the invention which was embraced in the original patent.

When a vote was reached, it was again discovered that no quorum was present, 36 Senators only voting.

EXCUSED FROM SERVICE ON THE TELLER COMMITTEE.

Mr. WALLACE, of Pennsylvania, said that he and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Bayard] desired to be excused from further service on the Teller special committee to investigate recent elections.

Mr. CONKLING, of New-York, said that he did not wish to make any objection to the request of the Senator, but it was not in order to do any business now or while a call of the Senate was pending. He would not know that it would be valid to excuse the Senators now, and suggested that the request lie over for the present, or be withdrawn.

He moved that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WALLACE hoped the Senator would withdraw that motion, as it was important to act upon his request this evening.

A call of the Senate was ordered, and a quorum having responded, Mr. WALLACE said he made the request in his own behalf, because the gentlemen who constituted the minority of the Senate on the Teller committee were now about starting North from tion to continue the investigation. It was impossible for him [Mr. Wallace] to go to Charleston, and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Bayard] could not go, as he was in Texas.

Mr. HOAR, of Massachusetts, hoped the request would lie over for the present, and in explanation thereof said there had been some talk about himself and Mr. McMillan, who were members of the committee, going to Charleston, but they had concluded not to go. If the Democratic members should all be there, they would be in the majority.

Mr. WALLACE said nothing of the kind was contemplated.

Mr. HOAR replied that he was satisfied of that fact.

It was finally agreed that the matter should be arranged between the several members of the committee, and the request of Mr. Wallace to excuse himself and Mr. Bayard was granted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Messrs. McDonald, of Indiana, and Randolph, of New-Jersey, to fill the vacancies.

The Senate, at 4:30 P. M., adjourned until Monday.

CHARGES AGAINST THE HOUSE RESTAURANT KEEPER.

Mr. ELLSWORTH, of Michigan, presented charges against the keeper of the House restaurant in relation to selling liquors in violation of the rules of the House, and offered a resolution directing the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to inquire into the matter. Referred.

PRIVATE REPORTS.

The SPEAKER proceeded to call committees for reports of a private nature.

On motion of Mr. GUNTER, of Arkansas, Chairman of the Committee on Private Land Claims, the Senate bill was passed defining the manner in which certain land scrip may be assigned and located by actual settlers.

Mr. GUNTER reported a bill (introduced by Mr. Luttrell, of California,) authorizing the correction of the boundary of certain land in San Mateo County, Cal.

The bill was opposed by Messrs. PAGE and DAVIS, of California, who desired to have it referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PAGE moved to lay the bill on the table, pending which the morning hour expired.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the private calendar, Mr. Mills, of Texas, in the chair. After laying aside several bills to report to the House, a bill was reached for the payment of $20,000 to the Trustees of the Protestant Episcopal Seminary and High-school, in Virginia, for the rent of buildings during the war.

Mr. CONGER, of Michigan, opposed the bill as being a war claim.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, opposed the bill on the ground of its being a war claim for which the Government was not responsible. The artful position of the friends of the bill might seem to characterize it as being entirely for rent, but the enormous amount of the claim indicated unmistakably that there had been blended in it a claim for damages. He opposed it on that ground, and because the Trustees who were to be benefited by it had been disloyal to the Union.

Mr. HEWITT, of Virginia, thought that if ever a claim had been brought before Congress which should be treated in a non-sectional manner, this was such a one. The college had been built by aid from the North, and had scattered its students all through the country. The claim was one, not of damages, but of contract. He held that the Government was as much bound to pay rent for this building as for any other building occupied by it in any part of the United States. He thought that there was no express contract for the rent, but there was an implied contract.

Mr. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania, advocated the bill, and, in relating some of his reminiscences of Alexandria at the opening of the war, after the assassination of Ellsworth and the killing of Jackson, his murderer, dwelt upon the fact that he [Mr. Kelley] had made Episcopal services there, and had been listened to kindly and respectfully.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New-York, opposed the bill on the ground that the influence of the institution (the Fairfax Seminary) had been in the wrong direction. He envied the people of Alexandria the privilege of hearing the beautiful voice of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelley] ring out in the night air in favor of the Union. But he reminded his friend that his eloquence would have been of little avail if he had not had the New-York Zouaves to protect him. [Laughter.] He knew that the Federal troops had at that time taken possession of Alexandria as they (after Appomattox) took possession of the whole Confederacy. They had wiped out the rebel armies, but they had not wiped out rebellion. The fight was still going on, but the attack was on the doors of the Treasury.

Without reaching a vote, the committee rose, and the House passed one of four other private bills agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

The House then, at 4:30, adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

THE AUSTRALIAN EXHIBITION.

HOW THE UNITED STATES WILL BE REPRESENTED—HINTS FOR EXHIBITORS.

The Agricultural Society of New South Wales will hold an Australian International Exhibition, at Sydney, in August next, under the supervision of the Colonial Government. One acre of covered space has been assigned to American exhibits, and more will be given if necessary. No charge is made for space, and motive power will be furnished if early application be made for it. The entire expenses of an exhibitor having 6x8 feet, from the arrival to the departure of the exhibit, are computed at £15. All exhibits addressed to Jules Joubert, Secretary of the society, will be protected throughout. Mr. R. W. Cameron, of No. 23 South William-street, has been appointed official Commissioner for the United States and Canada, and copies of the regulations, and forms of application for space, may be obtained at his office. The Executive will consist of two divisions, one embracing live stock, agricultural products, machinery, and appliances; the other fine arts, apparatus, and processes used in the common arts, furniture, clothing, and food, products of mining and manufacturing industries, machinery, inventions, educational matters, &c. The Exhibition will be held in buildings specially erected in Prince Alfred Park, Sydney. All goods intended for it will be admitted free of duty or Customs charges. In the agricultural department money prizes, as well as printed certificates, will be awarded; in the other the prizes will be silver and bronze medals, and certificates of commendation. All articles manufactured in the Exhibition may be sold and delivered to visitors on permits to allow removal obtained from the Secretary. One vessel only has left this port—the whole Confederacy. They had wiped out the rebel armies, but they had not wiped out rebellion. The fight was still going on, but the attack was on the doors of the Treasury.

—sailed on the 15th, laden with American goods for the Exhibition, and another —the bark Clara—will leave between Feb. 10 and 15. At the last Exhibition, two years ago, America was represented but by one exhibit—a diamond drill. This time it is expected a very respectable show will be made. The proprietors of several agricultural machine and watch factories, &c., have signified their intention of entering specimens of their goods for competition. Other countries are also moving in the matter. France has voted 250,000 francs to encourage the project, and has ordered a steam transport to convey the goods of its citizens to Sydney. Shipments by sailing vessel must be made on or before April 1. After that date all goods will have to be sent on steamers via San Francisco.

A CIRCULAR FROM MR. SMYTH.

Copies of the following circular have been sent to every insurance company doing business in this State:

INSURANCE DEPARTMENT,
ALBANY, Jan. 16, 1879.

To the President or Secretary:

DEAR SIR: The Governor of this State, in his last Message, recommends the abolition of the Insurance Department. Having no desire to hold the office of Superintendent longer, if it is clear to me that the insurance companies doing business in this State, through their officers, agree with the Governor—such companies being taxed to support the department, and representing hundreds of thousands of policy-holders—and believe that the department does not give protection not only to policy-holders, but to solvent insurance companies, I venture to ask a response to the following question, assuring you that, whatever the nature of that response may be, it will be received by me in the kindliest spirit and treated with respectful consideration:

Is State supervision, as conducted by the State of New-York, a protection to the policy-holders, or would their interests as well as those of solvent companies be served if the various laws establishing the department were repealed and supervision abandoned, and a simple rendering of an annual statement to the Controller substituted in place of present requirements?

A prompt reply is respectfully solicited.

Your obedient servant,
JOHN M. SMYTH, Superintendent.

THE NEW CUSTOMS BILL.

A SHARP CRITICISM BY MERCHANTS ON SECTIONS ONE AND FOUR.

The Committee on Revenue Reform of the Chamber of Commerce have prepared a criticism of Collector Merritt's new bill now in Mr. Fernando Wood's hands for presentation to Congress, the points of which have been given in THE TIMES. The committee say that they have consulted with prominent business men in regard to the bill, and have themselves given it the most careful consideration, and while they "were at first gratified at the apparent readiness of the Treasury Department to meet and further the object sought for by our merchants in asking such amendments to the existing law as to enable them to pay duties with certified checks, they regret to see that the bill proposed to meet the difficulties under which they now labor offers to the business community a plan widely different from the simple and direct method petitioned for, and will entail much needless trouble to bankers and importers." They think "that the payment of duties by a certified check on any of our national banks, signed by the importer, drawn to the order of the Collector, should be accepted in settlement of the amount due the Government on such importation." They "cannot see why the United States Customs authorities should decline to adopt this simple method, usual between merchants in the daily transactions of their business where large sums are involved," and say: "The Government runs no risk of loss; with a penal bond nolding every member of a firm, and also two approved securities on the bond-book at the Customhouse; with the goods still in the possession of the authorities—value for double the amount to be collected—the check marked 'Good' by a national bank, where is the risk of any loss on the part of the Government?" The committee continue: "We go further, and state that the importers are worthy of greater consideration, and entitled to more confidence than is now dealt out to them by the United States authorities. A better feeling between the merchants and the Customs officials is desirable, and this can be brought about by more courtesy and greater consideration for the importing merchant. In the City of New-York more especially, where two-thirds of the dutiable goods are entered and two-thirds of the entire Customs revenue is collected, and where the United States Assistant Treasurer is represented daily in the Clearing-house, we think the proposition asking banks to make 'special deposits' for duties exceedingly objectionable; such a move would entail additional trouble and labor, besides would throw discredit on the national banks, who are comembers with the Government in the bank Clearing-house, and have invariably been stanch supporters of its credit when the Government stood in need of their co-operation. In making payments of duties by check on the bank where the merchant has his account we have in mind the nearest and most simple way to settle the claims of the Government, saving a vast amount of clerical labor in the office of the Collector as well as in the Sub-Treasury. The latter would be closed against fraud and peculation, and the merchant would have in his possession a voucher for his payments."

The second and third sections of the bill, providing for the appointment of special examiners to take Custom-house oaths and for the affixing of stamps in payment of dues and fees, are warmly approved. With regard to section 4 the committee say: "We cannot approve of the licensing of Custom-house experts or brokers, who now act as employes on top of the cargo close to the deck-beams, the whole cargo being well stowed. The libelants sought to claim that it was negligence of the defendant to stow it cheap and in bad order, but the court holds that it was not negligence unless it was shown that it was insecurely stowed. If the damage resulted in that position from the rolling of the vessel, the respondent was not liable, for that was a peril of the sea from the effects of which he was exempted by the terms of the bill of lading.

ERIE'S NEW TERMINAL FACILITIES.

The New-York, Lake Erie and Western Railway Directors held a meeting on Thursday for the purpose of receiving plans and estimates for the erection of the two proposed new terminal elevators at Buffalo and Jersey City. Four were submitted, and it was resolved to examine them thoroughly and to decide upon which one to accept at the next regular meeting. This is taken as an earnest that the long-contemplated improvements at Harsimus Cove are to be begun at once. Warehouses 500 feet long by 105 feet wide are to be built, which will afford every needed facility for handling goods in transit. One will be devoted to export goods and the other to imported goods. Among other intended improvements, are a passenger car house 700 feet long and 160 feet wide; a ship basin 170 feet wide, 1,600 feet long, and 26 feet deep, with accommodations at one time for three of the largest steamships, five sailing vessels of the largest size, and three of medium size; a canal basin 120 feet wide and 1,500 feet long, with one berth for a steam-ship and room for 40 large canal-boats. The new elevators will be of 1,000,000 and 1,500,000 bushels capacity respectively.

TEN YEARS IN STATE PRISON.

On Christmas Eve Eugene M. MacDonald found two intruders in the hallway of his premises, No. 101 East Twenty-fifth-street, and held one of them until the arrival of Officer Joyce, of the Eighteenth Precinct. The other managed to make his escape. At the station-house the prisoner gave the name of John Benson, and said he was a clerk from Boston, Mass. He was subsequently identified as a professional burglar, who had served several terms in State Prison under the names of Brennan and Moore. He had entered MacDonald's flat in the apartments of Mrs. Hannah Springer, and was carrying off a seal-skin sacque, an umbrella, and three mourning dresses when detected by Mr. MacDonald. On being arraigned in Assistant District-Attorney Rollins, in General Sessions, yesterday, Benson pleaded guilty to burglary in the first degree, and Judge Cowing sentenced him to 10 years in State Prison.

MAYOR COOPER'S FIRST REMOVAL.

Mr. Lindsay I. Howe, one of the two Commissioners of Accounts, was removed from office yesterday by Mayor Cooper, and Mr. William Pitt Shearman was appointed in his stead. The office is in the absolute gift of the Mayor. Mr. Shearman, who resides in the Twenty-second Ward, has acted as examiner of accounts in the United States Treasury Department for about 17 years, and he was also Treasurer and Financial Agent of the Erie Railway Company for a long time. Mr. Howe was appointed to his office by the late Mayor Havemeyer.

The Times Up-town Office—No. 1,253 Broadway.
Paris Office of The Times—No. 39 Rue de Lafayette.
The Times is on sale in London at No. 449 Strand, W. C., from Henry F. Gillig & Co., and at Mr. Stevens', No. 4 Trafalgar-square.

The Signal Service Bureau report indicates for to-day in this region, generally cloudy weather, and rain or snow; south-east winds, shifting to southerly and westerly; falling, followed by rising, barometer, and stationary or slight rise in temperature.

We need not ask the attention of our readers to the abstract of the report of the Howard Association of New-Orleans given in another column. Some $380,000 expended, of which we may be pardoned for noting that nearly one-fourth came from New-York; over 36,000 cases of fever cared for; 60,000 persons in destitution relieved, and this gigantic task performed, on the part of the great body of the active participants without pay or hope of pay—this is the record of which our country and humanity may be proud.

The Senator-elect from Connecticut, Hon. Orville H. Platt, of Meriden, is warmly and generously indorsed by his most active competitor, Gen. Hawley. His victory over that gentleman, after a long and close contest, is proof that he possesses great strength with his party, and Gen. Hawley says of him that "he is sound in principle, an anti-slavery man and Republican from boyhood, a good hard-money man, and sure to have convictions and follow them." His "most honorable character and sound judgment" are also vouched for. However a large part of the people of Connecticut may feel at losing the opportunity of being represented in the Senate by Gen. Hawley, he has himself given ample evidence that Mr. Platt will be acceptable to the Republicans of the country. Though they would have been glad to have a man of national reputation and influence already acquired in Congress, they will very gladly see Mr. Barnum replaced by one whose reputation is unsoiled, and who will be sure to put the performance of his duties higher than his personal or partisan interests.

As will be seen by our news columns, facilities are now offered to our business men to participate in the International Exhibition at Sydney, New-South Wales, Australia, in August next. One ship, laden with exhibits, has already sailed, and another will leave between the 10th and 15th of February. The very large and varied display made by the Australian Colonies at Philadelphia was evidence of the energy and business resources of the country. There is no doubt that it can afford a far better market for many of our goods than has yet been made use of, and the Exhibition is an opportunity for reaching that market which deserves the attention of our manufacturers and dealers. The arrangements for the display, and also for the sale, of exhibits, are exceedingly liberal. We may add that New South Wales, unlike Victoria, its neighbor, is not a protectionist community, and that our manufacturers will not find at its Custom-houses the barriers to foreign trade which exist at our own.

Nothing could show more strikingly the extremely ticklish condition of public opinion in business circles in London than the run reported yesterday on the Bank of the London and County Banking Company. It is said that its origin was in the collection of a crowd in Lombard-street, before the bank, watching a dispute in which some independent Briton was engaged with a cab-driver. The fact of the crowd caused a rumor that the bank was in trouble, and a real run set in. The bank is the third largest in the country, in respect of capital and business, and is the largest but one, (the London and Westminster,) in London, and has 156 branches, more than any other in the Kingdom. Its last annual dividend was 18 per cent., and its shares, with only £20 paid up, were worth in the market £63, or 315 per cent. Its condition, moreover, was exceptionally strong. With deposits of less than £24,000,000, it had in hand and on call £5,500,000, and over £3,000,000 in Government securities. Its buildings are valued at £717,000, in the most valuable part of the City, and its reserve on the 1st of October was £938,752. In point of cash and Government securities it was by far the strongest joint-stock bank in the country. That such an institution, without any known suspicion cast on its condition or its methods of business, should be subjected to a run from an idle and accidental rumor, betrays an uneasiness in the public mind which is as surprising as it is unfortunate.

Debate will open on Monday on the programme of the French Ministry. It is scarcely possible that the Ministry will be sustained. The journals of all shades of Republican opinion condemn it, and the most conservative in the severest manner. The Journal des Débats puts its position with characteristic vigor: "In reading the Declaration of the Ministers, one might believe that nothing had happened in France for a long time, whereas, only a week ago the Republic was established." On the other hand, all sections of Republicans in the Chamber of Deputies oppose the programme of the Ministry, and all except the Left Centre in the Senate. Among the rumors which prevail is one that the Marshal will summon M. Gambetta to form a Ministry, and that if he refuse, the President will resign; but it is not likely that M. Gambetta will accept office, and it is practically certain that the Marshal will not resign. On the whole, the "crisis" appears more exciting than important, and is not to be compared with those through which the patience and firmness of the Republicans have hitherto guided the country.

SENATOR CONKLING.

We publish to-day from the pen of an honored Republican who has ceased to take any active share in politics, a dispassionate review of some of the personal and political shortcomings of Roscoe Conkling. Our correspondent is probably aware that any protest against the re-election of Senator Conkling is likely to fall unheeded at the present juncture, and that his strictures have a historical rather than a practical interest. But the fact that there is virtually no other candidate for the Senatorial succession, and that it may with certainty be affirmed that Mr. Conkling will be his own successor, renders it all the more necessary that some words of reproof and warning should accompany the renewal of a great trust which, in the past, has not been guarded with proper fidelity.

Roscoe Conkling not only stands as the foremost representative of the Republican Party of New-York: he is also a typical American statesman—a man by whose career and character the future will judge of the political standards of the present time, and in whose methods ambitious young men may not unnaturally seek for the path of political preferment. The conscientious historian may deal leniently with the errors of Mr. Conkling, but his greatness can only be conceded on the theory that he lived in the day of small men and of debased political morals. Superficially viewed, his career bears the honest stamp of a public servant faithful in few things, being made ruler over many. Trusted by his fellow-townsmen to a degree which falls to the lot of few young men, he has gone through all the stages of political advancement with a rapidity which bespeaks brilliant powers and the capacity for eliciting the admiration and confidence of men. The meanest forms of public jobbery have never been successfully brought home to him; in an arena not devoid of men of real greatness he has always been a conspicuous figure; he has brought to the solution of political problems fitted to call forth the noblest energies of the human intellect a courageous and convincing eloquence, whose power has been confessed by his bitterest enemies.

All this and more might justly be said in praise of the senior Senator from New-York, and yet the unprejudiced verdict of his own generation may closely conform to what we believe will be the dispassionate estimate of his ability and influence which posterity will agree in making. For, the higher we place the possibilities of greatness of which Mr. Conkling has given frequent intimation, the harsher will be our judgment on his failure to fulfill such promise. Let it be admitted that he merely shares the reproach of every conspicuous public man of his generation in consenting to use mean instruments and dubious methods to attain ends which were in themselves noble, and it must also be conceded that these instruments and methods have succeeded in dragging him down to their level, instead of his being able to elevate them to his own. No contemporary leader of men has shown less sympathy than he with the reforming impulses which sought to raise our politics above the plane of mercenary truck and dicker; none has clung more obstinately to the political machinery whose motive power is derived from the possession of place and the possibility of plunder. The corruption which grew around the Grant Administration from the easy tolerance and blind attachment to friends which characterized its head, elicited neither warning nor protest from Senator Conkling. His conception of party has never been comprehensive enough to give their proper place to the conscience and intelligence which alone make his party vital, and it has fallen far short of a perception of the fact that partisanship is but a means to the patriotic ends of the true statesman.

Of late years there have been too many good reasons to identify the partisan zeal of Senator Conkling with the still narrower range of his personal interests. His conduct during the campaign of 1874 was pretty generally stigmatized as a deliberate betrayal of the Republican cause for the purpose of retaining undisputed control of the Federal patronage of the State. Be that as it may, it certainly compares but poorly with the unflagging zeal which he has exhibited when his own immediate interests were at stake. His lukewarmness in 1876 bore a very suspicious resemblance to the sullenness of disappointed ambition, and all the attempted explanations of his course, when the work of the Electoral Commission was before the Senate, have only served to show how incapable it was of defense. There may or may not have been a close connection between the Democratic nomination of his henchman, Insurance Superintendent Smyth, and his expected vote on the Electoral returns of Louisiana; it may or may not be true, as Mr. Watterson averred in the Spring of 1877, that, "from the day of election last Fall he did little but coquette with the Tilden men," but it stands among the records of the time that in one of the most perilous crises of our history, Roscoe Conkling forgot his duty alike to his party and his country. He may have measured the strength of the silver movement so correctly that he felt it would be futile for him to oppose it by speech or argument, but he owed it to himself, to his party, and his State to withhold from it the encouragement of silence and the aid of his parliamentary tact in smoothing away the obstacles to its success.

Senator Conkling will return to his place after the 4th of March to represent the intelligence, the wealth, and the culture of the foremost State of the Union. It is still in his power to redeem the errors of a career which must either receive a new bent or end ignobly. He cannot go on shirking the new responsibilities of his party and the newly-developed political problems of his time without incurring the contempt of all whose good opinion is worth having. He is in a position where he can, if he will, emancipate himself from the influence of petty cliques, of childish personal resentments, and of the mercenary following which has so often made him appear ridiculous and identified his motives with their own. In all external attributes, he is well-fitted for the rôle of leadership; his mind must have become hopelessly subdued to what it works in if the highest level of statesmanship is forever beyond his reach. The standards by which public men are tried have steadily risen during the last seven years, and, it must be said, that Senator Conkling has not risen with them. We hope and believe that the political morality of the next seven years will show a scale of elevation even greater than it has done since the fall of the Tweed Ring. It remains to be seen whether Mr. Conkling can place himself in advance of this movement, instead of lagging behind it; whether he will emerge from his second term in the United States Senate a mere jaded political hack, or one of the foremost and greatest figures in the public life of his country.

THE REQUIRED LEGISLATION.

Superintendent Smyth has adopted a characteristic method of proving that the Insurance Department ought not to be abolished. As long as his office lasts, the insurance companies are to a certain extent at his mercy. He can worry them in half a dozen different ways. He can vex them with investigations, throw upon them the onus of removing easily-invented doubts, fasten on them his personal or partisan associates, and extort from them fees which in other circumstances would be resisted as excessive. With how much impunity he may do all this, facts elicited during his trial before the Senate sufficiently prove. There is, therefore, something like mockery in his appeal to the companies for testimony in rebuttal of the Governor's accusations against the department. The Governor asserts that to the policy-holders and the public the department does more harm than good, and, so far as life insurance is concerned, the assertion may be easily substantiated. Mr. Smyth, in his own behalf, in effect, says to the companies, "Is not State supervision an admirable thing? Am I not a model officer? Would not my removal and its abolition be a calamity?" Of course, the officers will answer Aye to every inquiry of this sort. They cannot afford to quarrel with Mr. Smyth, and, if necessary, would certify that he is angelic as well as efficient. Allowance must be made for the quandary in which they are placed. It would be cruel to scan too closely their motives, or to judge of their statements in forgetfulness of their relations to the department. But Mr. Smyth makes a mistake if he imagines that the opinions which his circular is intended to elicit will be entitled to any special consideration. He forgets that his jurors are the public, not the officers of companies; and that his department must seek its justification in services rendered to policy-holders, not to the persons who insist that the servants of policy-holders shall be their masters.

While Mr. Smyth exhausts his energies in a struggle to avert official decapitation, it is to be hoped that the Assembly's Insurance Committee will address itself to the simple but important task which awaits its attention. It cannot better prepare itself for useful labor than by dismissing the grand ideas which too often captivate members called upon to initiate legislation. A voluminous Life Insurance bill, covering every conceivable point, is not wanted. And the measures actually required are so evidently just that, though sinister influences will work zealously against them, they would command support from the intelligence of the Legislature and the self-interest of policy-holders. Three brief bills will supply all that is essential: One to exact more explicit statements with regard to the assets and expenditures of life companies; another to secure to policy-holders a stipulated and equitable surrender value for policies which, for any reason, they desire to drop; the third to invest holders of policies in mutual companies with control over their own affairs by abolishing the present proxy system and guarding against a recurrence of the abuses which that system alone makes possible.

As now prepared, a company's statement hides much that should be brought into daylight. The controversy growing out of the proceedings of the Mutual Life shows how imperfectly the condition of a company is stated, and how little is revealed respecting the cost of its business and the nature of many of its disbursements. Thus, no mention is made in the balance-sheet of a so-called "vitality fund" which is said to amount to millions. If it exist under some other head—say, the surplus—the item purporting to convey the amount of the surplus needs correction. If it has no distinct existence, assertions now put forward are untrue. On the other hand, the company in question declares that competitors pay as much in the form of commission as it proposes to pay by way of bonus or rebate, plus commission to agents, but that the extravagance is hidden. Here, then, are two points furnished by this controversy which establish the unsatisfactory nature of the statements as at present prepared. There should be no excuse for the suppression of essential facts in relation to assets, whether as to amount or character, and none for concealment as to commissions, fees, or salaries, or as to other details under the respective heads reported. Solvent, prosperous companies will not shirk the explanation which the law should make imperative; and honest managers will not resist an enactment simply requiring them to do their duty. Opposition suggests doubts as to the integrity of those who offer it, and as to the soundness of companies requiring concealment as a measure of safety.

Equally obvious is the equity of a bill in relation to surrender values. The best companies in Great Britain—one of them the best-managed company in the world—have voluntarily rendered this act of justice to their policy-holders. Every one of their members may at any moment ascertain the sum that will be paid him, or the commuted policy that will be given, in the event of a surrender of the policy he holds. There is no room for favoritism—no danger of injustice. A similar provision must be engrafted upon life insurance in this country before the system can be deemed worthy of unqualified praise. Until this be done, it is idle to point to the magnitude of a company as a test of merit. We desire to be quite sure that what are called profits are not largely wrung from surrendered policies, to whose owners they more properly belong. We want to be certain that a magnificent estimated surplus does not in a great degree represent the harsh and unjust treatment of persons who were once policy-holders, and in whose fate we see the shadow of our own should the abandonment of a policy be forced upon us. The measure required will be resisted by managers to whom surrenders and forfeitures are a convenient fund; but the whole body of policy-holders have a deep concern in the guarantee which wise legislation will enact. It is not necessary to remind a man like Gen. Sharpe that the policy-holders have a controlling claim upon the attention of the Insurance Committee. They have no lobby at their command, and no organization that can make their influence felt, even for their own protection.

The third measure we have suggested will put an end to a flagrant wrong and invest the policy-holders with power to restrain and remove managers who forfeit their confidence. The proxy system as it is cannot be defended. The managers of a company avail themselves of its machinery to procure irrevocable proxies in their own behalf; the process goes on continually, the managers re-electing themselves, auditing their own accounts, approving their own statements, indorsing their own methods. They are as independent of the policy-holders as though they derived their offices and drew their pay from the Sultan of Turkey. So flagrant a wrong should be corrected. And a bill of a single section will do what is wanted. Annul proxies acquired in the manner we have described, and provide that proxies hereafter given shall be for a specific purpose and limited in their duration. No member of the Insurance Committee would submit, in ordinary business affairs, to the usurpation which the proxy system as now worked involves. We ask the committee to apply to the policy-holders in their relations with life insurance companies the principle which every business man acts upon in parallel cases.

SOCIALISM AND SKEPTICISM.

The Pope takes up and prolongs through a voluminous encyclical letter the cry that Socialism, Communism, and Nihilism, which are threatening Europe with political disorder and social anarchy, are the offspring of irreligion, the result of a disregard for the teachings and the authority of the Christian Church. Of course, the religious autocrat of the Vatican regards the ecclesiastical body of which he is the head as the only Christian Church, and the Protestant Reformation as the prolific source of the whole brood of irreligion and iniquity. But those of a very different faith from that implied in unquestioning submission to his authority and implicit obedience to the dictates of the Romish priesthood, are wont to trace Socialism to a weakening of religious belief, to the relaxation of the old restraints, and to the skeptical tendencies of the time. No doubt they have much reason on their side, but, like many others who assume to talk of Socialism, they confound the essentials of its doctrine with the vagaries and the violations of moral principle that try to cover themselves with its mantle. Essentially, Socialism is no more hostile to Christianity than is the theory of paper money, or the doctrine of the balance of trade. It is not in its nature religious or irreligious. It is a matter of economics, and is based on a fallacy as to the best mode of securing for the human race the highest material results from its combined activity. Associated with it are false ideas of the rights of the community over property as distinguished from the rights of individuals; it inculcates absurd notions of equality, founded neither in nature nor in reason; and there are men who in its name assail institutions rightly held sacred. But assaults upon the Church, sneers at the marriage relation and the sanctity of family ties, conspiracies for the subversion of Governments and attempted assassinations of rulers, form no part of the plan and purpose of Socialism, however they may be traced to influences which it sets in motion.

But while devout, peaceable, and even learned men may be, and have been, ardent believers in the theories of Socialism, the doctrine has made sad havoc with the common mind, which has not mastered its principles or understood its aim. Taking the general mass of errors commonly associated under the name of Socialism, and regarding the whole as a something that agitates and threatens society and is to be dealt with as a single entity, there can be no doubt that it has been nourished to its present portentous proportions and power with aliment furnished by the skeptical and materialistic philosophy of which Germany has been the chief nursery. A generation has been growing up under teachings which, in the name of philosophy, have scouted at religion as a delusion. Men of great erudition and unquestionable acuteness have announced the revelation that the soul of man is but an effect of the working of material functions, and that with the destruction of the body it ceases, as the weaving is at an end when the loom is broken up. They have eliminated a spiritual Creator and Supervisor from the universe as a scientific superfluity, and with God and immortality abolished, man falls back upon himself for all the motives that are to guide and influence his conduct. German philosophy sowed the dragon's teeth which have sprung up in a form to startle the conservative powers of the German State and put them to their defense.

Time was when the minds of the poor were soothed with assurances of a great presiding Justice that could do and permit no wrong. A kindly Providence took account of the bitter sweat and burning tears of the wretched and oppressed, and the record was treasured up against a day of recompense. People looked up from the limits of their narrow fate, the hardships of their earthly lot, and dreamed of that after-life when all tears should be wiped from all eyes and the lowly should be exalted. They bore with resignation, grim, but hopeful, their weary life, and endured the oppressor's wrong and the proud man's contumely, comforting themselves with anticipations of a final release when they should enter upon an abiding joy. The hopes and consolations of religion gave a measureless content to those who had, in actual experience, little to make them satisfied. In those times the Church and its teachers exerted an all-controling influence over the minds of the poor and the lowly, to reconcile them to the seeming injustice of their position and make it in some sort a merit and a glory to have little share in the treasures of this world. So much the greater was the promise of reward if the mind accepted, with meekness and a devout trust in an overruling Goodness, the lot which unerring wisdom had prescribed.

All athwart the peace and content of society that came from the teachings of the Christian Church blew the scorching and disquieting blasts of materialistic philosophy. With subtle reasoning and an assumption of the infallible results of scientific knowledge, the new teachers dissipated the dream of immortality, the great and glorious recompense to come, the eternal justice provided by divine statutes that antedated all the kingdoms of this world. The poor toiler, the wretched victim of oppression, all whose lot was bitter, and whose place in the world was one of hardship and privation, looked up with blank despair, and cursed the delusion that had kept them quiet and content. "Heaven is gone, let us take possession of the earth," was the cry that began to be heard. "This life is all, we must make the most of it." "God is no more, we must look out for ourselves." And what had philosophy to offer wherewith to keep them quiet, and restore a tolerable content? Only the dry and remorseless principles of political economy, a revelation of the rigid limitations within which they must rest satisfied, or chafe and beat the barriers, with no result but misery and a hopeless death. No wonder, if they accepted the new faith for the old, that they refused to be satisfied, and were determined to use, with desperate energy, the force that was in them, to better their lot by any means that gave promise of success. They can, doubtless, only make their case worse by dashing themselves against the inevitable, and spending their energies upon the immovable. What they need is a re-enactment in their souls of the laws of God, a restoration of the Divine Dynasty in the universe, and the reassertion over their weak and erring natures of the beneficent influences of a religion that gives hope and consolation in the struggles of their earthly pilgrimage.

AN ARMY GHOST.

Innumerable are the illustrations of the power and intricacy of red tape in the Army of the United States. There was the private, near Fort Leavenworth, whose trowsers were burned up by accident, and whose statement of the case traveled all over the continent before it was laid to rest by a requisition for $6 50. Then there was the soldier's mule, which, being dropped from the Quartermaster's rolls at Fort Yuma, in consequence of having previously dropped dead from fatigue on the adjacent desert, haunted the disbursing and accounting officers of the Army for years afterward, in consequence of an informality in his official obituary. More lately we have had occasion to notice the adventures of a mosquito-bar frame, or, rather, the ghost of a frame, which has wandered up and down the continent, vainly asking some auditing officer to exorcise it. Hugo Anderson, a private in the Twenty-fourth Infantry, at San Antonio, Department of Texas, lost or destroyed one mosquito-bar frame, the property of the United States, the value of which was to be deducted from his monthly pay. On the 11th November, 1878, Capt. X., as we will call him, addressed the Assistant Adjutant-General of the Department of Texas a communication stating the fact of the destruction or loss of said mosquito-bar frame, and asking for a board of survey to assess the money value of the same.

This communication was indorsed by Col. Thomas M. Vincent, Assistant Adjutant-General, &c., as follows: "Respectfully referred to the Chief Q. M. of the Department, to know if there is not some other method of ascertaining the value of a mosquito-bar frame than by a Board of Survey." Brevet Brig.-Gen. Benjamin C. Card, Chief Quartermaster, as aforesaid, read the paper, and indorsed thereon: "Respectfully returned to the Adjutant General, Department of Texas. The mosquito-bar frames on hand at this depot have been here a long time, and there is no record of their cost." It will be observed that the Quartermaster's Department attempted to put upon the Adjutant-General's Department the responsibility for determining the cost to the United States of its mosquito-bar frames, and that the Adjutant-General's Department "wouldn't have it." The Department of Texas, accordingly, shirked the whole question, and the next prominent official of the Army to be vexed by the appearance of this attenuated ghost was Major-Gen. E. D. Townsend, Adjutant-General of the United States, to whom the original document, now swollen by many additions, appeared, with this indorsement: "Nov. 14, 1878. Respectfully forwarded to the Adjutant-General of the Army, with the request that the price of a mosquito-bar frame may be communicated, in order to furnish information to the Board of Survey, in case one is to be convened, there being no data here to cover the case. R. C. C. Capt. Brigadier-General United States Army, commanding." Once more, the uneasy ghost of the mosquito-bar frame was switched off from the Adjutant-General's Department to the Quartermaster-General's Department, as we next find this indorsement: "Washington, Nov. 22. 1878. Respectfully referred to the Quartermaster-General. E. D. Townsend, Adjutant-General." The Adjutant-General would have none of it.

In the Qurtermaster-General's office, however, there were materials for an obituary, not to say a biography. The next indorsement reads: "Respectfully referred to the Adjutant-General of the Army. A reference to invoice 48, abstract E, return of Lieut.-Col. S. B. Holabird, Department Q. M. General, for first quarter of 1874, shows that 3,376 mosquito-bars and 1,790 frames were turned over to him by Capt. A. N. Cherbonnier, Medical Storekeeper, under orders of the Surgeon-General, dated Feb. 16, 1874, for free distribution to different posts. Those now in possession of Capt. X, Twenty-fourth Infantry, are part of the same lot. It is recommended that these papers be referred to the Surgeon-General of the Army for remark. By order of Stewart Van Vliet, Deputy Quartermaster, Brevet Major-General, United States Army. Received back Nov. 30, 1878." The unhappy ghost thus contemptuously treated was sent back to Adjt.-Gen. Townsend, who sent it with a curt indorsement to Surgeon-General Barnes, who referred it back to Adjt.-Gen. Townsend, with the statement that the defunct mosquito-bar frame was one of a lot left over from the late war, and being unsalable, "they were, under orders of the Secretary of War, Feb. 13, 1874, turned over to the Quartermaster's Department for gratuitous distribution."

Thus it appears that the mosquito-bar frame, whose uneasy ghost had traveled so far, had no ratable value. Nevertheless, when the much-indorsed communication of Capt. X. arrived in San Antonio, Texas, an order for a board of survey was issued by Col. Thomas M. Vincent, Assistant Adjutant-General, countersigned by Hugh Brown, Aide-de-camp. The board met Dec. 22, 1878, and, after solemn deliberation, issued a report to the effect that the mosquito-bar frame was of no value, and that, considering all the facts, "the board is of the opinion that the most ready settlement of the question is to authorize Capt. X. to drop the frame from his return, which the board accordingly recommend." Thus, we may hope, the restless shade of a tencent pine frame was laid to rest, no more to wander up and down the face of the earth, like the ghost of a deceased Chinaman whose bones lie in a foreign land. It appears that every piece of property in the United States Army has its record, pedigree, and title. If it is lost, destroyed, or stolen, the ruthless hand that ravished it shakes a chain of evidence which reaches into the inner sanctuary of the War Department at Washington. The mosquito-bar frame, used to boil Private Anderson's camp-kettle, in San Antonio, Texas, avenged itself, but not until its shade had flitted many a weary mile. It is not lost, but dropped from the returns, and the Republic is safe.

The international Fishery Exhibition, to be held at Berlin, in April, 1880, is well worthy of the attention, not only of our fish-culturists, but of manufacturers of nets, fishing implements, boat-builders, and of the numerous firms who prepare fish for food. The remarkable pre-eminence we have gained in practical fish-culture should give us a notable position at this exhibition. There would be, not only great credit to be gained, but substantial profit. To a certain degree our preparations of salmon reach Germany and even Russia, but still the consumption of American fish could be very much increased by a complete display of our canned goods. It is doubtful whether we are to gain much tangible benefit from the European exhibit of fishing-gear and tackle, as to-day we are exporting not only nets, but hooks, to Norway and Sweden; but in the methods of preparing fish for food we have a great deal to learn. From the peculiarities of our climate—fish having to be kept through the Summer—our appliances for refrigerating fish are much more perfect, practical, and economical than those employed abroad. The remarkable exhibit made by the Smithsonian Institution at the Centennial, of plaster casts of fish, we trust will be forwarded to Berlin. Numerous prizes are to be awarded to the exhibitors in the nine classes. One very remarkable class will be that in the history of fishing, in which are included the implements of fishing, original or in reproduction, from the oldest times downward, also models, pictures, seals, and emblems of ancient fishermen's guilds.

Within the past few years steam boilers for heating purposes have taken the place of furnaces, not only in hotels and large office buildings, but in many private residences. The change has been in a number of respects an advantageous one; for not only can a more uniform temperature be maintained by this means of heating than by any of the past devices, but if care is taken to see that there is an escape of steam from the pipes in the various rooms the air can be kept healthfully humid. But this improvement has this drawback that it requires on the part of the householder, or his servants, a greater amount of knowledge and prudence than the furnace, the stove, or the fire-place ever called for. It is possible to explode one of these household boilers by a degree of inattention which would be harmless in a less complicated heating apparatus. One or two accidents of this kind have recently occurred in the West, while in England there were five explosions within one week during the past month, three of them resulting in loss of life. Too often, the management of a steam-boiler in a private house is intrusted to the care of some female servant, who for a dollar a week extra pay accepts the task, although she may have the crudest possible notion of what is expected of her. The master of the house having set the safety-valve, or having had it set for him at a low point, is satisfied that there is no need of further supervision; and if the pressure were to be always below 20 pounds to the square inch, there would be no trouble. But the difficulty is that no one can be certain that this point will not be far exceeded, unless he gives close attention to the matter. There are probably to-day in this City scores of safety-valves gauged at 20 or 25 pounds, which would not "blow off" under a pressure of 100 pounds to the square inch. To be tolerably sure that a safety-valve will do its duty when needed, it should be tested at least as often as twice a week. If this is not done, it is apt to set fast in consequence of rust or the filling of the pipes, and then it is no longer of the least service as a regulator or a means of preventing an explosion.

The English people have long been looked upon as a betting people, and yet they appear to be proud of the fact that Lord Falmouth, who won more money on the turf in 1878 than any other living sportsman, never betted a dollar in his life. There has been a growth and decline of betting in England which has been almost equally rapid, and the Derby may be taken to illustrate our point, which is that the evil is fast dying out on the other side of the water. When Sir John Shelley carried off the "blue ribbon" with Phantom, in 1811, the fact of his having netted $45,000 by backing his horse was quite the talk of the town. Bookmaking, soon after this, sprang into vogue, and, besides the London division, an extensive portion of the ring hailed from the cotton district, and was known as the "Manchester School." The Blands, Gullis, Hills, Crockfords, Swindells, Ridsdales, Barnes, and Worsleys, stood at the top, and at time were those in the Pedley, Harbeaves, Davies, Jackson, Stevenson, and others, who in turn have been succeeded, so to speak, by men of the present day. Davis took the highest place of them all, and is credited with having once made a $500,000 book on the Derby; hence the title he acquired of "the leviathan." The abolition of betting houses and hats throughout the country, dealt the first great blow at the roots of future-event betting, and the continued interference of Parliament has reduced it almost to a minimum. Now, the only places where betting is permitted is on the race course and at Tattersall's. Limited speculation can, therefore, hardly be wondered at. And yet as recently as 1867, Mr. Chaplin, the owner of Hermit, is credited with having won $600,000 in bets alone. Blue Gown's year, too, which followed, was a big betting event, and Sir Joseph Hawley won a sum of money which would have been much larger had he not "hedged out." Baron Rothschild's Fisonius entered home heavily backed in 1871, and then came Ormonde's victory over Pell Mell, who was supported at Tattersalls to win over $500,000, and was beaten by a head only. Comparatively little has been done on subsequent Derbys, or, for that matter, on most other fixed events of late years. Last year the bookmakers were greatly crippled, and they have not yet made known their intentions for the coming season. Besides the decline in betting, there has been a great falling off in the number of starters. The number of horses that ran last year fell short by over 400 of the season of 1868. So far as this is concerned, the real trouble is that England has too much racing; and only the Newmarket, Goodwood, and Doncaster meetings are plentifully supplied with horses.

While in Hong Kong, on his way to Europe, Mr. Chung, Minister to Russia, was the guest of Gov. Pope Hennessy, at his official residence. This is said to be the first occasion of a sojourn by a Chinese official at Government House, Hong Kong. Mr. Pope Hennessy is a remarkable man, and has had a remarkable career. He is an Irish Catholic and a Conservative, a combination which, although not uncommon now, when the Irish Ultramontanes find that they have got all they are likely to get in the shape of the abolition of the State Church, &c., out of the Whigs, was very rare indeed 20 years ago. Mr. Hennessy, while quite a young man, obtained a clerkship (one of inferior grade) in the education department of the Privy Council Office, in London. When he had been there a very few years a vacancy occurred in the representation of Kings County, Ireland, and a breach in the Conservative interest there was healed by a compromise in which it was decided that both parties would agree to elect a Catholic, if he would on certain points vote with the Tory interest. Hennessy had political friends who thought highly of his talents, and resolved to bring him forward, and presently he found himself M. P. for Kings County. He could not retain his clerkship, and his private means were very meagre; however, he managed to get along somehow pecuniarily, and on several occasions—notably in a speech in favor of Poland, which won extraordinary applause—proved himself a very eloquent speaker. But when a dissolution came he lost his seat, and his last case was thus worse than the first. Great sympathy was felt for him by the party, (Lord Beaconsfield, it is said, has shown particular interest in him,) and he was appointed to a Gold Coast Governorship, one of those refuges for the destitute to which needy politicians are perforce relegated. Thence, having the good fortune to survive the deadly climate, he was promoted to something better, and at length found himself Governor of Barbados. While filling that post, a fierce feeling was aroused in the colony anent the pet confederation scheme for the West Indies of Lord Carnarvon. The Barbados aristocracy were vehemently opposed to anything likely to invalidate the autonomy of the island, and regarded Mr. Hennessy with intense antagonism as the apostle of the new move. The blacks, on the other hand, conceived the notion that it would do great things for them, and were as vehement for the Governor as the whites were against him. Much "unpleasantness" ensued, and Gov. Hennessy's conduct became the subject of discussion and inquiry in Parliament, but, while violently assailed by the West Indian interest, he was defended warmly by Lord Carnarvon, who very plainly evinced his opinion regarding him by shortly promoting him to the much more lucrative position of Governor of Hong Kong. The world, literally, is now all before him, and in another 10 years he may, if all goes well, be holding the blue ribbon of British Gubernatorialism at Melbourne.

"CARMEN" AT BOOTH'S THEATRE.

The performance of Bizet's "Carmen" last night by Mr. Strakosch's company was in every sense the event of the season at Booth's Theatre. There was a full house to listen to the artists, and abundant applause, which was fairly earned. The interest of the musical public was naturally excited by Miss Kellogg's appearance in the rôle of Carmen, in which she achieved a pronounced success. Her acting and singing were thoroughly good, and she deserves the warmest praise for a spirited and vivacious performance, in which she gave her best musical efforts. Though she has not recovered from the cold she has had, she sang like an artist throughout the evening, and may claim for her Carmen a place in the first rank of operatic successes this Winter. Mr. Adams as Don José was careful and conscientious in his singing, and only needed a little more spirit to make the part completely satisfactory. Signor Pantaleoni as Escamillo was, next to Miss Kellogg, the most noticeable performer in the cast. In the second act he was particularly good, and well deserved the liberal applause he received. His voice was in tune, and both in quantity and quality was entirely up to the requirements of the music. He acted with taste and spirit, and confirmed the impression made at his first two appearances of being a baritone of exceptional merit. The rest of the artists were fairly good, and Mr. Behrens had his orchestra better in hand than on any previous occasion. The opera was well mounted, and as a whole the performance was a creditable one, worthy of a first place in the record of the musical events of this season.

GENERAL MENTION.

The final performances of "Robinson Crusoe" may be witnessed this afternoon and evening at the Park Theatre.

A fourth American play has been accepted by the Wallack Theatre management, the author being this time Mr. Charles Gaylor.

Miss Ada Cavendish, according to latest accounts, has contracted to appear at the Fifth-Avenue Theatre in February or March.

Mr. McKee Rankin and Miss Kitty Blanchard will play "The Danites" at Booth's Theatre at the close of the Strakosch opera season.

Mr. Joaquin Miller has written a new play called "'49," in which the chief incidents of the Mountain Meadow massacre are set forth.

Mr. John McCullough will appear some time this season in a new play, entitled "Aurelian," written for him by Miss Anna E. Dickinson.

Mr. Joseph Jefferson has at length come to the conclusion, it is said, to try a new part, as Rip Van Winkle is no longer a certain attraction.

The first matinées of "Les Fourchambault," at the Broadway Theatre, "H. M. S. Pinafore," at the Standard Theatre, and "Ours," at Wallack's, will be given to-day.

A feature of the revival of "Dot" at the Park Theatre will be the appearance of Mlle. Sohlke, the well-known danseuse, who is to take the prominent part in the celebrated fairy scene.

THE SENATORIAL STANDARD

HAS MR. CONKLING FULFILLED ITS REQUIREMENTS?

WHAT IS EXPECTED OF NEW-YORK'S REPRESENTATIVE—TWO IMPORTANT OCCASIONS ON WHICH HE HAS SHRUNK FROM THE PERFORMANCE OF HIS DUTY—HIS ACTION IN RELATION TO THE ELECTORAL VOTES AND THE SILVER BILL, &

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

One of the most important duties to devolve on the Legislature at its present session is the choice of a Senator to represent the State in the Senate of the United States during the next six years. The prominent candidate for that responsible position is Mr. Conkling, whose term of service expires on the 3d of March next. The incumbent should be one who instinctively inquires, when a public measure is proposed, how his support or opposition will affect the interests which he is charged to protect and promote, and not how his own standing or advancement may be affected by one or the other. He must meet every question of policy and constitutional right frankly, boldly assuming all the responsibilities of his position, and never failing to give his vote when such questions are to be decided, thus avoiding the impropriety, and sometimes the evil consequences, of leaving his State unrepresented to the extent of his participation in the decision. No standard of qualification lower than this should be accepted for the representative of a sovereign State in the upper branch of the National Legislature.

Has Mr. Conkling come up to this standard?

On two of the most important occasions which have occurred during his service in the Senate he has shrunk from the performance of his duty, depriving his State, the foremost in the Union, of her just influence in the settlement of the questions in dispute, and presenting an example of dereliction in the execution of his trust unworthy of a statesman, and in the highest degree culpable as a member of a representative body.

The first of the occasions referred to was one of the most critical in our history. It involved the choice of the chief magistrate of the Republic and the validity of the election in the States of which it is composed. The integrity of the proceedings in several of the Electoral Colleges was impeached. The one in which the alleged frauds were among the most flagrant was Louisiana. When the vote was taken on the question of the validity of those proceedings Mr. Conkling absented himself, and allowed his colleague to pronounce the judgment of his State on a question involving the highest moral and political considerations. If he believed the charges of fraud well founded, he should have been present and said so fearlessly. If he thought them false, he should have so pronounced them. He did neither. He failed to take part in the decision, deserting, in the heat of the conflict, the post confided to him by his State, and leaving her with only half her legitimate representative force to meet a crisis which, with a single exception, has no parallel in our history. Not long afterward, Mr. Conkling was reported to have said that if the history of the Louisiana frauds were known, it would sink the Administration to the lowest depths of infamy—or words to the same effect. If this were his opinion, how can he justify himself for keeping silence in the Senate? In this respect he is his own most merciless critic. There is no ground for this calumny. The charge of fraud has never been substantiated. It was set up by the Democratic managers to divert public attention from their corrupt bargains for the purchase of Electoral votes. Mr. Conkling, by indorsing it, has done more injury to the Republican Party than all the Democratic journals in the country. And it is not improbable that on this declaration by the leader of the party in New-York, a London journal, edited by a gentleman perfectly familiar with our politics, stated, as an admitted fact, that President Hayes was elected by fraud.

The second occasion was scarcely inferior in importance to the first. It concerned the preservation of the honor, the good faith, and the integrity of the Government—and without these there cannot be much in a community worth preserving. The question presented to him and his associates in Congress was whether the Government should meet its obligations in honest money, and whether the people of the country should carry on their exchanges with a currency without intrinsic value. The delusion known in the vernacular of the day as Greenbackism had taken possession of the National Legislature, and threatened to control it. The combined strength of the Executive and the ablest statesmen in the Senate was needed to expose its fallacies and save the country from disgrace and disaster. The interest of the State of New-York, as the first in population, commerce, and finance, was more deeply involved than that of any other of her sister States. She looked to her representatives in the Senate to put forth all their energies for her protection from an insane and ruinous policy. One of her Senators responded to the prevailing disquietude and anxiety of her people in a speech adapted with wholesomeness to the diseased state of public opinion. It was the more creditable to him, and contrasts more sharply with the inaction of his colleague, as some of the leading men of his party were coquetting with the advocates of inflation. Mr. Conkling was again a non-combatant in the shock of opinion and debate. It is hardly possible that a public man who is not indifferent to questions which bring with them political chances should not have bestowed on this a due consideration. It was, therefore, a matter of general amazement that he should have given "his thoughts no tongue"—that he should have permitted the current of delusion, which seemed to be overspreading the South and the West, and threatening to make a serious inroad upon the North, to flow on without any effort on his part to withstand it. Whether he was without any settled convictions on this vital question, or whether he fancied that, in the divided opinions of the country, his action in either direction might be prejudicial to his personal and political interests, his course was alike unworthy of his position as a public man, and as a representative it was an unjustifiable abandonment of the charge confided to him.

Let us see whether he has more faithfully represented the party to which he owes his present preferment. It is an accepted canon in politics that a man who has been invested with a trust of honor and profit by his party shall, when its ascendency is in peril, enter the field of debate and controversy, and devote his earnest efforts to sustain the cause in which he is embarked. On two occasions Mr. Conkling's activity, if it had been disinterested, would have been worthy of unqualified praise—in the canvass of 1872, when he was a candidate for re-election to the Senate of the United States, and in that of 1878, when he was a candidate, as he is now, for re-election to the same distinguished trust. In both instances his labors were untiring and his enthusiasm unbounded. In town and country, by night and by day, he poured out, with an effusion not to surpassed, those streams of eloquence which were dammed up in the Senate Chamber when great national questions were at stake.

In 1874 the Republican Party was in the field with its candidates for Governor and other State officers, and with the hope of reaping by its success the fruits of an administration of two years more remarkable for its successful efforts to repair the errors of the past than any which had preceded it for a long course of time—an administration which had, by its judicious measures, provided for the payment of the State debt, and placed its finances on a basis of economy and constitutional restriction not to be shaken. At the commencement of the canvass it was given out that Mr. Conkling would take no part in it—an intimation which could hardly fail to be considered by his special adherents the best possible apology on their part for inaction. Certain it is that many of those who [illegible] for their activity conspicuous on this occasion for their inaction. That this indifference to the result of the canvass had a most unfavorable influence upon it is undeniable; and one of its worst consequences was to enable the Democratic Administration which came into power to claim, as it did with unparalleled effrontery, the honor and the credit of all the reforms inaugurated and carried out by its Republican predecessors.

A few days before the close of the canvass, when opinions had been unalterably formed and sides chosen—at that stage when it is notorious that changes are few, and when the only good to be hoped for is to stir up voters to the performance of their duty—he made two or three speeches—one at Brooklyn and another at Buffalo—with what effect the result sufficiently manifests.

On this occasion he complained, as will be seen in 1876, of feeble health. His hygienic condition during the last six years seems to have had this peculiarity, that his health was robust and exuberant when he was a candidate for office, and in a state of lamentable delicacy when the only interest involved was the ascendancy of the Republican Party.

In the canvass of 1876 his inaction was still more strongly marked. He had been a candidate before the National Republican Convention for the Presidency, and failed to obtain the nomination. When a man has submitted his claims for a post of distinction to an accepted tribunal without success, it is the instinct of duty and the dictate of good faith to yield a zealous and efficient support to his successful competitor. He gave none. He made a single speech during the canvass, and without even mentioning the name of the candidate of his party for the Presidency, who had been preferred to himself. He announced at the commencement of his speech that he should discuss the questions before the people in reference to principles, and not to men. "Principles, not men," is an old and hackneyed device. It was pronounced by Edmund Burke to be "cant." It is the infallible resort of political trimmers. It was given out that he was ill and unable to take an active part in the canvass. His speedy recovery when it was over manifested that his illness could not have been so extreme as to prevent him from saying a single word or writing a single line in favor of the Republican candidate for the Presidency, instead of smiting in silence throughout the canvass, like Achilles in his tent.

That Mr. Conkling is a man of ability is conceded; but not of a grade calculated to elevate him above the plane of the average public men of his time, or to give him rank with New-York's acknowledged statesmen. If his career were to terminate to-morrow, we know of no conspicuous act of his, no original conception, no advocacy of any great public measure, pushed on with commanding power, to rescue his name from a speedy oblivion. He has a fluency of speech which rarely fails him, but it is the eloquence of Cleon, and not of Hortensius. His strong point is denunciation and invective; and it matters little whether political friends or adversaries are the objects of his vituperation. In the Rochester Convention, in 1877, the following officious language was addressed to some of the ablest and truest men of the Republican Party because they interfered with his management of the convention: "Who are these men who are cracking the party whip over Republicans and taking charge of the convention; and the dull science of the Republican Party? Some of them are the man-milliners, the dilettanti, the carpet knights of politics; men whose energies heretofore have been devoted to accusing and denouncing men more honest than themselves." * * * "Their stock in trade is a rancid, flatulent, self-righteousness. They are wolves in sheep's clothing, and under their fair words their pursuit is office plunder."

A more inexcusable attack upon political associates is without a precedent in party politics in this State. Fancy Silas Wright or William H. Seward in the days of their leadership assailing with opprobrious epithets, eminent men of the Whig Party because that latter ventured to question their ascendency in the management of their common interests. With a wiser, a more disinterested and a less intemperate guide the Republican Party in this State might have escaped the disasters which have fallen upon it in the last few years.

The following account of Mr. Conkling's attack upon the political friends who opposed him is from a friendly source, and was intended as a complimentary tribute: "There are few men that can reason more logically than Roscoe Conkling * * * or are more felicitious in coining epithets that will sting, and in employing illustrations that will wither; or can throw more contempt into the curl of the lip and the tone of the voice than he. Then, too, he has a wonderful capacity for crushing an opponent by sheer force, and for pursuing him—all the time within parliamentary rules—with sarcasm, ridicule, invective, and denunciation, till he approaches the border-ground of personal abuse."

This is the description of a political gladiator, and not of a dignified, dispassionate, and censoriatory party leader. It is the portraiture of a man intolerant of every one who dares to question his superiority, who opposes his schemes of ambition, or refuses obedience to his behests.

Such are the credentials which Mr. Conkling presents to the Legislature to substantiate his claims to its confidence. If his career is deemed to be such as to entitle him to further rewards, it must also be considered as a fit example for the emulation of young men who are entering the political field and seeking to commend themselves to public favor. If his path is the one in which they are expected to follow, the derelictions of duty to his State and his party and his infirmities of temper are to be indorsed as passports to official preferment, good faith in political associations, a fearless and conscientious execution of trusts, and a gentlemanly courtesy toward competitors for public honors may be thrown aside as unsuited to the moral tone of the times.

I have no knowledge of the composition of the Legislature. I do not know how much of its material has been ground out by the political machinery of which he has for years been the overseer and the beneficiary. But we cannot overlook the fact that during the next six years there are to be two Presidential elections. Other trying conjunctures in our political affairs may arise during the same period—conjunctures demanding fidelity, fearlessness and an oblivion of all personal interests and motives—and in the position to which he aspires, (should he gain it,) or if, when his ambition shall have transported him to higher flights he shall be found derelict, as he has been in the past, those who may contribute to his elevation cannot complain that they were not forewarned.

TROUBLE WITH THE CHEYENNES.

GEN. CROOK DOES NOT APPREHEND AN INDIAN WAR—NO DANGER FROM THE SIOUX.

OMAHA, Neb., Jan. 17.—Gen. Crook to-day said that the shooting of the Cheyennes at Camp Robinson comes under the head of military necessity, giving a reminder that war is not a pleasant thing. He thinks the Indians who escaped will be recaptured, as they are poorly provided with clothing and entirely without horses or food. The number of warriors who escaped, Lieut. Schuyler says, is 19, the remainder of the band, which numbers 40, being women and children. Gen. Crook said he did not think there was any reason to fear an Indian war. He thought this trouble would not affect the Sioux in the least, and he felt no apprehension of any trouble on that score. As for this portion of the Cheyennes not being implicated in the Kansas depredations, Lieut. Schuyler states in his dispatch that Wild Hog admitted to him yesterday that 15 of his band were engaged in those outrages. The confidence said to be reposed by the authorities in old Red Cloud is a myth. The General speaks of him as an old Indian politician in whom he has no confidence. He says Red Cloud has acquired what rank he has among the Sioux by trickery and dishonesty rather than by ability. To Spotted Tail he gives a much better character for integrity and genuine administrative tact and force. He is also popular with the Indians, and endowed generally with those traits of character usually summed up in the expression, "born to command."

Gen. Crook thinks the Cheyennes who were not captured are lurking in the sand-hills north of Camp Robinson, subsisting, probably, upon cattle strayed away from ranches and lost in the labyrinth of hills and cañons said to abound in that region. The number of Cheyennes from the Indian Territory was 300, and, as the number captured is only 150, half the original band is still abroad, though a part has probably gone North, few, doubtless, lurking about as above stated.

CUTTING ICE IN THE HUDSON.

COXSACKIE, N. Y., Jan. 17.—The ice harvest is under full headway here. Ten houses are being filled as rapidly as possible. There is a full supply of hands, nearly 3,000 men being engaged in the work. The ice averages 11 inches in thickness, and is of as good quality as any ever gathered here. Andrews Brothers are housing ice from 13 to 14 inches thick. The wages paid are from $1 25 to $2 a day.

AMERICAN CATTLE EXEMPT.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—In view of the enactment by the British Parliament of a law known as the Contagious Disease act, requiring the slaughter at the port of entry of all live animals imported into the Kingdom, and, in view of the inquiry which that act and its accompanying restrictions were likely to work to the cattle export trade of this country, the [illegible] recently addressed thereto. After the presentation of evidence to show that England need not fear the introduction of contagious diseases through the importation of American cattle, a request was made that this country be exempted from the restrictions imposed by the aforesaid law. On the 14th of the present month a note was received by the State Department from the British Legation at Washington, conveying the gratifying intelligence that by an order in Council, dated Dec. 6, American cattle are declared exempt from the operation of the Contagious Disease act.

AN EX-STEWARD ACQUITTED—AN EX-COUNTY COLLECTOR CHARGED WITH FORGERY—AN EX-FREEHOLDER ON TRIAL FOR CONSPIRACY.

BELVIDERE, N. J., Jan. 17.—When the court opened this morning to continue the trial of Samuel Frome, ex-Steward of the County Poor-house, for conspiracy, another surprise was met with. Attorney-General Stockton arose, and addressing the court, announced that the State had determined not to press the case further against Frome. The Chief-Justice, therefore, briefly stated the testimony as far as received to the jury, and instructed them to pass upon it as the condition of the case required. The jury returned a verdict of not guilty without leaving their seats. There is another indictment against Frome, founded on the same case, for obtaining money under false pretenses; but as the State depends for a conviction upon the same evidence as that given in this trial, it is understood that the Prosecutor will enter a nolle prosequi. These were the only two indictments found against Frome, and he was warmly congratulated by his friends on being able to prove his innocence. Mr. Frome was last Summer the most prominent candidate of the Democracy here for the position of Sheriff, but the two indictments laid him on the shelf, and he was badly beaten in the caucus.

The next case taken up was that against ex-County Collector Teel for forgery. It was charged by the Prosecutor in his opening that Teel received a bridge order from a contractor named John Fine for $3 and paid him that amount for it, but that he changed the order to $33, and charged that sum in his accounts as paid to Fine. The order was produced, and Fine swore that it was originally for $3, that it was in that condition when he gave it to Teel, and that $3 was all he received upon it. The order was most bunglingly altered, the word "three" in writing remaining unchanged, while the figure 3 in the corner had another placed before it in a different shade of ink. The receipt of Fine on the back was drawn by Teel, and is for $33, both in writing and in figures. Fine also stated that he was somewhat in a hurry, and signed the receipt without looking over it carefully. Jacob J. Stone, the then Freeholder, who gave Fine the order, swore that it was for $3 only. C. M. Ludwig, Teller in the Phillipsburg Bank, identified the writing on the back of the order as Teel's, and was almost positive that the added "3" on the face was made by Teel. William R. Beers, an ex-Teller in the same bank, and a so-called expert in hand-writing, testified that the writing of the receipt was Teel's, and also that he spoke with the defendant when the frauds were discovered, and showed him the order in dispute; Teel then admitted that it appeared fraudulent, but could give no reason for its alteration; and that if he did science of the Republican Party? Some of them are the man-milliners, the dilettanti, the carpet knights of politics; men whose energies heretofore have been devoted to accusing and denouncing men more honest than themselves." * * * "Their stock in trade is a rancid, flatulent, self-righteousness. They are wolves in sheep's clothing, and under their fair words their pursuit is office plunder."

A more inexcusable attack upon political associates is without a precedent in party politics in this State. Fancy Silas Wright or William H. Seward in the days of their leadership assailing with opprobrious epithets, eminent men of the Whig Party because that latter ventured to question their ascendency in the management of their common interests. With a wiser, a more disinterested and a less intemperate guide the Republican Party in this State might have escaped the disasters which have fallen upon it in the last few years.

The following account of Mr. Conkling's attack upon the political friends who opposed him is from a friendly source, and was intended as a complimentary tribute: "There are few men that can reason more logically than Roscoe Conkling * * * or are more felicitious in coining epithets that will sting, and in employing illustrations that will wither; or can throw more contempt into the curl of the lip and the tone of the voice than he. Then, too, he has a wonderful capacity for crushing an opponent by sheer force, and for pursuing him—all the time within parliamentary rules—with sarcasm, ridicule, invective, and denunciation, till he approaches the border-ground of personal abuse."

This is the description of a political gladiator, and not of a dignified, dispassionate, and censoriatory party leader. It is the portraiture of a man intolerant of every one who dares to question his superiority, who opposes his schemes of ambition, or refuses obedience to his behests.

Such are the credentials which Mr. Conkling presents to the Legislature to substantiate his claims to its confidence. If his career is deemed to be such as to entitle him to further rewards, it must also be considered as a fit example for the emulation of young men who are entering the political field and seeking to commend themselves to public favor. If his path is the one in which they are expected to follow, the derelictions of duty to his State and his party and his infirmities of temper are to be indorsed as passports to official preferment, good faith in political associations, a fearless and conscientious execution of trusts, and a gentlemanly courtesy toward competitors for public honors may be thrown aside as unsuited to the moral tone of the times.

THE MUTUAL LIFE COMPANY

EXTRACTS FROM THE ADDRESS OF HON. GEORGE H. ANDREWS BEFORE A MEETING OF POLICY-HOLDERS — THE NEW PLAN DECLARED A JUDICIOUS ONE.

Before an adjourned meeting of the policyholders of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, of this City, held at Lyceum Hall, Providence, R. I., on the evening of Jan. 10, Hon. George H. Andrews made an address, from which the appended extracts are taken:

Three years ago its assets were $78,830,000, against $305,057,000 of insurance; now the assets are $88,000,000, against $287,988,000 of insurance. When you consider the fact, gentlemen, that you are all three years older now than you were three years ago—and I take it that no argument is needed to demonstrate such a proposition—these reserves must be accumulating in order to meet the accumulating years of your life and the accumulating frost upon your heads. All these conditions required that the reserves and the assets should increase in greater ratio than the insurance.

I confess, Mr. President, I have been surprised—though since I have been here and heard what has been said, nothing could surprise me now—that it has been whispered in confidence, and I will take occasion to tell it to these reporters who are to spread upon the wings of the press the words uttered here to hundreds of thousands of interested people—I will whisper to them that it has been doubted whether the company is prepared to meet its engagements. It has been intimated to me that there was a question whether the company was prepared with the cash to meet its maturing endowments. Mr. President, conscious of the solvency of this great institution myself, knowing it through and through as to its assets, I was astonished, but not when I came to understand how industriously and how insidiously the poison was diffused. Then I ceased to be astonished. When the house of Cooke failed in Philadelphia it carried dismay with it. When the house of Duncan & Sherman failed that house had stood higher than its fellows only to fall to a greater depth. In another city, almost a competitor with you in enterprise, in progress, in the liberality and the character of its citizens, there were men who stood high as the highest, but who have, like Lucifer, Son of the Morning, fallen into moral depths beyond which no plummet could sound. I cease, therefore, to wonder that you, remote from the immediate sphere of the operations of this Mutual Life Insurance Company, filled as the air was with rumors, should have taken up something of the sentiment of doubt and distrust. Permit me to say on that point: In 1875 this company gave notice that it would discount all the endowment policies which fell due in five years, and now it discounts all endowment policies that will fall due in 10 years. During the last five years the company has so discounted $4,367,182, canceling $5,572,000 of such endowments. During that same term of three years the amount paid for surrendered policies, including a few endowment policies having over five years to run, has been $9,500,000, canceling $31,360,000 of insurance. These extra payments need not have been made when they were if the company had not been so strong. These payments were anticipatory of nearly $37,000,000 of insurance, and reach nearly $14,000,000. The returned payments called dividends amounted to $10,825,323 in the past three years. In every month in the past 20 years the cash receipts of that company have exceeded its maturing obligations, and the company never was, is not, and never will be, under its present administration, compelled to resort to sinister modes, to any device, or to any unwarranted methods in order to meet its accruing obligations.

SOLVENCY OF THE COMPANY.

I was especially gratified the other evening with the apparent fairness and magnanimity of the gentleman [Mr. McCulloh] who addressed you, that he had so much confidence in the company that he practically guaranteed to you the solvency of the Mutual Life Insurance Company. I have not the slightest idea of the money value of the indorsement, but I am delighted with the moral value of the indorsement, which cannot, perhaps, be overrated. Now, there is a solvency which is a solvency to endure, merely to endure, as much as ever to endure. There is a solvency which may mean to be, solvency to suffer. But your solvency, fellow-members of the company, is something more. It is not only a solvency to be, to suffer; it goes far beyond. It means to do, to accomplish, to achieve, to win victories, to gain, to conquer. We mean to go on from strength to strength to loftier success. Here has gradually risen a financial institution to which men can point with pride as the attainment of a result which has been won by no rash experiments, but by patient, painful plodding in the ways of rectitude and right. Now, the question which brings us here to-night is not an entirely new question. If it is a contest, (and I do not like to give it any appearance of hostile forces)—if it is a contest, it is simply lighting up the old controversy with renewed declamation in reference to what was declared to be the suicidal and ruinous course of the management of the Mutual Life Company 10 years ago. And yet what have 10 years brought about? Ten years ago the assets were $31,000,000. Now, under the same management which was then assailed and wrongfully represented, the assets have grown to $88,000,000. Is that a record to be ashamed of? Gentlemen, you have a right to glory in the success of an institution which is wholly yours, and to be proud of the record which has been made. In that same 10 years there have been paid to policy-holders a trifle over $100,000,000.

Write these facts, if you please, in letters of fire on the front of your building, and let it stand there as a monument to the fidelity, to the integrity, to the capacity, of men who have for long years administered the trust you, these policy-holders, have placed in their hands.

ORIGIN OF THE RECENT MEASURES.

The management of the Mutual Life Insurance Company do not deem it their whole business to see that they shall not make a wreck; that is a high quality, a conservative quality. You may seek in vain among men for many possessing that quality. The officers do not proceed with their eyes to the ground to see that they do not slip merely, but they lift their eyes to elevated objects. So the President, lifting his eyes a few days ago—few in the life of a corporation—saw that the sun of returning prosperity was beginning to gild the hill-tops. He saw certain signs of a better era in business, signs that the efforts of the present Administration—preceded as it was by another wise Administration, one of whose representatives, [ex-Secretary Bristow,] I am happy to be told, is here—to so place the finances of the country that the currency of the country should be the currency of the wide world, would be successful.

Your servants and representatives in New-York saw this brighter day coming. What did they do? Prepared themselves to meet all the new duties and all the new responsibilities which that state of things imposed upon them. The officers had been conscious for some time past that there was a decline in business; they were aware that the interests of the policy-holders were not in peril, but they were not enjoying so high a degree of prosperity as they, your servants, felt they should enjoy; they felt that, as your servants, you had a right to demand an account of their stewardship at their hands, and if they sat with their hands in their pockets, that was no way to promote your interests. They had seen that it was useless to waste their strength while the tide was ebbing, and they rested on their oars. How much better off would many men be if they had waited while the tide was at the ebb, and when they saw it returning, had sprung to their oars! And so this management, when they saw that the tide was about to turn, then they sprang to their oars, and determined to take the first impulse of this flood-tide of prosperity upon which your city and your State and this country is just about to enter. Conscious that the business of the company had declined, they determined to check that decline.

In 1876 the surrenders exceeded the new policies by $4,000,000. In 1877 the surrenders exceeded the new policies $7,000,000. In the first half of 1878 the surrenders exceeded the new policies $5,000,000, or at the rate of $10,000,000 a year. Sixteen millions of dollars in two and a half years was the measure of the decline of the company's business. All business had declined in the meantime. The officers and Trustees were not disappointed. They knew that the time would come, sooner or later, when they could seize the advancing tide and favorian sails, and carry forward your interests more surrenders in proportion during this period, because the record of 1873 shows a surrender of 87 in every thousand; in 1874, of 84 in every thousand; in 1876, of 80 in every thousand; in 1877, of 79 in every thousand. In 1878 the same ratio is preserved as in 1877—of 79 in every thousand. Now, examination shows that this decline was because the number of applicants for insurance failed to make good and replace the number of retirants. That is, there was a deficiency in the new business. Those who left were presumably the best risks, and reduced the average expectation of life of the insured, or, in other words, diminished the average vitality of the members. When the company talks about this decline in vitality, it does not mean the failure of the corporate vitality so far as capacity to meet its obligations is involved; but it means that your individual and my individual vitality are concerned, and that when these retirants went out the average vitality was reduced. This state of things greatly reduces the profit arising from the failure of the insured to die agreeably to the tabular and accepted expectation of mortality; that is to say, because men did not die according to the tables of mortality. Now, there is an established average, and when men fail to make good that average, there is a resulting profit to the company. This profit has for years exceeded $500,000, and this sum is, year after year, distributed to you under the name of dividends and profits arising out of the actual over the tabular mortality. That is to say, that if, when the table required that 10 men should die, only 8 died, then there is a resulting profit to the company, which based its calculations upon the death of 10.

THE DUTY OF THE HOUR.

And now what was the duty of the Mutual Life Insurance officers when they had ascertained the situation? Was it their duty to sit still, to drift, to fold their arms and sleep; or boldly face, in your interests, all the obloquy that the most envenomed hostility could arouse? Never violating their obligations, faithful and true, the officers pursued their way. Calling upon agents for explanations, they were met by a demand for increased commissions, to enable them to carry on business in the face of such competition as they [the agents] had to contend with. They reported one company as offering 50 per cent., against 30 per cent. by the Mutual. Another company's agent offered 40 per cent. of the premium the first year, the agent finding his recompense in a large salary. The Mutual gives no agent salary or traveling expenses. Another company took off 30 per cent. of its premium in the form of a note, the agent assuring the insured that the fulfillment of the obligation given would never be called for. Another made a contract with its agent, and gave him the whole of the first premium. In Baltimore an agent issued a policy of $5,000 at a discount of 65 per cent., and then offered to toss up a copper whether the insured should take $5,000 more for 65 per cent. if the agent won, and for nothing if the insured won. The agent tossed his copper and lost, and the insured obtained his $5,000 insurance free for one year. Enormous commissions, in addition to a large salary, enabled the agent to divide commissions with the insured. I have heard of a person who was offered 60 per cent. off the first year, 40 per cent. the second year, 30 per cent. the third, and 25 per cent. the fourth year.

When all these facts had been clearly ascertained, the matter was referred to the Standing Committee on Insurance, and to another standing committee called the Standing Committee on Agencies, and by these two committees, acting separately, the recommendations of the officers were unanimously adopted, reported at the next meeting of the Trustees, and unanimously approved. There that action stands, gentlemen, and there it will stand—just, equitable, wise, and expedient.

Now, it has been said that the Trustees did not know what they were about. Perhaps they did not. It has been said that they did not approve that action. Perhaps they did not; but I happen to know that they did, and that at the very last meeting of the board, 29 out of 35 members being present, the whole matter was laid succinctly before this large meeting of the board, which was an ordinary monthly meeting, and it was particularly desired that if any Trustee had any doubts about the wisdom of this thing, or about its detail, and desired information, he should make his doubts known. Several gentlemen expressed themselves entirely satisfied, and the subject was dismissed by the board without any vote being taken, (the action having been approved at a former meeting,) because there was nothing tangible before the board. It was calmly discussed and laid aside, so that whenever attention should be formally and officially called to it, it might be considered. So much for the history of that.

WHAT WAS THIS ACTION?

To meet boldly, in your interests, this competition, and to maintain, always in your interest, the average vitality of the members of the company. To secure to you, gentlemen, the advantages and profits resulting from the infusing of new blood, in the form of new lives, among the members. Will you welcome this reinforcement? What interest has any Trustee more than you have whether the business of the company is thriving or whether it is dwindling? There is but a common interest.

OBJECTIONS CONSIDERED.

There has been a frightful beating of drums and blowing of horns against the course of the company, very much as the Chinese used to conduct their warfare. Letters and circulars have been scanned to prove some verbal contradiction. The word rebate has been dwelt upon. Well, this word has various meanings. The same thing may or may not be a rebate. The primary meaning of the word is "to beat to obtuseness," "to deprive of keenness, to blunt." Now I am sure you would be very sorry to enforce one kind of rebate. You do not want to beat your officers to obtuseness, even if it were necessary to beat them to arouse them to activity and into the exercise of acuteness. Another definition of rebate is to deduct from, to make a discount. And still another meaning applies to mechanical operations. I shall not dally with words. It is an old device to seek to entangle me in his words.

INJUSTICE TO THOSE WHO WITHDRAW.

A gentleman has said to me: I have got the secret of this thing. The Mutual Life is a first-rate company to stay in, but a very bad one to leave. The objectors have made their eyes a fountain of tears in behalf of those who withdraw from the company, and it is alleged that the company has promised an equitable surrender. Grant it. But what will be equitable is another question. What may be equitable at one time and in one condition may not be so at another time and in other conditions. Law is absolute—inexorable. Equity speaks gentler things, is a relative term, and has relation to all the conditions, circumstances, and surroundings of the hour when the act of equity is claimed or done. If a man withdraws his deposits from a savings bank on the 31st day of December, equity would appear to demand that he should receive five months' and 30 days' interest. He has had money lying there and working for him while he slept, and your rapacious managers, it may be said, rob the poor man out of five months' and 30 days' interest. Is it equitable because he draws it out at 3 o'clock the day before, instead of 10 o'clock the next morning, that he should lose that amount simply because of the inexorable law which pounces upon his interest? You confiscate his earnings, you rob him of his property; and yet you stand up and say, Why does not the Mutual Life Insurance Company do equity to those who, from necessity or choice, withdraw? He is entitled to this interest by every law of right, and he does not get it. He forfeits all his interest, and the equitable regard for the rights of all denies him that interest. And so an equitable regard for your rights denies to the retirant a larger sum than he is allowed. Circumstances must control the equity, which equity is due to those that remain as well as those who go. You have your rights in that equity as well as the retirant. He has no legal claim. It is curious logic that complains in one breath that the company is giving away money of the policy-holders to those who have no legal claim, and in the same breath complains that more money is not given to others who have no legal claim. Is not that logic a rare jewel of consistency? Is not that a wonderful exhibition of condemnation if you do, and condemnation if you don't?

THE QUESTION OF LOSS.

Your credulity has been largely taxed when you were asked to believe that same men would insure at life-rates under the new plan, and then withdraw to your detriment and loss. This would resemble the action of a man who sought to break a bank by destroying its bills. Let us see about this alleged loss. A man at 30 who insures his life under a term-policy for one year, pays, according to the tables, $11 80 for $1,000 insurance. Under the new plan, if he insured for life, he would pay for one year, if you deducted the 30 per cent., $15 89 for the first year, and if he then withdrew, the company would be a winner of just $4 09 by the difference in rates. Carrying the calculation to two years, under both plans, would show results still more favorable for the company. Close the doors, then, to those nefarious persons who would ruin the company by paying it more for a thing than it is worth, and more than they can get the same thing for elsewhere!

Then there is expressed the fear that unsound lives will be taken; that suddenly the officers of this company are going to turn their backs on all their past record, and go recklessly into unsafe business by taking unsound lives. Now, I beg to assure you that there were never more rigorous examinations made in relation to physical, mental, and moral conditions. Agents complain that so many applicants cannot pass the ordeal of examination. Applications representing $161,000 of insurance have been rejected at one agency. Rejection, rejection, and again rejection is written all over the walls when the assertion is involved in peril. Two members of the [illegible]

METHODS OF DEMOCRATIC SUCCESS.

HOW THEY CARRIED THEIR TICKET IN LOUISIANA—A COLORED POLITICIAN'S ACCOUNT OF TENSAS TROUBLES.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 17.—At the session of the Teller committee to-day Abram Thomas, (colored,) of Bass' plantation, Tensas Parish, testified that during the late election he met a body of armed whites, who chased him; that night the same men came and took Charles Bethel, a colored man, out of his house, shot him, and cut his throat. The witness did not know the ruffians; he was frightened away, and is now working on the river.

J. Ross Stewart, a prominent colored politician of Tensas, and member of the Legislature, testified that threats of violence prevented the Republicans from nominating a ticket; at the Democratic Convention Col. Reeves made a speech, saying he would make no threats, but the white men were determined to carry their ticket, and all opposition would be quietly removed; the ticket was to be carried if they had to go through fire; he made a motion as if firing a gun; the next day a committee of three came to the witness' house and told Bryant Neely and himself that any opposition on their part would be looked upon as a declaration of war. In regard to the establishment of a color line by negroes, the witness explained that he got friends to report him for the office of Sheriff; they signed a paper to that effect, but instead of putting his name on the paper, they simply wrote, "A colored man;" this was the only fact upon which was based the report that he persuaded negroes to promise to vote for none but colored men; it was on that report that the Fairs announced that Stewart and Fairfax had drawn the color line; on the contrary, said the witness, "we nominated a ticket composed of white and colored people; afterward it got so hot that we had to take the negro names off of the ticket, and nominated a full white ticket; this was the Douglass and Bland ticket; A. B. Burchart told me, prior to the attack on Fairfax, that Peck and Register had agreed to together to regulate the parish; the intention of Peck was to take all the negroes to Catahoula and keep us until after the election; nothing was to be done to us; we were to be fed high, and returned safe after the election was over; I asked the protection of Judge Cordell; he told me he was unsafe in the parish himself; I believed him; two days after ward, and two days prior to the election, I overheard Judge Cordell say that the white men had only to go around with shot-guns on their shoulders, and all ordinary negroes would be sufficiently frightened; such men as Stewart, however, would have to be killed; I got warnings; my wife heard that on the night before the election I was to be hanged; I at once left the house and fled over the levee; I heard my dog barking, and looking over the levee, I saw the Sheriff and 25 men at my door; my wife says they asked for me; I went over into Mississippi." The witness gave the names of 15 negroes alleged to have been murdered.
